47192. (Chairman.) From your statement I gather you have had considerable experience of the work amongst the wage earning classes, independent of your knowledge of them as a medical officer?—Yes.

47193. You are at present a consulting physician to the Poor Law infirmary?—I am.

47194. Are you also a guardian?—Not now.

47195. You were recently a guardian?—Yes, for five years, up to a year and a half ago.

47196. The purport of your statement is that you are not very well satisfied with the existing system of medical relief that prevails in Leicester; you think it tends to pauperism?—Yes, it has that effect, I think, as explained in my statement.

47198. Your contention is that a large number of persons belong to the provident dispensary who can afford to pay a much higher fee than they do?—That is so.

Low quality of medical assistance at Leicester, and causes.

Proposed scheme of medical assistance to the poor.

Question of payment by guardians of provident dispensary fees for the indigent.

Abuse of provident dispensaries and voluntary hospitals by the affluent.

Lack of accommodation in Leicester voluntary infirmary.

Deterrence of medical relief and effect thereon of separating infirmary from workhouse.

Leicester convalescent home and subscription of working classes thereto.

Proposed transfer of medical relief to the sanitary authority.

Question of advantage of whole-time district medical officers.

47199. You think that the quality of the medical relief in Leicester is low, because the medical men connected with the out-relief of the Poor Law and also with the work of the provident dispensary have not sufficient time to give to the individual cases?—That is my opinion.

47200. Your suggestion in Paragraph 17 is that medical relief should be given free by the Poor Law medical officer, and dispensaries should be restricted to those of a certain income, and that then the hospitals should be fed by letters of recommendation from the doctors who attend upon those two classes?—Yes, I think that would be a distinct improvement.

47201. Those who did not belong to a provident medical institution, but who were unable to pay for medical relief would have their relief paid for by the guardians?—That is so; at the same time the fees of the dispensaries are so very low that most people can afford them.

47202. Have you discussed that idea at all with other medical men in Leicester?—Yes, there is a general feeling among medical men who attend the poor, that they are imposed upon by people who are really able to pay better fees, and there is a general feeling that the out-patient department of the general infirmary ought to be vitally altered; patients have to wait there from two to six hours to be attended.

47203. That is on account of the number?—Because of the smallness of the staff, and the large number of patients attending.

47204. (Mrs. Webb.) Might I ask about the out-patients department, is it not rather doubtful from the point of view of infection, having so many people together who are prima facie ill?—Possibly it might be, but one or two small-pox patients have attended there and there has been no result.

47205. It does not sound very wise?—No, it does not.

47206. (Chairman.) Is there any difficulty about getting a patient into the general infirmary?—Yes, there is very often a difficulty, mainly on the surgical side; as a matter of fact there are 50 or more people waiting for beds at the present time.

47207. I suppose these people will not go to the Poor Law infirmary?—No, they are not the class.

47208. Should you say that the fact of medical relief being associated with the Poor Law is a deterrent to people making use of it?—I believe that was so more in the past, but I think it is less at the present time on account of the separation of the Poor Law infirmary from the workhouse.

47209. Should you say now, in the class just above the class that feeds pauperism, amongst the respectable poor, there is a reluctance to have recourse to medical relief?—Yes, speaking generally.

47210. Under your system there would still be the difficulty of providing proper accommodation for the in-patients, unless the general infirmary was enlarged?—Yes, it is in process of enlargement.

47211. In Leicester I think there is a convalescent home, is there not?—Yes, the last two or three years.

47212. And the working classes take a great interest in it?—Yes, they subscribe largely to it.

47213. You have had a very varied experience; you think that medical relief might be associated with the sanitary work?—Yes, the Poor Law medical relief. I think it would be an improvement on the whole.

47214. Would you take the infirmary too?—No, I speak of the Poor Law alone (including the Poor Law infirmary).

47215. That is the out-relief, domiciliary relief?—The medical out-relief.

47216. Would you have medical officers with salaries who should give their whole time to the out-relief work?—I do not know, it is an arguable question. I think the work is fairly well done at present, considering the rate of pay. The work should be better paid. They are over-worked, particularly when there is much illness.

47217. You have no very strong opinion one way or the other?—No, I have not. I do not think that it would make much difference on the whole.

47218. As regards Poor Law administration generally, Need of you would like to increase the difference of treatment between various classes whom the Poor Law relieves? With regard to the respectable and provident paupers, you would either give them an old age pension or you would put them in a separate building, and on the other hand, as regards the loafers or the wastrels, you would make their condition worse than that of people outside?—I would.

47219. You think that there is a good deal of room for this further classification or differentiation in Poor Law administration?—Yes, I think there is.

47220. Your view rather is that of recent years, owing to the changes in the process of manufacture, quickness counts a great deal?—Yes, that accounts for young people being employed.

47221. Should you say that the tendency to employ more and more youthful labour is on the increase?—I think that has been the tendency for the last ten or twelve years in Leicester, in fact, ever since the introduction of machinery.

47222. That is one of the reasons which has contributed to the heavy increase of rates in Leicester of recent years?—Yes, I think that is one of the reasons.

47223. You notice rather an increased reluctance on the part of the family to support the relatives?—Distinctly.

47224. You think the labour test, or so-called test, that was employed was not adequate?—There was no proper portion of work set to each individual.

47225. And not sufficient supervision?—I do not think that I should like to say that, but at the same time there was no definite amount of work given to each individual, that is to say, they were put on the land and expected to do as much as they could.

47226. There was no particular inducement to do as much as they could, or punishment if they failed?—No.

47227. Looking at it from a local point of view you are not very sanguine about the future administration of our Poor Law?—Not as it is worked at present.

47228. You think it is a bad plan that the guardians should be on the committees which administer relief to their own particular districts?—Yes, I am strongly of that opinion.

47229. I assume it is very difficult for anybody to become a Poor Law guardian, who does not stand on some sort of party ticket?—Yes, it is extremely difficult.

47231. For various causes the knowledge and experience of the guardians as regards their duties, is not increasing?—I do not think so.

47232. You have had some experience of the work, and you think that the duty of the Poor Law guardians is a very difficult duty?—It is; they are called upon to give some very difficult decisions which require a lot of thought.

47233. Thought and time?—Yes, thought and time.

47234. It has been suggested to us that the Poor Law functions of Leicester should be transferred to the town council. What do you think of that proposal?—It would require a separate committee, of course. I think the difficulty in transferring it would be the enormous amount of work which has to be done at present, I think, speaking generally, it practically takes two days of the week for a guardian to do his work.

47235. Would you say from your experience that the work of the guardians, the enquiring into cases, is not germane to anything that is done by the town council?—I do not think it is.

47236. It wants rather a special knowledge and special qualifications?—I think so.

47237. So you would not be in favour of that?—I should not mind it being co-ordinated, but it would Increased juvenile employment and causes thereof.

Decreased filial responsibility.

Failure of the labour test at Leicester.

Objection to existing Poor Law system.

Evils of guardian administration of relief to constituents.

Political influence of Poor Law elections.

Decreasing status of guardian.

Question of transferring Poor Law to sanitary authority.

distinctly require a large committee working for that purpose alone.

47238. We have had it from other witnesses that there is a reluctance amongst well-to-do persons to stand as Poor Law guardians; that they are subjected to some unpleasant criticism. Have you any knowledge of that?—Yes, that is perfectly natural. In the first instance there are a great many people who would not care to stand politically and associate themselves with any political party; again, immediately a candidate comes out, the various societies, the Anti-Vaccination Society and so on, strive to get opinions from the candidate and that kind of thing, and then, of course, when they are selected they are subject to very considerable criticism. They spend a lot of time and get no thanks.

47239. They are criticised for discharging their duties?—Yes.

47240. And they are denounced even by name?—Yes, that occasionally happens.

47241. Have you any suggestion to make which would tend to remedy or improve that state of things?—Yes, as regards actual work I have suggested a superintendent relieving officer and a "cross visitor."

47242. You would also like the finance committee to have a greater power of checking?—Yes, I think so; that would be very desirable, if it could be worked on the same lines as the town council finance committee.

47243. You were a member of the Leicester Board of Guardians?—Yes.

47244. They have rules, have they not, in regard to the granting of out-relief?—I do not know that there are any special rules regulating the finance committee; they simply pass the accounts, that seems to be the chief thing. I do not think they have any power of controlling the various committees, as far as I know.

47245. Do you think surcharge is much of a check, as at present administered?—I do not think guardians like to hear the word.

47246. In your experience can you recollect anyone who has been made to pay?—It was generally assumed that the guardians were very frightened over that anti-vaccination agitation.

47248. Would you give him a right of appeal to some supervising body away from his committee?—I think that would be advisable.

47249. That is not the practice in Leicester, is it?—I do not think so.

47250. In your judgment the tramp wards are quite useless at present?—Quite useless, there is no issue out of it. It does not improve them in any way. It is simply a thing that goes on, there is no reformation.

47251. With regard to (c) in your suggested reforms, "Each applicant should sign a declaration as to means, etc, and be prosecuted if the statements are found to be false"; is that each applicant for Poor Law relief?—Yes, that would be part of the case-paper system.

47252. That is pushing the case-paper system a step further?—That is so.

47253. You would hardly be able to enforce a penalty on a person who made a mis-statement of that kind?—I would allow the committee to determine whether the mistake was a grievous one or not, whether it was deliberate.

47254. Your punishment would be the refusal of relief?—In some way; I think it would be a good reason for refusing relief.

47255. (Mr. Loch.) You refer to a consumptive dispensary; Do you not think that could be started somehow in connection with the general infirmary or a municipal dispensary, rather than making it a dispensary of the sanitary authority?—No, I do not think that would work so well.

47256. Is not the whole question rather in its initial stage, so that more experience is wanted with regard to it?—We are working more or less blindly at the present time; but it would be well to co-ordinate the work more.

47257. I mean with regard to the particular proposal of the consumptive dispensary?—It is a practical proposal, and it appeals to me as such.

47258. Certainly, I agree; but you refer to France. Voluntary there there are volunteers attached, as you know, no doubt, who look after the cases. Have you any such provision as that in connection with the sanitary authority now?—No, we have voluntary notification and health visitors, that is all.

47259. The health visitors would take up the dispensary work; is that your scheme?—No, they would visit the consumptives with a view of giving instructions and so on.

47260. Would you associate that with any other work of the same kind. Do you find, for instance, that cases come to you from various quarters now who are consumptives?—Do you refer to the Poor Law infirmary?

47262. Would you have the sanitary authority providing them with the food they want?—No, I should not go as far as that, but I think they might assist by providing a place to receive them.

47263. I was thinking of the matter as a whole. It seems to me that this proposal which is no doubt admirable in many ways, would divide the work up into two parts, the care of the case as a case, and the cure or medical attention of the case, one being in the hands of the sanitary authority, and the other, I do not know where. Who would do the other part?—The sanitary authority would practically control the whole arrangement.

47264. Who would pay for the food and so on, which was wanted?—In that case, if a sanatorium were provided in the country, no doubt it would fall on the corporation.

47265. But if it were a dispensary?—In the public interest I think the municipal council ought to provide that expense.

47266. Does it do that now, in any other sort of feature?—The council provides a milk depot for babies. They make a charge for the milk.

47267. Is your proposal that the sanitary work and the Poor Law guardians' work should both be undertaken by the municipal council?—Yes, I think it would be preferable to transfer the medical relief department to the sanitary committee.

47268. You would make these two things departments under the council?—Yes.

47269. So this proposal of yours really goes very much further; it suggests the transference of the whole of the medical relief to the council?—Yes; I think it would be better worked as a whole.

47270. What is the basis of that suggestion? Is it your belief that Poor Law medical relief does not reach the people quickly?—No, it is not that so much. The council on the whole is, I think, more liberal in its ideas. I do not look upon the guardians as being at all liberal in their ideas as regards the medical relief to the poor outside. The council often takes a broader view of matters of that kind. There is also the co-ordination aspect.

47271. Is it the inquiry that makes the difference? Do the Poor Law people make too much inquiry, in your opinion?—No, I do not think that is so in our case.

Dr. J. Dodd. 47272. Then where would the liberality come in ?—In the provision of facilities.

25 Mar. 1907. 47273. What do you consider facilities ?—Dispensaries, sanatoriums, and so on.

47274. Do you mean that the council should become the centre for instituting new establishments ?—Yes, that is my idea, principally as regards consumption.

47275. It is not because the Poor Law medical relief is badly done that you are saying this ?—No. I think, on the whole, it is not badly done, but it is underpaid, and so far as it is underpaid, it is not well done.

Need of provision by the sanitary authority against phthisis.

47276. That would be altered by a change in the arrangements, would it not ?—It could be, but, at the same time, seeing that consumption is a very fatal disease, I think the medical officer of health could deal with it better if it were placed under his charge by some such arrangement as I suggest.

47277. Would you push your view very much further than that when you say that all medical Poor Law relief should go over to the council—at least that is what I understood you to say ?—That is so. At the same time, I look upon consumption as being the most pressing matter, from the fatally and co-ordination point of view.

Details and advantages of proposal to hand over medical relief to the sanitary authority.

47278. As I understand, you would have the voluntary hospital brought under the municipal council ?—No.

47279. I understood you to include in the medical Poor Law relief the infirmary ?—It would include the Poor Law infirmary, but not the general infirmary.

47280. Have you thought out at all what your staff would be ? Would you have two committees of the municipality each under a separate head, but co-operating, or would you put yourself as the officer at the head of all ?—I think the medical officer of health ought to be at the head of all as chief adviser and co-ordinator, the Poor Law infirmary, consumptive dispensary, etc., having their own medical control and committees.

47281. With subordinate committees ?—Yes.

47282. Then do you propose to transfer the system of investigation as to cases, I mean the Poor Law system of investigation ?—So far as consumption is concerned, certainly.

47283. But so far as medical relief generally is concerned ?—That would be a matter of detail. Those cases are pretty well worked as at present.

47284. You are content with it as at present ?—Yes, with the investigation as to medical relief.

47285. Would you say what you would distinctly gain, if you are content with it as at present ?—I mean that the system of attendance by the district Poor Law officers would remain practically the same as at present under my scheme.

47286. Then what would you gain by the change ?—We should gain co-ordination, which, I think, would be a great gain.

47287. That is so, but you cannot get co-ordination unless you have them both under the same chief ?—I think not. That is my idea: co-ordination through and by the medical officer of health.

47288. Would you not still have to get co-ordination in the same way as the voluntary hospitals, because, after all, they would continue to deal with a great many cases ?—I do not think it has any necessary connection so far as Leicester is concerned.

Need of restricting out-patients work of voluntary hospitals.

47289. Are not many Poor Law cases, or cases of that type, receiving outdoor relief at the hospitals ?—They may, but there is no necessity for them to do so, except perhaps some special cases.

47290. Still they are duplicating the work, are they not ?—In my opinion, the general hospitals are doing work that they ought not to do, and that there is no necessity for them to do.

47291. That is what I am coming to. Logically, you are driven to that, are you not, that is to say, you must make a change as regards the general hospitals too ?—Yes, they ought to make a change; they ought to re-organise.

47292. And you would suggest that ?—Simply by cutting off practically all the external department, except patients as recommended by medical men.

47293. That would be part of your scheme, really, would it ?—Yes, but I should prefer to see hospital boards reform the out-patient department themselves, so as to retain the voluntary principle intact.

47294. Would you ask for payment in cases admitted to either the reformed Poor Law hospital or the voluntary hospitals ?—As it is at present, the relatives who are legally liable are asked to contribute in the case of the Poor Law infirmary, but there is no contribution in the case of the general infirmary.

Question of payment by Poor Law or voluntary hospital patient according to ability.

47295. Would you look forward to the persons who are sent by the doctors paying, to a certain extent, for their maintenance in the hospitals ?—In the general infirmary ?—No, not at present.

47296. Do you think that ultimately it would come to that ?—I do think that it would be advisable. In the case of our general infirmary the working class contribute, I think, about 50 per cent of the expenses, and, therefore, they look on it as a right, more or less.

Contributions of working class to voluntary hospital at Leicester and reasons thereof.

47297. That is, all those who contribute ?—Yes.

47298. But take those who do not contribute, do they look on it equally as a right ?—They accept it, at any rate.

47299. Does your provident dispensary show any sign of growing ?—The provident dispensary has increased immensely of late years. I think about twenty years ago the numbers were something like 30,000; they are about 50,000 now.

Increasing membership of Leicester Provident Dispensary.

47300. Do you find that the medical men of the town are in favour of the provident dispensary system ?—It is a matter of volens volens.

Attitude of medical men to provident dispensary system.

47301. It is so strong ?—Yes.

47302. Do you think that, if they made your proposed change with regard to the municipality doing the work of relief on a liberal scale, that would in any way affect the provident dispensary movement ?—No, I do not think it would in any way.

Effect of proposed change on provident dispensary movement of transferring medical relief to the sanitary authority.

47303. Do the patients from the provident dispensary go to the voluntary hospitals ?—The dispensary patients go frequently if dissatisfied with the dispensary treatment or on advice from their doctor.

47304. Do the dispensary doctors attend at the voluntary hospital ?—No, they do not attend there at all.

Lack of operation between provident dispensary and voluntary hospitals.

47305. There is no link then between the provident dispensary and the voluntary hospital ?—There is absolutely no link; that is a deficiency.

47306. (Mr. Gardiner.) About the workmen's subscriptions to the general infirmary, is it a voluntary contribution, or is it a compulsory contribution deducted from the wages ?—It is deducted from the wages, as the results of persuasion.

Compulsory deduction from workmen's wages for contribution to voluntary hospitals.

47307. A penny a week ?—I am not quite certain, but it is something about that.

47308. A penny a week per £, is it not ?—Something of that kind; I know it is a fixed sum.

47309. Roughly speaking, what is the rateable value of the ordinary working-class houses in Leicester; would it be £13 a year ?—You see they do not pay the rates, there is a compounding system.

Compounding "rates" at Leicester.

47310. Are the houses mostly rated at about £13 a year ?—I could not say offhand, because I have not gone into the question.

47311. Do the guardians provide the drugs for the outdoor medical relief ?—No, they do not.

Provision of drugs for outdoor medical relief at Leicester.

47312. Then the outdoor medical officer has to find them ?—He finds his own drugs. It is a bad system.

47313. When you were on the board, could you not get them to alter it ?—I never took the question up, as a matter of fact; there are so many things to be done.

47314. You were on the board of guardians, were you not, until you became visiting medical officer ?—Yes.

47315. You resigned your seat on the board to take up that position ?—Yes.

47316. In paragraph 21 you refer to medical officers of health; practically the Poor Law medical officers have security of tenure, have they not ?—Yes, but I think there is a great deficiency in that respect as regards medical officers of health.

Need of security of tenure for medical officers of health.

47317. (Dr. Downes.) Have you served on the town council ?—No, I have never been on the town council.

47318. Are you on the general infirmary staff at Leicester?—No, I have never been connected with it.

47319. In paragraph 27 there is a sentence I do not quite understand. You say, "I am a believer in the old dictum that this class should be at least 'worse off than the worst-paid class of workers who support themselves.'" The tendency is now in the other direction. This applies to the house and not the infirmary." Do you mean to say that this tendency applies to the house, or that this opinion applies?—That ought to be to the Poor Law infirmary.

47321. It does not mean that the treatment in the Infirmary is tending to be worse for the people there than the condition of the worst-paid class of workers outside?—No. What I mean is that I should treat them more liberally in the Infirmary than I should in the workhouse.

47322. That is to say, your opinion applies to the house?—Yes.

47323. (Miss Hill.) Do you consider that the provident dispensary is a pauperising agency?—Yes, I do, inasmuch as it enables a certain class of people to get ordinary attendance at a rate below the rate they ought to pay, in my opinion.

47324. You think the payments to the doctors are too low?—I am quite sure of it.

47325. Has any attempt been made to raise them?—Yes. We did make a very determined effort some years ago, but we were defeated by the action of two or three of the staff. There was, however, a slight improvement as a result.

47326. They are paid so much a year for each member, are they not?—Yes, 2s. per year per member in the provident dispensary.

47327. (Professor Smart.) Have you any idea what the proportion of publicans to other members is on the board of guardians in Leicester?—I cannot be quite accurate without reference to the names, but I think we have two or three publicans (retired.)

47328. Out of how many?—Forty-eight.

47329. Can you tell me what is their particular interest in being on boards of guardians?—It depends on the person who wishes to become a member. Some have the ambition to see their names in the paper, some have ambition to do social work, some have got spare time. I think motives are very various.

47330. But that is not what I mean by an interest; at any rate it is not a liquor interest, and they are not doing any good to their own trade by that?—No; I do not think it touches the liquor trade at all, as far as I know.

47331. You do not think it does?—No.

47332. (Mr. Benthams.) If the Poor Law infirmaries were transferred to the sanitary authority, how would you deal with applications for relief?—That would be a matter of detail. I think it could be arranged.

47333. It is rather an important detail, is it not?—Just so. There are difficulties every way.

47334. Suppose a person made application to the relieving officer under the Poor Law, he might be sent to the workhouse, and immediately on arrival it might be found that he was suffering from some disease; would it be necessary to transfer him at once to the municipal hospital?—Yes. He is transferred now, and he would be transferred then just the same.

47335. An ordinary sick case is not transferred now, is it?—Yes. As soon as a person becomes sick in the workhouse he is sent off at once.

47336. Where to?—To the Poor Law infirmary.

47337. But the Poor Law infirmary now is under the same management as the workhouse?—Yes, that is so, but different committees and staff.

47338. Suppose he had a wife and family at the time the wife and family would remain in the workhouse or in the institution belonging to it, and the father would be sent off to the municipal hospital?—Yes.

47339. Then all connection between the two would practically be severed?—No; for the simple reason that as soon as a person gets better he is sent back to the workhouse if he has no home to go to. Dr. J. Dodd.

47340. Do you mean that he would not be allowed to take his discharge from the municipal hospital, but that he would be sent to the workhouse to take his discharge there with his family?—Yes, that is so.

47341. He would really be a prisoner then in the municipal hospital?—I believe the guardians have certain regulations on the point, for instance, that a man is responsible for his family, and that he must take them out with him; and of course that really would operate in such a case. (The witness subsequently explained as follows:—"I find on inquiry that this applies to persons who are likely to desert their families. If there is no such suspicion he is discharged in the ordinary way.")

47342. That would mean a very close touch with the municipal hospital, would it not—a very close connection between the two?—We have no municipal hospital at present.

47343. I am only imagining it in operation, according to your suggestion that the hospitals should belong to the municipality and not be under the Poor Law?—I never suggested that the general infirmary should be connected with the municipality.

47344. You mean, I think, that a public institution for the treatment of the sick should be under the sanitary authority, instead of under the Poor Law authority. I think that is what you suggested?—I suggested that with reference to consumption alone. I have never contemplated that the general infirmary should be allied with the municipal authority.

47345. Did you not contemplate that the Poor Law infirmary for all cases should be under the sanitary authority?—That is different. That would go over if the Poor Law service were transferred, it would be transferred too.

47346. That is another matter. Are you thinking now that the whole of the Poor Law business should be transferred to the municipality and be worked by a committee of the municipality?—That would be a necessity 47347. (Mrs. Webb.) By the whole, you mean the whole of the medical portion, do you not?—Yes.

47348. (Mr. Benthams.) I thought you intended the whole Poor Law work to be transferred to the municipality and to be worked by a committee of the corporation?—The whole of the medical portion of the Poor Law.

47349. But only that?—Yes, only that.

47350. Then you would leave all the rest under the Poor Law, as it is at present?—I was not considering that. I was considering the question of the medical portion.

47351. I was assuming exactly that position in my previous question, namely, that the Poor Law part of it, that is, the aged and infirm, would remain under the Poor Law—under the board of guardians, or it might be known by some other name—and all the sick institutions would be transferred to the sanitary authority. Is that what you mean?—That is what I mean—that the ordinary working should remain as it is at present, but that the medical portion should be transferred.

47352. The transference from one institution to another would be very frequent, would it not?—From the infirmary to the Poor Law?

47353. Yes?—It is so at present.

47354. But it is not between two authorities now. Then it would be between two distinct authorities, each of which would have power to refuse or to admit from the other institution?—Yes; but I think in practical working that would not apply.

47355. Usually friction does arise, does it not, when there are two authorities, each having their own opinion as to whether a person should be admitted or discharged?—We could not have more friction than is possible to occur at present. For instance, if the workhouse medical officer takes one view and I take another it causes friction at present.

47356. Is not the medical officer of the workhouse at the present moment the medical officer of the Poor Law infirmary?—No, we are separate.

Dr. J. Dodd. 47357. Is he not connected with the Poor Law infirmary?—No, he has no connection with it whatever except sending patients from workhouse.

Proposed transfer of medical relief to the sanitary authority and difficulties in connection therewith. 47358. Then it is a question of the opinion of two medical men?—That is so. 47359. Under the same authority?—Yes, at present. 47360. In case of difference it would be referred to the head of the department, would it not; which in this case would mean that the board of guardians would settle it?—Yes, if we submitted it to them.

47361. I was assuming that you would not settle it without submitting it to them?—We have got a certain amount of power.

47362. But when you both come to a deadlock you must submit it to somebody?—That would be so—naturally.

47363. You would be submitting it to the one authority under which both officers are working?—Yes.

47364. That would not be so, if the municipality were dealing with the one institution and the Poor Law with the other?—I take it the municipal committee would determine it, just as the Poor Law people do now.

47365. Then as to the gain, you see you would have two committees to deal with it, those two committees would have to come together, and they would each uphold their own officer probably?—Yes, possibly.

47366. And therefore the friction would remain?—I am not assuming at all that that which I propose would be a perfect system; there is no system that is perfect in its working. But I think on the whole it would be better than the present system. I recognise that there is a little difference in detail which would require working out.

Advantages of proposed transfer of medical relief to the sanitary authority. 47367. What would you gain?—I think we should gain co-ordination as regards the treatment of the sick poor, and ally this work with the work of the medical officer of health.

47368. There would be less co-ordination between the sick and those just on the verge of sickness, where there was a doubt as to the advisability of their removal to an infirmary?—The medical officer of health is the medical authority in the town, and it is advisable that he, as far as possible, should control the whole public health work, if I may so call it. I think there would be a distinct advantage in the way of co-ordination.

47369. Would you hold that with regard to a simple chronic ailment like asthma?—I do not quite see the bearing of that.

47370. Would you hold that a simple chronic ailment like that was any concern of the medical officer of health?—Under the proposed system, I do not think the medical officer of health would have anything to do with the actual treatment. He would simply have the reins in his hands, and so would be able to co-ordinate the whole work better. It is too separated now, and there is no union.

47371. Would there be any gain as far as the patient was concerned; would he be better treated?—I think it would practically make no difference to the patient, but it might make a difference as regards preventive diseases.

47372. But you are not applying it to preventive diseases, as I understand?—Take, for instance, consumption. At the present time it depends on voluntary effort, and that means a great many deaths which ought not to occur, because it depends on the medical man alone. If it were properly organised under the medical officer of health, the consumptive cases would be properly safeguarded.

47373. There is nothing whatever to prevent that being done now, is there?—No, I do not think so.

47374. Then why is it not done?—There are a great many things which ought to be done, but which are not done.

47375. It does not need any new machinery in order to ensure that. It could be done, could it not?—I am simply contemplating that in any alteration of the Poor Law it would be advisable under the circumstances.

47376. In order to gain some advantage which can be gained without that alteration?—It would be an advantage from the point of view of co-ordination. Advantages of proposed transfer of medical relief to the sanitary authority.

47377. In order to deal with consumptive cases, it is not necessary that there should be any change whatever, the sanitary authority could deal with them now, and could provide properly isolated hospitals for them and could maintain them?—Providing the thing is done, it does not matter to me how it is done; the thing is to get it done.

47379. Most diseases may be considered preventible, may they not, if you take infection and bad habits and bad environment into consideration?—Yes, of course, to a certain extent.

47380. Even pneumonia, asthma and rheumatism may soon be regarded as preventible diseases?—We should scarcely put them in that category at present.

47381. When you consider the effect of environment on health, would they not be so classed?—From that point of view, yes, but then, of course we are considering the case of Utopia.

47382. I mean to say from a practical point of view, if you had a great deal of rheumatism and illnesses which came from damp and unhealthy conditions, it would be desirable that the medical officer of health who dealt with sanitary nuisances should know of that, would it not?—He does at present, that is specially his business.

47383. But he does not get notified to him the cases of rheumatism?—No. We only notify a certain number of cases—I think about seven or eight diseases according to the Act.

47384. Supposing you had the district medical officers working as you suggest under the medical officer of health, that would be a way of the medical officer of health finding out the existence of these diseases in certain parts of the town, would it not?—That, of course, would depend upon the regulations that were made.

47385. But that would be one of the advantages of it, would it not?—I was really contemplating it more from the point of view of the patients. I think the patients would benefit more.

47386. Do you think the patients would be more likely to accept medical treatment, if it was unconnected with the Poor Law?—It just depends. Are you speaking of the Poor Law patients alone?

47387. No, I am speaking of the people just above the pauper class?—In Leicester they are amply provided for by the dispensaries. Question of sufficiency and quality of provided dispensaries.

47388. But you do not consider that kind of medical treatment is very efficient?—It is not, in so far as the medical doctors are badly paid, and consequently they have too many patients to attend to for the money; they have not the time to attend to them. Leicester.

47389. Do you consider that the municipal treatment of infectious diseases pauperises people?—I am afraid it has got a little tendency in that direction. Evil effect of gratuitous treatment of disease by the sanitary authority.

47390. Do you object to it on that ground? I see you recommend that you should extend it to phthisis?—No, I do not object to it, because I think it a necessity for the public safety in the case of infectious diseases. At the same time I do not think it has a good moral effect when people get things given to them that they are in a position to pay for.

47391. But you consider that the importance in phthisis, for instance, of stamping out the disease counteracts that?—The importance is so great in the case of phthisis that I think special efforts ought to be made, as I have indicated, by the municipalities.

47392. (Mr. Bentham.) Would not that tendency to pauperisation be very great if ordinary medical relief was given by the sanitary authority?—I did not contemplate that at all.

47393. (Mrs. Webb.) All that you want is that the Poor Law medical relief should be under the public health authority?—Yes.

47394. Both the indoor and outdoor medical relief?—Yes.

47395. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) What is your objection to the whole of the work of the guardians being transferred, say to the borough council?—I think the main objection is that there is such an immense amount of it and the council have a fair amount of work to do already, and I doubt whether a council committee could spend the time upon it. It takes something like two days out of a week to do the Poor Law work now.

47396. Do you think that you would get a better class of person supposing that it was transferred to the borough council?—Very likely.

47399. And would be still more sought after if it combined the whole of the government of the locality, which it does not now?—Yes, I think so, but there is room for difference of opinion.

47400. By extension of numbers, would you not secure people sufficient to do this work of the Poor Law guardians?—Yes; by creating fresh committees it could be done, if it could be shown to be practicable.

47401. Does it not complicate matters rather more to transfer some part of the power to the municipality rather than to transfer the whole matter?—It would be less revolutionary. I was contemplating it from the medical point of view.

47402. Yours would be less revolutionary, but it would bring in a complication which, if there was only one authority for the whole business, would not be brought in?—To a certain extent, yes.

47404. (Mr. Bentham.) If you remove away the interesting part of the medical treatment from the Poor Law, what kind of person would you get then to administer the remainder?—I do not think the guardians take any particular interest in the medical portion of the work.

47405. Is that so?—Not as regards the district medical officers.

47406. Is that your experience in Leicester?—Yes. They take a fair amount of interest in the workhouse and in the Poor Law infirmary.

47407. I am speaking of the Poor Law infirmary; but that would be transferred to the municipality, according Dr. J. Dodd. to your proposal?—Yes. They take a fair amount of interest in that institution. 25 Mar. 1907.

47408. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Mr. Bentham's question is this I think. At the present moment you do not get a satisfactory class of persons as guardians; you wish to remove what after all is a very important part of their function from them; are you not likely, therefore, to get a less satisfactory class of guardians, if they only have the rest of the work to do?—I do not think it would make very much difference that way. I look upon it as an advantage for them to have less work, and I do not think it would affect them particularly.

47410. (Mrs. Webb.) Would it be an advantage that the district medical officer should have as an outlook the possibility of becoming medical officer of health? He would have that if he were in one service, would he not?—I do not think that would be possible at present, because the medical officer of health is a specialist in his work, absolutely. Question of promoting the district medical officer to be medical officer of health.

47411. But it has been pointed out to us that it would be very much better if specialism was put on the top of some practical knowledge of treatment?—Of course that could be done. A law might be made that a man should not become medical officer of health unless he had been a certain number of years in practice.

47412. Without the law, if you had this municipal service which combined treatment with prevention, you would have a tendency to begin as district medical officer treating patients and then to become medical officer of health, if a man was sufficiently able, afterwards, would you not?—But he would certainly have to get his diploma.

47413. His D.P.H. you mean?—Yes, he would require that. The tendency is nowadays for a municipality to select men who have had experience in other towns.

47414. But you must begin somewhere?—Yes, that is so.

47415. (Miss Hill.) Supposing you increased the borough council by a sufficient number of members to enable them to do easily the guardians' work, would you not get a very unwieldy body for administrative purposes, the borough council is fully large now, is it not?—Yes, it is large. Question of practicability of sanitary authority undertaking the guardians' work.

47416. And the men very busy?—Yes, they are.

47417. Therefore, if you add a large department of work like that at present under the Poor Law, you would have to increase the council very largely, would you not?—Very largely indeed.

47418. And then you would get a very unwieldy body for administrative purposes?—That was my idea, and that is why I should hesitate to recommend that the whole of the work should be transferred. The body would be very unwieldy.

Mr. SAMUEL HUDSON, called; and Examined.

47419. (Chairman.) You are an official valuer of the Ancient Order of Foresters and a Town Councillor of Leicester?—Yes.

47420. I believe you have been for many years very closely associated with the Ancient Order of Foresters, which is a very powerful organisation in Leicester?—Yes.

47421. You have prepared for us a statement, I think, which we may treat as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I am, and have been for many years, closely identified with the Ancient Order of Foresters.

(I) Account of Operations, Subscriptions, Benefits, Wage Limit of Members, etc.

2. The Ancient Order of Foresters, as is well-known, is one of the largest and most important of the affiliations.

Its objects are carried into effect by means of branches called Courts. In well-defined areas Courts unite for specific purposes, and the amalgamations are known as districts, and usually take the name of the locality in which they operate. The Leicester District Ancient Order of Foresters is one of these unions, and is composed of fifty-two Courts, six of which are exclusively for female members.

3. The principal benefits provided are weekly sums paid to members who are sick, and sums payable at death. The assurance of sums at death is extended to members' wives, and also to widows of members.

4. The membership is as follows:—

Members	-	-	-	-	7,342
Wives of members	-	-	-	-	4,464
Widows of members	-	-	-	-	34
Total	-	-	-	-	11,840

Mr. S. Hudson.

25 Mar. 1907.

Mr. S.
Hudson.

5. The annual receipts and payments are as follows :—

25 Mar. 1907.

	Receipts.	Payments.
Sick and Funeral Fund -	6,337	5,973
Interest - - - -	1,898	Nil.
Medical Aid - - -	1,327	1,327
Management Fund - -	1,348	1,370
Subsidiary Benefit Fund -	294	289
Totals - - -	£11,204	£8,959

6. Although each branch has the right to fix its own scale of benefit, provided contributions are adequate, there is very little variation among the forty-six courts for men, and there is absolutely no bar to membership arising from wages, whether little or much. The benefits for women in sickness and at death are somewhat less than those for men, but there is an allowance at confinements about sufficient to pay for medical attendance.

II. Whether possible to provide for Old Age Pensions by Friendly Societies.

Possibility of friendly societies providing old age pensions. 7. I should say that theoretically it is possible, but that practically it is impossible to provide old age pensions by friendly societies. My own society supplies perhaps the best evidence of this paradoxical assertion. Twenty-three years ago the Order instituted an old age pension benefit, with premiums on the lowest possible scale, and every facility and encouragement given to induce members to participate in the movement, but out of a membership numbering 500,000 when the rule was adopted, and a subsequent increase of more than 50 per cent., there has never been more than six individuals take advantage of the scheme, and at the present moment there are only two. It is true that a few of the branches of the society have established pension funds on their own account, but the result of their efforts only serve to show the futility of a voluntary movement in this direction.

Difficulties as to provision of old age pensions by friendly societies. 8. It is easy to see why failure has attended, and probably always will attend, these efforts. When the premiums are fairly light, that is to say, when the prospective annuitant is young, the benefit is so remote, and its advantages so hazy to him that there is no wonder that he is unwilling to make the necessary present sacrifices. When he reaches middle-life, and begins to appreciate the necessity for provision for old age, then he finds the premiums simply prohibitive, and probably his powers to meet them much less effective than in his younger days.

III. Effect on Friendly Societies of : (a) Free Medical State Relief ; (b) Voluntary Hospitals ; (c) State System of Old Age Pension ; and (d) Freely given Poor Law Out-relief.

Effect of free medical relief on friendly societies. 9. (a) I am of opinion that free medical State relief would rank very little higher in the public estimation than does the provision of medical aid under the Poor Law at the present time. Only the most destitute would be likely to accept it, and it is notorious that members of friendly societies are very rarely reduced to such a state.

Co-operation of friendly societies with voluntary hospitals. (b) Friendly societies have, so far as my experience goes, always worked well in conjunction with voluntary hospitals, and they are always ready to contribute to such institutions to the extent that their funds will permit.

Effect of old age pensions and freely given out-relief on friendly societies. (c) A system of State pensions on the lines advocated by Mr. Charles Booth would, I am perfectly satisfied, be an immense advantage to friendly societies, but it is only fair to say that my opinion is not shared by a number of our prominent men.

(d) Freely-given Poor Law out-relief would, in my opinion, have little effect on friendly societies, as the number of members accepting it would be very limited.

IV. Whether Friendly and Thrift Societies are progressing now as rapidly as they did, say, Ten Years ago.

Progress of friendly societies. 10. There has undoubtedly been a check upon the progress of friendly societies during recent years in regard to membership, but financially they have been gathering strength from year to year, a fact of infinitely greater importance than the mere accession of numbers.

47422. (Chairman.) In Paragraph 4 you give the Number of membership of the Leicester district of the Ancient Order members in of Foresters as 11,840 ; are those all within Leicester ?—Leicester They are within Leicester and a radius of perhaps a dozen Ancient Order of miles. Foresters.

47423. There are separate branches in the society which I think you call " courts " ?—Yes, that is so.

47424. And although each branch has a right to fix its own scale of benefit, in practice there is not much variation ?—Very little indeed.

47425. Your view as regards old-age pensions is that at present it is possible for the societies to provide them, but as long as wages remain at their present level it is in practice almost impossible ?—That is so. Failure of scheme of old age pensions by Ancient Order of Foresters and reasons therefor.

47426. You make a rather remarkable statement which I should like to get in evidence here. Out of a membership, as I understand it, of 500,000 when the rule was instituted by which an old-age pension at a very low premium was possible, not more than six individuals took advantage of it ?—That is so ; and there are only two now remaining of those.

47427. Have you ever talked to the officials of other bodies of a similar character upon this subject ? Have they ever tried experiments of the same kind ?—Yes.

47428. Has the result been pretty much the same ?—Very much the same.

47429. I think you give very good reasons why the attempt failed. According to your judgment, the idea of anything like a general old-age pension to be provided by the friendly societies is, under present conditions, an impossibility ?—That is so.

47430. Now we come to what the effect of certain possible changes might be upon your society, You think that if medical relief was made generally free, that benefit would not be largely taken advantage of by members of your society ?—That is so. Effect of free medical relief on friendly societies.

47431. You think that they would look upon it as much the same thing as medical Poor Law relief ?—As parish relief, really.

47432. I suppose it is very rarely that any member of a friendly society becomes a pauper ?—I made the statement in Paragraph 9 (a) from what I thought to be correct information ; but I thought I might make myself quite certain, so I sent a question round to the whole of the branches with which I am connected in Leicestershire—fifty-two of them altogether. I find that, at the present moment, or rather at the moment when those papers were filled in, out of 7,342 members we had six individuals in the poorhouse. Of those six, one was twenty-seven years of age, and a lunatic ; and another was forty years of age and an imbecile ; and the other four might be taken to represent the actual numbers out of the 7,342 who have come on to the Poor Law. I think that proves my statement. Number of members of friendly societies becoming paupers.

47433. I suppose there are a certain number of your members who are in receipt of outdoor relief ?—I think you might take it that the percentage of those would be very little greater than what I have given you for indoor relief.

47434. Whilst we are on this point, I might tell you that we have been informed that in various towns, such as Huddersfield and Birmingham, there is rather a feeling of resentment amongst the friendly societies at the action taken by certain guardians by which they give very little outdoor relief to the members of friendly societies ; and, in consequence, combined action was taken to get these societies more adequately represented on the boards of guardians. Had you any knowledge of that ?—At one time, if a member of a friendly society received any relief whatever from his society, that was taken into consideration by the guardians in granting the Poor Law relief. There was an organised attempt to get that altered, and I am glad to say that it has been altered, and that, up to a certain amount, what a member receives from a friendly society is not taken into consideration in granting relief. Attitude of friendly societies as to Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Acts.

47435. It was suggested to us by one witness that there was rather a feeling amongst the members of friendly societies that they had not been very fairly treated by the guardians, and in consequence they had combined in order to get representation on the boards ?—I think you may take it that that was the only ground—that because a man had been provident, and had saved something for himself he was to be, to a certain extent, debarred from the benefit which the improvident could always get.

47436. Going on to the question of old-age pensions, you think that an old-age pension on the lines indicated by Mr. Booth would be advantageous to friendly societies?—I am quite as certain of that as it is possible to be certain about something that has not happened.

47437. But you fairly say that there are a good many opinions amongst men of experience to the contrary effect?—I say that a good many of our leaders have held a different opinion, but I am glad to know that they are changing their opinions. Notably, I might mention the permanent secretary of our great Order, who at one time was one of the strongest opponents of State pensions, so far as friendly societies are concerned, and who is now preaching exactly the same doctrine as myself, namely, a universal pension.

47438. The idea which has been put forward by certain witnesses is that friendly societies at present suffer a good deal from the permanence of the sick pay which they have to give to their members?—That is so, and that is one of the reasons why I should advocate a State pension. When a man gets old, it is difficult to discriminate between the infirmities of old age and actual sickness, with the result that under the name of sickness he gets a pension.

47439. His sick allowance in certain cases becomes, in fact, a permanent pension?—Yes.

47440. Have the societies generally suffered financially from this?—Yes, because, unfortunately, their tables were not based upon a pension; their tables were only based upon ordinary sickness.

47441. Assuming there was a system of pensions, how would the benefit societies come in? What inducements could they offer to persons to join their ranks?—The ordinary benefits in sickness seem to me to be the great attraction all through, or at any rate, those and the amount payable upon the death of a member. I think the attractions would be quite as good if a State pension was enforced as they are now.

47442. Has your society ever turned its attention towards insuring against unemployment?—No, we have not done that; but unfortunately we pay for it. I mean to say, it very frequently happens that when a member is out of employment he is also sick.

47443. I suppose it is not practicable to do that, so long as your society is composed of members of so many different trades?—I do not think it would be practicable in any case.

47444. I assume that it must be a uniform insurance, and therefore all the persons insuring must belong more or less to the same trade?—I suppose it would have to be so in the case of insurance for unemployment.

47445. Has the question of unemployment ever been discussed by your society?—Not from the point of view of providing a benefit fund; but it has been discussed lots of times from the point of view of its influence upon the draining of our funds.

47446. Looking at the fluctuations of trade, would it not be very useful if you could have some form of voluntary insurance against temporary unemployment?—In my opinion it would, but I think it would have to be something quite separate from the ordinary sick societies, that is, from the ordinary friendly societies.

47447. And that it should partake much more of the nature of a regular insurance?—That is so.

47448. You say that freely-given Poor Law out-relief has affected friendly societies very little?—Very little; I deduce that from the fact that there are so very few of our members receiving it.

47449. How do you account for the check in the progress of friendly societies in regard to membership? Is it that the young men of the present day do not look forward as much as their ancestors did, or what is the cause which prevents their joining?—I think there are several reasons which might be adduced, and all of them cogent reasons. The first is that, in my opinion, the ground is very much more closely covered than it was some years back. The great organisations, such as my own and the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows, have in recent years discovered that they began on wrong lines, and they have had, therefore, to take up financial reform, which has meant an increase of premiums; and that has had the effect that a number of other societies, who believe they can do better than we, are offering the same benefits at reduced terms. Consequently we do not get the new members. I think I ought to qualify that statement in regard to the numbers decreasing. I think it might be said that there are a larger number of organisations into which people can go than there used to be, and it is only what I may term the more progressive societies, which, because of the extra contributions they are charging, are not getting the numbers that they ought to. The sick and dividend societies, for instance, have done a vast amount of damage to the true friendly societies.

47452. There has been a good deal of distress in the boot trade; do many belonging to that trade belong also to your society?—Not so many as you would imagine, inasmuch as—and here I come to another competing society—the boot trade have a friendly society of their own. The men are practically compelled to join those societies, and they are not able to keep up their membership in two. Unfortunately, these shop clubs, if I may call them so, are working on the lines that we began with fifty years ago, and ultimately they will come to grief, as many of our branches have.

47453. What other big trades are there in Leicester besides boot making? Is there not hosiery?—Hosiery and the boot trade form the two staples.

47454. Are there a great many of your members who are in the hosiery trade?—We have numbers both in the boot trade and in the hosiery trade.

47455 (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Do you think that the higher wage has had rather a bad effect on friendly societies than otherwise, and that the feeling that they are earning more, instead of leading to thrift, has led men into increased expenditure?—I think that is possible in some cases, but I do not think it is general.

47456. The teaching of thrift has gone out altogether in a very great measure from a particular class of workmen has it not?—That is so.

47457. It is only since the higher wages came in that that has been so in a great measure, I understand?—Yes.

47458. I was rather struck with your words that when men are out of employment very often they are also sick; do you mean that that is the consequence of their being out of employment, because they are getting less to eat, or what?—I am afraid that I must say that is due to malingering, to some extent.

47459. That is what I wanted to get at. What you mean is that because they are out of employment, it is rather easy to manufacture an illness in order to get upon the funds?—That is so.

47460. How do you check this kind of thing?—Unfortunately we cannot always check it. We have to depend largely upon our medical men, who examine those who want to come upon the funds, and we also have weekly visitors to the sick.

47461. It does seem as if it ought to be quite easy to distinguish between real illness and malingering in a case like that, where a man is out of employment?—If a man says he has the backache, it is difficult to say that he has not; and it frequently happens that things of that sort are said.

47462. Would the tendency of the doctor be rather to accept the illness than not to do so?—I do not think our medical men would do it wilfully, but I am afraid they do it.

Effect of old

47463. Out of tenderness of heart?—To some extent that may be. At any rate, it is an absolute fact that when employment is short the sick pay does go up.

47464. How would you answer this question in regard to old-age pensions and friendly societies, which might be asked; Would there not be less inclination towards personal thrift if a person knew that at a certain age he was bound to receive a pension?—It is possible that might be so in some cases. But my opinion, from a very close and intimate knowledge of the working people, is that it would be more likely to have the affect of their trying to get a little more, in order to augment the State pension which, of course, would never be large enough to keep them altogether.

47465. The State pension would be sufficiently large to encourage them to pay a little more in order to have an adequate amount?—That is my view of the question.

47466. I wanted to get that as the answer—that the effect of a State pension which was not in itself quite adequate, would at any rate be sufficient to encourage a person to thrift, who, very likely, is not now thrifty?—I think in the great majority of cases that would be the effect.

47467. (Mr. Bentham.) You would, therefore, advocate that the State pensions should not be adequate, in order to encourage people to thriftiness, would you?—No, I am not going quite to say that, but I am looking at the possibilities. We know that it will be a difficult matter to establish pensions on the orthodox lines, that is, of 5s. a week.

47468. There is nothing to prevent an old-age pension being adequate, is there, except the question of finding means?—Except finding the means.

47470. I can never understand why a person may be induced to save if he knows the State will provide him with 5s. a week, and will not be induced to save if he knows the State will provide him with nothing at a given age. Does not one usually exercise thrift in order to provide for one's self in time of want?—The thrifty do so, and if they were all thrifty, they would not need the pension at all; but, unfortunately, the bulk of our working men are not thrifty.

47472. In Paragraph 9, as to the effect on friendly societies of free medical State relief, I think you mean to say that it would have very little effect?—That is so.

47473. I take it you mean very little effect upon the members of friendly societies?—That is it.

47475. Is it not likely to prevent the growth of friendly societies, if in the time of sickness they could have an adequate allowance from the State, and also be provided with a medical man? There would be no need for a friendly society at all then, would there?—So far as regards the allowance from the State, it is not suggested that that allowance should be given until the man becomes an old man, many years after he could join any friendly society whatever.

47476. I was thinking of the paragraph a little lower down with regard to freely-given Poor Law out-relief. Supposing Poor Law outdoor relief was freely given, and also that there was free medical relief, men would have no need whatever to join friendly societies, would they?—I think they would do so. I think the great bulk would prefer to make provision for themselves in that way, rather than to accept Poor Law medical aid or Poor Law relief of any other kind.

47477. Do you not think that Poor Law aid has been rather more freely accepted now than it was formerly?—I think that is because the needs are greater amongst the great mass of the unemployed.

47478. You think it is not due then to a feeling of dependence on the part of the people who accept it?—I am afraid my opinion is not worth much on that point.

47479. (Dr. Downes.) Do you find that malingering is increasing?—No, I do not think so.

47481. I suppose any such remedy as taxing them would be very difficult to carry out?—That I could not say. I should imagine the difficulty would be in getting the tax from that class of people, if you mean taxing the clubs themselves.

47482. (Mr. Gardiner.) You have made no effort, have you, to educate the parson or the minister of whatever denomination? He is responsible, is he not, for these P.S.A. slate clubs?—We have had one or two attempts in that direction. They are doing a good work, a splendid work, there is no doubt. It is from want of knowledge, I am quite certain, that they think they are also doing a good work in this particular direction, and they think they are counteracting the public-house. Unfortunately, while they are counteracting the public-house, they are also damaging, to some extent, the friendly societies who are on the right financial lines.

47483. Do you think your society, if I may put it in that way, and the Oddfellows have taken enough trouble over their juvenile branches? Is not the stagnation in numbers partly due to that?—No, I do not think so. There are very large numbers in the juvenile branches of both the Oddfellows and ourselves.

47484. Do you push them enough, do you think?—We push them as far as we can, and I am bound to say we have to depend largely upon them for the influx that we get.

47485. And to keep the average age down?—The average age is a thing that has gone by the board.

47486. Has it?—Yes, the average age is no good.

47487. As regards these 11,000 members who are within a radius, you say, of twelve miles of Leicester, how many are in the town of Leicester itself, could you say roughly?—We have 11,000 of all sorts, but our membership really is stated at the top of the schedule in Paragraph 4 as 7,342.

47488. How many of those, would you say, live within the Poor Law union of Leicester?—I should say about two-thirds.

47489. Do they agree with the policy which has been going on in Leicester for the last two or three years?—Yes.

47490. Do your members agree with that policy?—Yes.

47491. Do they vote for the labour ticket?—I do not say that our members vote for the labour ticket. We bar politics altogether, and it is not permitted in any sense to interfere with our work. Therefore, it is difficult for me to say anything on this point except from general observation outside.

47492. I was only trying to get at whether any appreciable percentage of your members voted at Poor Law elections as far as you know, and whether if they did they voted for the policy which has obtained in Leicester during the last three or four years?—I could not give you a reliable answer on that point.

47493. Do the bulk of your members pay their rates in their rent, or do they pay the rates direct?—I should think the bulk of the members pay their rates with the rent and the landlord pays the rate.

47494. Have you any idea what is the rateable value of the houses in which your members live?—I should say generally from 5s. up to about 6s. 6d. a week.

47495. Are they rated at about £8 or £10?—Yes, they would be rated at from £8 to £10. Mr. S. Hudson.

47496. And a 1d. per week is compulsorily taken off the wages of the men who work in the factories for the purposes of subscription to the general infirmary?—I believe that is so, but I could not say of my own knowledge. 25 Mar. 1907.

47497. If that is so, it would come to about 4d. in the £ on their rateable value, would it not?—Yes. Compulsory deduction from workmen's wages for subscription to voluntary hospitals and results thereof.

47498. Which they have to pay towards the support of general hospitals?—That is so.

47499. Then it is rather reasonable that they should think they deserve something, is it not? If we paid 4d. in the £ we should think we might get something back. should we not?—Yes.

Dr. WILLIAM FREDERICK McALLISTER-HEWLINGS, called; and Examined.

47500. (Chairman.) You are the district medical officer of health and you are also the surgeon to the Provident Dispensary at Leicester?—I am.

47501. You have prepared a statement which, if you will kindly hand it in, we will treat as your evidence in chief?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement).

I beg to state that I am a Bachelor of Medicine residing in the poorest quarter of Leicester, holding the District Medical officership for the past ten years, also surgeon to the Leicester Provident Dispensary, Ancient Order of Foresters, Twentieth Century Friendly Society, and Public Vaccinator; Civil Surgeon to Admiralty and Local Volunteers.

Medical Assistance of the Poor.

1. Sanitary Authority, Town Council, etc.—The poor have the privilege of removal in infectious disease to the local isolation hospital without payment of any kind, or if detained at home can obtain disinfectants free of charge and have their homes stoved in addition to a printed list of instructions as to isolation, etc. In consumptive cases, if notified voluntarily, they have, if not advanced in that disease, a fair chance of open-air treatment at the hospital varying from four weeks to three months with the advantage of later stoving, etc. Weakly children can be artificially fed with sterilised and humanised milk obtainable at a small fee at the Corporation Milk Depôt, which I have found excellent in practice. In the diphtheria epidemic, antitoxin was provided at all the police-stations free of charge night and day. In the recent small-pox epidemic every possible persuasion was utilised by the Medical Officer of Health to ensure the vaccination of contacts and the immediate isolation of those affected. Personally, I have never found any difficulty in getting cases removed except in periods of congestion due to epidemics, so in my opinion the sanitary service in Leicester is second to none.

2. The Poor Law.—My district is the poorest and most prolific as far as the poor are concerned; population in 1901, 23,447. The sick poor can, on obtaining an order from the relieving officer, if the offices are open, see their district medical officer either at his surgery from 9 to 10 a.m., or any time for an emergency, or if incapable may be visited at their own homes, obtaining medicines at the surgery at 6 p.m. 26 Mar. 1907.

3. The following figures will illustrate:—
August (month of), 1906:

Medicine supplied, 403 bottles.
House visits, 179.
Surgery consultations, 152.

January, 1907:
Medicine, 509 bottles.
House visits, 475.
Surgery consults, 139.

Orders issued annually to me about 2,000.

4. Medical extras if ordered are always supplied promptly (if during office hours) and enquiry as to means follows.

5. There is never any difficulty in getting cases removed to the Poor Law infirmary except the delay in notifying the relieving officer, which cannot be helped under existing arrangements, emergencies excepted, when one can telephone direct and get the ambulance.

6. Three months papers are granted to aged out-door paupers and monthly papers for medical attendance in the ordinary way.

7. Fractures and surgical cases are ensured attention at the General Hospital by an annual subscription of £20 by the Board of Guardians.

8. Confinement orders may be obtained in advance in order to book the district medical officer.

10. Surgical appliances may be obtained on the order of the district medical officer.
11. Voluntary Effort.—We have various institutions enabling the poor to obtain medical assistance at a small cost.
12. Provident Dispensary.—Membership 50,798 with a small maternity home and cottage hospital attached where the fees are small. Fees for membership, 1d. a week, $\frac{1}{2}$ d. for children, $3\frac{1}{2}$ d. for man, wife and children under 14 years.
13. General Infirmary:—

 Admitted by subscribers' recommendation.
14. People's Dispensary.—Membership 9,000 at same rate of pay as the Provident Dispensary.

24. District Nursing Institution with eleven trained nurses averaging 2,008 visits annually, and supported by voluntary contributions.
25. Skin Hospital.—Where poor people may consult a skin specialist on the recommendation of a subscriber.
26. Charity Organisation Society.—Whose chief work is assisting the convalescent poor to a change of air.
27. Surgical Aid and Water-bed Society.—In order to supply surgical necessities to the poor on the recommendation of subscribers.
28. To comment on the above it is very evident that the thrifty poor can easily obtain medical assistance and medicine without application to the Poor Law. If in good health for one penny per week for adults, $\frac{1}{2}$ d. for children, or $3\frac{1}{2}$ d. per week for man, wife and as many children under fourteen as they possess, they can insure against doctors' bills or if ill may obtain subscriber's recommendations (sick cheques) at either of the dispensaries and have three months medicine and attendance for 1s., and 2d. for the card. If less thrifty they have still the out-patient department of the infirmary or the Poor Law to fall back upon. Unfortunately the class of persons assisted excepting Poor Law cases is often the class quite able to pay ordinary fees; both dispensaries and infirmary are abused to a great extent, but it is extremely difficult to check it. I cannot see, however, that these abuses to the slightest extent militate against the medical assistance of the really poor unless in the case of indoor accommodation at the General Infirmary.
29. Of course these facilities must necessarily overlap, to illustrate:—
 (a) The sick pauper in need of surgical assistance cannot obtain it at our present Poor Law infirmary and therefore has to go to the General Hospital.
 (b) The friendly society member in a long illness may be on quarter pay (i.e., 2s. 6d. per week) and need poor relief either in medical assistance or medical extras.
 (c) The sanitary authority at present relieves the Poor Law in zymotic diseases.
 (d) The Poor Law infirmary relieves the General Hospital of its chronic cases or imbeciles.
30. If under one authority the sick poor could be sent direct to the General Hospital if requiring surgical assistance without delay, as the congestion is so great that there is often serious delay in obtaining surgical relief.
31. Again if some arrangements of old-age pensions could be arranged with the friendly societies, instead of their members dying in receipt of Poor Law assistance while their funds augmented to millions, we should have a condition of things which would materially relieve the rates.
32. Medical assistance to the absolute poor could easily be arranged here by the appointment of a competent surgical staff to our present Poor Law infirmary.* but the ban of "Poor Law" would still remain. Far better in my opinion would it be to manage all these matters as a corporation.
33. In my opinion the health of the community does suffer: Owing to insufficiency in numbers of district medical officers because the district medical officer is paid a paltry wage (£90 per annum in my instance,) therefore he has to augment his income by other work. The district medical officer ought to be absolutely barred from other practice, and have a bigger district. Again drugs, etc., ought to be supplied by the authorities. How is it possible for a district medical officer to interview 614 sick persons and supply 509 bottles of medicine of the best quality during one month for the sum of £7 10s. and keep his wife and children? I am fortunately able to do it because I hold the vaccinating appointment, but the district medical officer alone is in a parlous state.
- There are six district medical officers for the parish of Leicester, with a population of 211,581 for 1901.
34. The quality of the medical assistance is good as far as time will allow; I am often urgently required when unfortunately away, earning a living, and again, the question of drugs crops up, as antitoxin in a sporadic case of diphtheria or antistreptococcus serum in puerperal fever often required if case is unfit to move.
- The Poor Law.*
35. There is not much for me to say on the question of the experiments in Poor Law administration which have been tried in the parish of Leicester. Perhaps the so-called "labour test" strikes one as futile; chopping sticks and digging holes on the land and filling them up again tends rather to keep men on the test, because the labour is too light. To illustrate, on enquiry, men appear to stay on year after year. Example: A man, Tidmas, has been on four years, and also a collier, whose weekly wage was 28s. 7d., stated that "he was better off on the test." It is a well-known fact that these men, when their Committee begins to press them to get a job, leave the district in order to sponge on another Committee.
36. Indoor Relief as far as I know leaves nothing to be desired.
37. Outdoor Relief.—The aged and infirm appear to me as sufferers under existing arrangements; even as "approved cases" the maximum relief is only 5s. per week (vide "Year Book" 1906-7). Generally the rent of their room is 1s. 6d. per week, often more and then coal and light is required.
38. The aged and infirm may after living ten years in Leicester and subjecting their character to minute inspection, become "approved cases" and are then allowed 5s. per week. Man on labour test, with wife and four dependant children, receives 13s. per week, half in money and half in kind.
- During sickness if certified by the district medical office the same rate as above may be allowed to the destitute. Medical extras are always supplied on the order of the district medical officer.
39. The labour test men appear to me to get too much.
40. Emergency Relief.—Example: Confinement, patient exhausted, on enquiry only half a loaf of bread and some lard in the house, brandy required, time 4 a.m., no possibility of getting it through Poor Law, so district medical officer has to fork out. Could not a few necessities be kept at the central offices and dispensed on the district medical officer's recommendation?
- * At present cases requiring surgical assistance have to be referred to the General Hospital.

Deterrence of Poor Law and classes apply- ing for relief. 41. The decent poor would rather go anywhere than come under the ban of pauperism. Again, contact with Poor Law is infectious and we find the same class year after year applying for relief:—

- (a) The professional pauper.
- (b) The absolutely destitute.
- (c) The misfortunate, liable to develop as (a).

Causes of pauperism.

42. The chief Causes of Pauperism are:—

- (1) Drink.
- (2) Want of thrift.
- (3) Misfortune, plus large families, illness, etc
- (4) Ne'er-do-wells or unemployables.

Lack of thrift in Leicester.

43. In Leicester the want of thrift is very palpable; for instance, 59,000 insuring only against the doctor's bill instead of entering a friendly society and ensuring sick-pay as well.

Persons seeking election as guardians.

44. The persons seeking election as guardians are mainly labour agitators, retired tradesmen, political enthusiasts, utilising it as a stepping stone to council honours, and occasionally a pure philanthropist.

45. As to Reforms, I would suggest:—

(1) All Poor Law medical officers to be paid a suitable salary with fixity of tenure and barred from outside practice.

(2) Drugs to be supplied by the authorities.

(3) The present obstetric fees to be altered to £1 1s. all round. Now, 10s. 6d. for normal case often entailing a wait of an hour or so, and £2 for instrumental delivery which may be completed in twenty minutes.

(4) Obstetric Outfits to be supplied on loan by authorities, now only obtainable from some charity.

(5) Obstetric Nurses to be supplied if required. Now we have to depend on ignorant and often dirty neighbours. District nurses not allowed to attend under ten days.

(6) Bronchitis Kettles often required and only obtainable through private charity.

(7) Emergency Medical Extras to be obtainable at all hours on an order from the district medical officer.

(8) Medical Orders to be obtainable at all hours of the day or night, say, at branch police stations; at present all have to apply at the Central Poor Law Offices, sometimes a mile away, and they can only be obtained during office hours.

(9) Central Authority, such as Sanitary Authority, could much better control and organise all the present disjointed and overlapping arrangements for the relief of the poor.

47502. (Chairman.) Speaking generally you would say that the thrifty poor can easily obtain medical assistance without going to the Poor Law?—Yes, in Leicester.

47503. You are connected with the Provident Dispensary, which has about 50,000 members?—Yes.

47504. Does the 50,000 include the families?—Yes.

47505. And the families have the right to attendance?—Yes.

47506. Have you any assistance in dealing with these cases?—For the dispensary cases I am on the staff of the dispensary.

47507. Are most of the medical men of the town on the staff?—Thirty odd are on the staff out of a total of 100 I should think.

47508. How are you remunerated; do you attend certain families?—They have a right to choose their own doctor, and the remuneration consists of about 2s. 1d. and a fraction per capita per annum.

47509. How do you manage about the surgical cases, because the surgical cases sometimes would be accident cases?—They are generally sent on to the general infirmary, but we have a little cottage hospital there with five beds.

47510. I suppose you act as a general practitioner?—Yes.

47511. Not merely as a surgeon?—That is so.

47512. How does this system work from a medical point of view? Have you time to give what you consider adequate attention to these cases?—Not during an epidemic.

47513. About how many cases would you have in a year?—I have 2,700 odd under me in the dispensary. If you were to multiply that by three I think you will get about a list of the visits paid by me roughly, I should say about 6,000 visits a year.

47514. You have in addition to do your medical work as Poor Law officer?—Yes.

47515. Have you a fixed salary for that?—Yes.

47516. May I ask what that is?—£90 a year.

47517. (Mr. Gardiner.) Do you find your own drugs?—Yes.

47518. (Chairman.) You think that the health of the community does to some extent suffer from the insufficiency of the number of the district medical officers and their small remuneration?—Yes; I think that the medical officer, as I say at the end of my statement, should be barred from any other kind of practice.

47519. That he should have a larger district?—Yes.

47520. And higher remuneration?—Yes; and he should not be expected to find any drugs at all.

47521. You would prefer that to working as you are now?—Certainly. If I have a serious case that requires special or expensive treatment I generally give them a sick cheque recommendation for the dispensary myself or get one for them, and they get three months' attendance then for the sum of 1s., and I can order any drug I require.

47522. (Mrs. Webb.) That is to say, you transfer the pauper to a charitable agency?—Yes.

47523. (Chairman.) And the guardians pay?—No, they do not pay exactly, because I have to find the drugs, it is the charitable institution that pays, really.

47524. To put it plainly, you are so circumstanced, although you are a Poor Law medical officer, that if you have a difficult or costly case you have to make use of your influence to get it transferred to the charitable society?—Yes.

47525. (Mr. Bentham.) That is in order to save drugs?—Yes.

47526. Because you have to pay for them?—Yes.

47527. (Mr. Lock.) Is there any harm in that?—Not at all, I am paying the half-guinea for that recommendation, so I am paying it out of my own pocket. I generally give them one of my own recommendations because I am a subscriber myself, or obtain one through the dispensary.

47528. Will the Provident Dispensary admit people like that without a fine, or anything of the kind?—They pay 1s. for three months.

47529. Do they continue members after that?—They can if they are not suffering from chronic disease.

47530. Do many do that?—A good number.

47531. So you are doing a distinct service to them by getting them on to the Provident Dispensary?—Yes.

47532. (Chairman.) You do that at a cost to yourself?—Very often.

47533. What are your views about putting the medical relief of the poor under one authority and associating it with the health authority?—I think that idea would be an excellent one as far as I can see, it is rather a wide subject to give an answer upon, but on the face of it I should think it would be an excellent idea, I think between the two arrangements there is a good deal of leakage now.

47534. Have you a difficulty now in getting serious cases connected with the Provident Dispensary into a general hospital?—Only because of congestion, at our general hospital at present that is pretty acute because they are rebuilding a wing, but generally there is a good deal of congestion at the voluntary hospitals; one has to wait for several days sometimes even for an urgent case.

47535. Should you say that the fact of medical relief being connected with the Poor Law is at all deterrent to the respectable poor seeking for help?—Yes, decidedly I should say so.

47536. Would you go so far as to say that people's health suffers from their not, in the early stages of their ailment, seeking Poor Law medical relief?—Distinctly.

Proposal to transfer Poor Law to town council.

Advantages of transferring medical relief to the sanitary authority.

Failure under present system to discover infectious cases, etc.

Suitability of sanitary authority to administer Poor Law infirmaries.

Question of attractiveness of sanitary authority hospitals.

Difficulties in connection with health visitors, etc.

47537. On the general question of Poor Law administration it has been suggested to us that the functions of the guardians might be bodily transferred to the town council. Have you any opinion upon that?—You get a better type of man altogether on the town council; I should think it could be managed by a side committee of some sort.

47538. Have you experienced any difficulty in what you consider to be the proper discharge of your duties from the action or policy of the Poor Law guardians?—Indirectly there is a good deal of pressure brought upon the district medical officers to avoid medical relief as much as they can. It is a little awkward; it cannot be refused if it is ordered by the district medical officer, but it is a little awkward sometimes, you are constantly getting hauled over the coals for your medical extras being a little big.

47539. That is for ordering medical comforts?—Yes.

47540. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to handing over the Poor Law medical relief to the sanitary authority, would that not help the sanitary authority to prevent disease by getting early notification of it?—You mean if it were actually under their authority?

47541. If the district medical officer was under the medical officer of health would it be advantageous from the point of view of prevention?—Certainly.

47542. Do you think that for a medical officer of health some knowledge of treatment and some acquaintance with practice is a good training?—It is a very necessary training, I think.

47543. At present the medical officers of health tend rather to be more without that preliminary practice?—Yes.

47544. You would think that being a district medical officer was a good training for a medical officer of health?—I think it is an excellent training for almost any medical position, because the experience is so wide.

47545. At the present moment do you consider that the lack of Poor Law medical relief, or the grudging way in which it is given, tends to undiscovered cases of infectious disease—measles, for instance?—I should hardly say that because they can always get the doctor. Are you speaking of medical relief purely, or in the sense of medical extras?

47546. I was thinking of medical relief purely, the case of a poor family which had possibly a case of incipient measles or incipient phthisis?—That is quite possible; I have known cases in fact.

47547. You have known cases in which an early case of disease has been overlooked?—I have known actual cases where I have been asked to look at a child where they have told me they cannot pay me a fee, but they hope that I will not make them get a pauper.

47548. They do not want to come to the Poor Law?—Quite so.

47549. That has resulted in persons not being treated?—I should say a case like that would be missed, undoubtedly, sometimes.

47550. Would you be in favour of handing over the Poor Law infirmary to the sanitary authority?—I think the whole thing should be under one management if it is going at all.

47551. Are you satisfied with the management of the fever hospitals by the municipal authority?—As far as I can speak for myself, certainly; I believe they are very well looked after.

47552. You do not find there is any disinclination on the part of the poor to make use of them?—Not in the least, because it affects their work so much they are always glad really to avail themselves of the isolation.

47553. There is no feeling that they are being pauperised?—Not in the least in Leicester.

47554. Supposing you had a complete system of health visitors under experienced district medical officers do you think you could improve the habits of the people?—Some of them are absolutely incurable and always will be. There is not doubt that a good deal of good might be done, but then there comes in the difficulty of these health visitors intruding upon other doctors' patients, so that there is always a good deal of friction about that sort of thing; it is very difficult; then the people themselves rather resent the intrusion of strangers in a way, but if that stranger were an official I should say there would not be much difficulty; they have got to almost love the school board officer, so I think they would tolerate one or two officials of that stamp.

47555. Have you health visitors in your town?—I do not know whether you would call them health visitors.

47556. They are voluntary people?—Yes, they have a kind of nursing association there, and the lady superintendents go round and see the patients sometimes with the nurses, that is about the only health visitor we have.

47557. You have no official and special health visitor?—No; we have one lady sanitary inspector.

47558. Is the lady sanitary inspector resented?—That I could not say.

47559. You have no knowledge of it?—I have not heard of any cases.

47560. (Mr. Bentham.) In paragraph 5 you refer to delays occurring by notifying the relieving officer in sick cases. Does that often occur?—The difficulty is this: I have a case, say, on Saturday afternoon, the offices are closed, it is quite possible the relieving officer has gone for a walk into the country. I have a difficulty in getting those cases removed, not so much lately as I had in the past. The only way it could be done would be by telephoning up to the workhouse for the ambulance to come down and there have been occasions when I could not get it in the past.

47561. What would be the remedy for that, do you think?—To give the district medical officer absolute power in those cases to order a case in.

47562. In urgent cases?—To have no subordinate man between the workhouse authority and the district medical officer.

47563. Would you say the same of a first application for medical relief?—Yes, the same applies in urgency.

47564. Not necessarily in an ambulance case?—In urgency cases. That happens every day; they come up without a paper and they say they will get it in the morning; we have to see any urgent case.

47565. You have no trouble in those cases?—It depends upon the district medical officer; he can refuse to see them if he likes, it is purely a question of humanity.

47566. Have they ever been refused an order by the relieving officer after you have attended a case?—Not to my knowledge; it may be given and inquired into afterwards.

47567. There is no ground of complaint on that score?—Not at all, it is only a question of the middle men in the way sometimes.

47568. Would you take away vaccination altogether from the district medical officer of health if he was appointed under a salary?—I think so.

47569. You prefer that the two should not be mixed up together at all?—Yes.

47570. Do you think a whole-time officer would be far better than a general practitioner as district medical officer?—Certainly.

47571. It would mean, would it not, that people would have further to go to get a medical officer, because necessarily if a medical officer was paid sufficiently well he would require a larger area?—Yes.

47572. Or rather it would be necessary to give him a larger area?—Yes.

47573. Would the poor suffer from having further to go, taking your own area in Leicester?—They have a good distance to go in some cases now, in some cases over a mile for their district medical officer.

47574. They would have to go far more than that if there were only two medical officers for the whole of Leicester?—Yes, of course they would, but they have to go up to a central place to get their medical orders now, and it is quite possible for the men to sit there alternately to see them.

47575. Are all the relieving officers at one centre, at the central office?—Yes, the central building.

Need of further facilities for emergency medical relief.

Question of expediency of uniting office of district medical officer and public vaccinator. Question of accessibility of medical relief under system of whole-time district medical officers.

47576. And all applications are made there?—All applications are made there.

47577. What do you mean by private clubs controlled by medical men which you mention in paragraph 20?—Some medical men who are not in the dispensary run what is called a private club of their own, they have their own private collector who goes round to the houses and collects at the rate of a 1d. a week, just the same as the dispensary.

47578. They have a membership card, rules and so on, I suppose?—Yes.

47579. Would several medical men run a club or one medical man a club of his own?—Generally each man has his own club.

47580. What is the effect of it on the medical profession?—It is not considered by the medical profession a proper thing to do. They do not approve of it generally. It means these agents have to canvass to a certain extent for clients; they are paid by commission as a rule.

47581. Is it because the general practitioner feels the pressure of the provident medical dispensary?—That I could not say, it is, perhaps, because he has not been able to get on the staff of either of them; that is, I should say, the general reason.

47582. You say in paragraph 38, medical extras are always supplied on the order of the district medical officer. I understood you to say in answer to a question just now you were often hauled over the coals for ordering medical extras?—I think you have taken me too literally. I say one has always the feeling that they are being grumbled at. I have never been hauled over the coals officially, it is never done officially, but you always have the uncomfortable feeling that you are going against the wishes of the guardians in ordering medical extras at all.

47583. How do you judge of the wishes of the guardians?—By personal opinion of them. I will be told my district is the most expensive, and I ought not to order so much. I have been told that by the relieving officer.

47584. You feel if it were transferred to another authority there would be less care exercised as far as cost is concerned, more freedom given?—Not necessarily.

47585. I thought that was the complaint?—I think they are doing pretty well in Leicester taking it on the whole, but at the same time one feels one would like a free hand for medical men in ordering medical extras.

47586. (Mrs. Webb.) Would you not consider, if it belonged to the sanitary authority, that all those circumstances would be considered from the point of view of preventing disease rather than saving rates; that would be the difference?—Yes, I have no doubt that would be a very useful way, organising it on those lines if it could be done.

47587. It would be the idea of preventing disease which would dominate the authority, and not the idea of saving the rates as in the Poor Law; that is the difference?—Quite so.

47588. (Mr. Bentham.) The matter is entirely in the hands of the medical officer to order these things?—Yes, we can order anything we like.

47589. And you have never been refused?—Not lately, not in the last four or five years; before that I was several times.

47590. When comparing fever hospitals and infectious hospitals with Poor Law infirmaries, there is no question of cost involved in the treatment of a patient in an isolation hospital?—Not to the guardians.

47591. Or to anyone?—Or to their parents?

47592. Or even to an authority?—The isolation hospital comes on the rates.

47593. The cost of each individual patient is never ascertained, the cost never enters into the question, it is left entirely in the hands of the medical officer of health?—Quite so.

47594. And there is no check on expenditure?—There must be some check, I should think, on the part of the town council.

47595. Is there any to your knowledge?—Not to my knowledge.

47596. Have you ever seen any statistics of what it costs per patient in an isolation hospital?—No, I have not.

47597. With regard to special fees for midwifery cases, do you advocate one fee for all cases?—Yes.

47598. So that there is no inducement either to use instruments or not?—Quite so.

47599. Just one stipulated fee?—One stipulated fee.

47600. What fee have you in mind that would be sufficient?—A guinea I should suggest myself. At present, as you see in my statement, it is half-a-guinea in an ordinary case, and for that you may have to pay two visits in the night, and stay an hour and a half at a time possibly, and pay eight visits afterwards. For the two guineas you go out once and are finished, perhaps, in twenty minutes and pay the eight visits. The dispensary cases only pay 21s. for the first case and 15s. for subsequent cases.

47601. Has there been a change recently with regard to these fees?—Not since I have been on the staff.

47602. (Mrs. Webb.) Has not an order been issued lately?—I have not heard of it.

47603. (Mr. Bentham.) In paragraph 35 you refer to men leaving a particular district in order to come before another committee, that is with regard to the outdoor labour test. Is it the fact that some men change their residence in order to come under another committee?—That is a well known fact. My relieving officer is responsible for that statement.

47604. Is that because one committee might be more lenient than another?—A committee gets tired of them; they find out the man is a bit of a sham, and they get down on him a bit; so he changes his residence and gets on to another committee, until they find him out as a sham, and so on.

47605. He will be sent to the same work and the same labour yard?—Yes.

47606. (Professor Smart.) In paragraph 35 you speak of digging holes in the land and filling them up again. I suppose that is a joke?—No, that actually occurred at the Poor Law infirmary; the idea was to let out the frost, I believe. I do know they actually dug out the holes there, and to let the frost out of the ground I think was the reason given.

47607. There was some justification made out for it?—Yes, that was the only justification, I think, to let the frost out. It had been dug over before, I believe.

47608. With regard to this man who at the test was better off than at 28s. 7d. How do you make that out?—That I cannot say; the fact is this: the master of the workhouse was in the country near some colliery, and he met this man coming away from the colliery with his wage ticket, and he said "Good morning" to him, as he recognised him as an old labour-test man. The man showed Mr. Lambert, the master, his labour ticket, and he said: "I was better off on test than I am here at 28s. 7d. a week."

47609. That might be in consequence of the short hours?—That may be so.

47610. On the test he could only get 13s. per week, half in money and half in kind?—Yes, with four dependent children.

47611. (Mr. Phelps.) In Paragraph 28 you say dispensaries are very often abused by being used by people provident well able to pay for medical attendance?—That is so.

47612. Do you regard the provident dispensary in Leicester as a charity?—Largely I do.

47613. Why so?—Because it is supported by subscriptions to a large extent.

47614. Do the doctors themselves regard it as a charity?—Certainly, a pseudo-charity.

47615. Do you think it possible to run provident dispensaries on a line that would not be a charity?—They would have to increase the fee to a large extent to do that—it might be done.

47616. Have you ever thought what fee would be necessary?—No, I have not really.

47617. There are a great many advantages to a doctor in having dispensary practice?—Quite so.

47618. You have never gone into that question?—No.

47620. Was it your idea that they should have a dispensary, or that chemists should be authorised to make up the prescriptions?—It could be done by the chemists, and that would be handier for the poor people.

47621. What do they do in the provident dispensary at Leicester?—They have about thirteen branches in different parts of the town.

47622. Have they a limited number of medical men, or are all medical men practically members of the staff?—They have only a limited number, but all medical men of an approved type can be on it.

47623. It has been suggested by more than one witness here that that would be a good system with regard to Poor Law relief?—The dispensary system.

47624. That any patient should be able to go to any medical man he liked and the medical man should be paid by the community. Do you think that would be an improvement?—I think in many cases it would if the man were accepted.

47625. It would depend on the medical man?—Yes.

47626. That would depend on whether the remuneration was sufficient mainly?—There has been a large discussion that every medical man should be a public vaccinator; I was tackled once on that very question, and I said I would be very pleased to share my vaccination with any man if he would take a share of my other work too.

47627. Is the medical profession taking a strong view against all remuneration except by fee?—It is in a way, if that remuneration depends on an absolutely lay committee; that is the position they take up.

47628. You rather prefer a system, I gather, by which the medical attendance should be given by certain specified medical officers?—That is a suggestion of mine.

47629. It should be his exclusive work?—Yes.

47630. You think that the argument is conclusive on that point?—To me it is, because I think you get the enthusiasts then, the men who work for the love of the work, the right type of men who would work well among the poor.

47631. Do you not think the patients would not believe more in a man who had a good practice independently?—Perhaps that is so.

47632. Supposing that the town council took over the medical relief, what provision would you make with regard to recovering the payment from people who could afford it?—By the sanitary authority do you mean?

47633. Yes. You argue rather that the town council should take over curative as well as preventative medicine, it is quite clear that a very great many people would avail themselves of it who are quite able to pay; have you thought out how you would recover?—I have not, except by the means that the Poor Law people have of recovering at the present time; it could be done by those means.

47634. Would you attach any what is called stigma to it?—I should do away with the Poor Law altogether.

47635. You think that proposals on those lines would find favour with your profession as a whole?—I think they would from one point of view, because at the present time the patient of another doctor perhaps runs out of a dispensary, or has not run out of the dispensary, but has to come on to my list for the sake of medical extras; I go into that house, they take a fancy to me and join me under the dispensary; I cannot help them doing that; it would do away with that element of friction.

47636. A scheme of repayment would involve inquiring into the circumstances?—Yes.

47637. That would involve a system of inquiry under the sanitary authority?—It would.

47638. Is there any inquiry in the case of the dispensary?—There is supposed to be, but I have never come across it.

47639. Are there officers to do it, or do the doctors do it?—It is supposed to be done by officers of the institution, but I think at the present time there is no check on it at all.

47640. Do you think in the future your system would lead to this, that practically all medical attendance on the poor would pass into the hands of the Government?—It would in that case.

47641. That is to say that practically individual competitive practice among the poor would come to an end?—Yes, it would.

47642. Do you think that on the whole would be an advantage?—Of course you are speaking of the pauper too.

47643. I am speaking of the poorer class generally?—You do not mean the cases that could afford a penny a week, when you say that.

47644. I think if you abolish all the difficulties in the way of obtaining medical relief in calling it Poor Law and disfranchising, you may find it the fact that a great number of persons would avail themselves of it?—I do not think it should be permitted.

47645. Have you thought how you could stop that? The Poor Law has certain deterrents at present, you propose to abolish those deterrents, what would you substitute?—I should substitute the sanitary authority as a kind of institution instead of the present Poor Law arrangements; at the same time you would have to take over a system of examination of the suitability of the claimants; I think if you did not you would have it abused just the same as the dispensaries are abused at the present minute. I should not propose that you take in those even who are able to pay a penny a week.

47646. But in the case of first aid, so to speak, the summoning of a doctor at once?—That has to be rendered always, regardless altogether of position; that has to be so at the infirmary at the present minute.

47647. Then you would have inquiry after that into the person's means?—Yes.

47648. (Miss Hill.) Supposing that the attendance on the poor was transferred from the Poor Law to the sanitary authority, would you propose it should be free?—That the poor person should not be charged?

47649. Yes?—It would have to be, I think.

47650. It would have to be free?—Yes, I think so.

47651. Here you have 50,000 people belonging to the provident dispensary making some provision for their own medical attendance?—Yes.

47652. You would abolish all that at once?—No.

47653. Practically you would?—But why?

47654. Because if you supply free medical attendance without any connection with the Poor Law at all you do not suppose people will go on subscribing, do you?—They can get free medical attendance now at the out-patient department of the infirmary, but we do not find the membership of the dispensaries goes down.

47655. They do not get it at their own homes at all?—No, not in Leicester.

47656. Does not that make a great difference; is not that one reason they continue at the dispensary?—Yes, I expect that would be so, that they get the advantage of the visiting.

47657. Do you not think a system of free medical attendance would strike at the heart of a good deal of the valuable thrift, forethought and independence on the part of the people?—I do not see why it should, because it is existing at present, and has not done so.

47658. People assume, and you acknowledge yourself, I think, that the fact that it was connected with the Poor Law is a certain deterrent, is not one great reason for which it is urged that it should be transferred to some other body, that it would be free from any taint of pauperism?—Yes, but still at the same time you would Extent of investigation of cases at Leicester dispensary.

Effect of State medical relief on private practice of doctors.

Need for investigation of cases of medical relief transferred to sanitary authority.

Effect of free medical relief on provident dispensary, etc.

get the same sturdy people who stand out from the Poor Law arrangements at present who would still stand outside a public medical service, you would not find them availing themselves more of a medical service than of the Poor Law, they are of that type.

47659. That is not what is generally found, I think, but you think it would be so?—That is my experience.

47660. They certainly would not be so numerous would they?—They are not what you would call a numerous class.

47661. Do you think it would strike at the heart of a good deal of the independence of the people in partially providing for themselves?—Not if the careful inquiry were made that now is made by the Poor Law, not if the same careful inquiry and repayment were enforced.

47662. You would have a duplicate system of inquiry?—I should transfer the Poor Law to the sanitary authority and have the same restrictions.

47663. And appoint the same relieving officers practically?—It would have to be something of the sort, as we have at the voluntary hospitals at present.

47664. Do you have inquiries from your voluntary hospitals?—Yes, very strictly now in Leicester, the last year or two has made a great difference.

47665. How would you manage with regard to the medical comforts and necessities, would you have them supplied by the sanitary authority also?—They would have to be, I suppose, would they not; it would be a general thing all over the country.

47666. What would be the great advantage of it?—The great advantage of it would be that you would not have the overlapping between the two systems, you would have, as Mrs. Webb said, the preventive and curative systems under the one authority, you would have them working in unison.

47667. At present the preventive is practically the supervision of tangible things such as houses, drains, roofs, and so on?—Yes.

47668. And the medical attendance of the people is committed to the Poor Law, is that not so?—Yes, but not altogether. Those sanitary inspectors who go round if they hear of illness in a house always inquire about it. In the case of any suspicious illness they make inquiries.

47669. And refer the cases to the Poor Law?—Their own doctor, whatever that may be.

47670. (Mr. Loch.) Who is their own doctor?—Whoever it happens to be.

47671. (Miss Hill.) A large number who belong to this provident dispensary would have their own doctor?—Yes.

47672. Is there any difficulty in that?—Not the slightest.

47673. I fail to see what is gained by the substitution, I cannot see the overlapping?—That case is not a sample of the overlapping; for instance, supposing I were a district medical officer of health under the sanitary authority, I should have the privilege of perhaps telephoning for an ambulance and sending my case in instead of notifying it on the Monday night, the sanitary inspector going to see it on the Tuesday morning, reporting to the medical officer of health on Tuesday afternoon and then the ambulance going for the case.

47674. That would be equally possible with the Poor Law authority, would it not, if the body who supervises is willing to do that, there is no more difficulty in your doing it by the Poor Law authority than the sanitary authority?—No. Take the case of urgent cases of smallpox.

47675. You have sometimes to get your guardians to perceive that it is important for them to put the ambulance at the disposal of the medical officer of health?—In those cases we are entirely dependent upon the sanitary authority, the guardians have nothing to do with it in the case of smallpox, for instance.

47676. Infectious diseases are under the sanitary authority, but the other diseases are under the Poor Law?—Yes.

47677. I gather it is the Poor Law cases in which you have delay?—You have delay in any case, I am speaking in reference to the Poor Law cases particularly just now.

47678. There is no reason why one should not be as rapid as another, given the goodwill of the authority?—Quite so.

47679. (Mr. Loch.) Could not regulations be made which would meet your difficulty without having a large transfer, such as you propose, from one authority to another?—I have never thought of that really; I have never thought this question out particularly, it is difficult to pass an opinion on it straight away.

47681. What I want to find is, if there is a sufficiently strong ground for the change you propose. I do not see where there is the overlapping you refer to. It would seem that if the medical officers, the sanitary officers or authorities had their own province, and the Poor Law officers their own, that co-operation between them was quite possible?—The overlapping is in this way; there is a case where the sanitary authority at present relieves the Poor Law, namely in zymotic diseases; they are absolutely dependent upon the sanitary authority for provision for them.

47682. Does that do any harm?—No.

47683. Does it affect Poor Law relief badly?—No, I should say it does not affect it at all; it rather relieves it.

47684. The history of these provident dispensaries is this, is it not; they began free and grew into provident dispensaries?—This began as a free dispensary, and gradually became a provident dispensary.

47685-7. What was the history of that?—It commenced in a little place in Free Lane in Leicester, it was formed as a free dispensary, I think at a time when there was not that provision for out-patients at the infirmary; I believe three or four doctors started it as a kind of free out-patient department, and it gradually developed into a provident institution.

47688. That was due, was it, to the necessity of such a centre being started owing to there not being an out-patient centre at the infirmary?—Yes, at first, but not in later years, not in my time.

47689. With regard to the general hospital, what is the inquiry that is made there, to which you refer?—A personal inquiry by the House Manager, I think they call him.

47690. Does that tend to limit the numbers there?—Yes, the out-patients have gone down since that has been going on.

47691. How long has it been on?—Two years, I think.

47692. Has it led to more cases coming to you, as the Poor Law officer?—Not to my knowledge.

47693. From your general knowledge of the district?—No; perhaps I have to see them oftener as dispensary patients.

47694. You have not traced it as between the two?—No.

47695. Had you before you, in making your suggestion, the idea that there should be one body for the medical relief of Leicester, including the voluntary hospitals?—I think it would be better worked if they were all under one organisation; I distinctly say that.

47696. Had you thought of it at all in detail, whether you would leave the voluntary hospitals voluntary, and yet bring them into co-operation in some manner?—My idea is that the hospitals should always be on the rates.

47697. You would start with that as a principle?—I would.

47698. Do you think your provident dispensaries also should be on the rates?—No, they can exist apart.

Investigation of cases by voluntary hospital and effect thereof on out-patients' department.

Proposal for rate maintenance of voluntary hospitals.

Dr. William Frederick M'Allister-Hewlings. 47699. Why draw a distinction; you admit the provident dispensary is in one sense a charity?—But voluntary hospitals, as far as I can make out, are always in debt because they are not properly supported, and the balance should be made up out of the rates.

26 Mar. 1907. 47700. Do they do bad work because they are in debt?—No.

Proposal for rate maintenance of voluntary hospitals. 47701. Is the work at the general hospital bad?—No, excellent.

47702. It does not receive any money from the rates?—Not at present.

47703. Its goodness does not depend upon its receiving money from the rates, does it?—Not its goodness, but its service; it is not able to serve so many people as it could if it had more money.

47704. Every institution must have its limitation, even the Poor Law with the rates behind it or a municipal authority with the rates behind it. Do you not judge the institution by the good work it does rather than the limitations imposed upon it?—I was thinking it could be made more useful.

47705. What would your scheme be?—I think if we had a subsidy from the rates each year.

47706. If the effect of that subsidy was to make the hospital poorer still and private donations to fall off, would that be an advantage?—It would not.

47707. Have you thought whether that would occur?—I do not see why it should; that subsidy be given at the end of each year and depend upon what was required.

47708. Have you had any experience in these matters?—No, because it has never been attempted.

Proposed old-age pensions for members of friendly society. 47709. With regard to the friendly societies you say in paragraph 31: "Again if some arrangements of old-age pensions could be arranged with the friendly societies, instead of their members dying in receipt of Poor Law assistance while their funds amounted to millions, we should have a condition of things which would materially relieve the rates." Have you been into the question of the number of members of friendly societies that die in receipt of relief; is it a point you have studied?—No, only from different cases I have come across personally. I have not studied it in numbers at all.

47710. Particular instances?—Yes, particular instances.

47711. Were those cases where the persons required special treatment in old age?—Certainly, they required special medical attendance.

47712. Practically, whether the man was a member of the friendly society or not, it would be difficult for him to find anywhere outside the Poor Law the kind of special treatment for old age he required?—In this special case I am thinking of it was impossible, his sole income was 2s. 6d. a week, and he required medical extras.

47713. The suggestion I made is whether the question of the pension outside the house would really meet the difficulty, because, as I understand, the treatment inside the house was wanted as medical treatment in old age and was special to the case?—But that was a type of man that would never go into the house, you would not get him in.

47714. What did you do with him?—Treat him outside as a pauper.

47715. Did he suffer in consequence?—No, I think not.

47716. Is there any grievance in it?—No, but I do not think the man ought to come on the rates if he had been a member of the Foresters thirty years when they have a fund of a million and a half.

47717. He received all his benefit from the society to which he paid?—Yes, he received benefits according to their rules.

47718. Therefore he was in receipt of full benefit according to their own terms, the only thing was that when he was sick in his old age that did not suffice?—That is so.

47719. You think on a ground like that it is necessary to alter the whole system?—I think these big corporations called friendly societies should be made to disgorge to their members.

47720. Are you a doctor to a friendly society?—Yes.

47721. What is the lodge?—I am doctor to the Foresters, I am on the Foresters' staff.

47722. Is it one lodge?—It is composed of about fourteen lodges, the lodges being combined in one medical association with a medical staff.

47723. Would you find out of those a great many men go to the Poor Law?—Not a great proportion.

47724. A very small proportion?—I can only speak for my own district.

47725. Taking your own district, a very small proportion?—Much smaller than members of the dispensary, for instance.

47726. You have not worked out a percentage at all?—No, I have not.

47727. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Is there any arrangement between the guardians and the town council taking fever and infectious cases?—Not that I know of.

47728. When a case of smallpox or fever occurs in a pauper case what exactly happens?—It is taken straight away up to the isolation hospital and comes under the sanitary authority at once.

47729. Do the guardians pay?—I do not believe they pay anything.

47730. Is the case treated in the hospital by the sanitary authority after it is taken over?—Yes.

47731. Is the area of Leicester the same for the borough as for the Poor Law area?—That I could not say.

47732. It is one parish in Leicester?—Yes.

47733. Is not the parish the same as the borough?—I suppose so, but I could not tell you.

47734. Is any order given for admission into the hospital?—No, as a rule in a case of infectious disease like smallpox we simply telephone up to the medical officer of health and he sends the ambulance straight away for it.

47735. So the case is admitted into the hospital on the order of the Medical Officer of Health practically?—That is so.

47736. There might be an arrangement, might there not, between the guardians and the town council under which cases might be sent direct to the hospital by the order of the district medical officer in the case of infectious disease?—Quite so, by arrangement.

47737. I see you suggest that Poor Law medical officers should be debarred from outside practice, are you thinking of a large town like Leicester or are you speaking generally?—Speaking generally.

47738. Would that be possible in the case of a thinly populated district?—There would be difficulties in rural districts undoubtedly.

47739. You would say, probably, that the area of the district medical officer should not be too large?—Quite so.

47740. And, of course, unless it was a considerable size the guardians could not afford to pay him a sufficient sum to involve his devoting his whole time to his duty?—I do not see why they should not be able to do that.

47741. Would there be any need for requiring a man to give his whole time to his duties unless he had sufficient work to take up his whole time?—There would be sufficient work, in my opinion, for at least two or three men.

47742. Work as district medical officer?—Yes, as district medical officer.

47743. I am talking now of a rural area?—I am speaking of Leicester. In a rural area you would have to do as you do with the medical officer of health—in the urban centres they are barred from private practice, in a rural district they are allowed private practice, that is the only way you could work it, I suppose.

26 Mar. 1907.

47744. (Chairman.) You are medical officer of health for Northampton and superintendent of the borough hospital for infectious diseases?—I am.

47745. You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your evidence in chief if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

LOCAL OPERATIONS FOR MEDICALLY ASSISTING THE POOR BY THE SANITARY AUTHORITY.

1. The Public Health Department deals with the ordinary infectious diseases in the usual way. On notification of a case the sanitary inspector visits, obtains information, leaves a paper of instructions, and also a statement of the law on infectious disease, and arranges for the removal of the case to hospital if necessary. The vast majority of cases of scarlet fever among the poor are removed to the borough hospital. Cases of diphtheria, and typhoid fever are dealt with either at the borough hospital or at the general hospital. All cases of small-pox are taken to the borough hospital for small-pox. In the case of measles or whooping cough notified from the schools, the house is visited, and if a doctor is in attendance nothing is done beyond offering the supply of disinfectant which is available free for all cases of infectious disease; if there is no doctor in attendance the Health Visitor leaves a leaflet on the management of the case and also explains the leaflet.

2. Special measures are in force for pulmonary phthisis. The council retains six beds at Kelling Sanatorium, Holt, Norfolk, four for males, and two for females; to these selected cases in the earliest stages are sent. This arrangement has been in existence about nine months. Advanced cases who appear to be a danger to their relatives are admitted to one of the borough hospitals, that on the Welford Road. There are ten beds in this hospital available for such patients; these have been open about a year. I understand that there is a special ward for consumptives in the workhouse infirmary. In addition, all cases of pulmonary phthisis notified to this office are visited and instructions given to them as to how to live. Sputum bottles are supplied to them free of charge.

VOLUNTARY EFFORT, ETC.

3. There is in this town a large general hospital containing 164 beds which serves the town and county. Patients are admitted on letters from subscribers, if suitable, but emergency cases are also taken in as required.

4. The hospital also has a large out-patient department where patients unable to pay a doctor are treated on presentation of a subscriber's letter.

5. For those able to pay a small amount there are two large dispensaries: 1. The Northampton Friendly Societies Medical Institute, which employs two doctors; its membership, I understand, runs into five figures. 2. The Royal Victoria Dispensary, in which there are five medical officers.

6. Lastly, several of the medical practitioners of the town have organised dispensaries of their own, in which for a small yearly payment medicine and advice in illness is obtainable.

MEDICAL ASSISTANCE BY ONE AUTHORITY ONLY.

7. The view that I take of the functions of the sanitary authority is that it should be concerned with the prevention of disease. It is true that the curing of those committed to its care in hospitals for infectious diseases is also undertaken, but this is only incidental to the necessary isolation of the cases, and not its primary work.

8. To a certain extent this principle has been violated in Northampton by sending early cases of phthisis to a sanatorium, but this arrangement is only of recent existence and is tentative.

9. Next, in the cases of the poor who are ill nothing is more obvious than that often it is not so much medicine and advice that is wanted as good food; this is especially true of consumption, yet this can hardly be considered

"medical" assistance, and in the event of medical assistance being handed over to the sanitary authority, the necessary supply of food would presumably come from a different authority, probably after some delay.

10. Again, if preventive medicine and curative medicine were both in the hands of one authority, there would be difficulties in the way of organisation. To secure harmony and economy of administration there should be one official head for both sections, as it would be important that each section should assist the other. The result would be that the official head would find it practically impossible to keep an even balance between the two in some respects incompatible aims; his personal predilections would incline him to one side, with the result that the other side might suffer.

11. Even apart from this it is probable that the cause of preventive medicine would suffer, as the knowledge of the causes of disease has not advanced to anything like the same extent as the knowledge of methods of cure. The tendency would be for the curative to swamp the preventive aspect of the question. The number of diseases to which preventive measures can be successfully applied is small, and there is not sufficient known about the remainder, whether as regards what preventive measures are likely to be successful, or what causes are to be prevented. As examples of both these conditions I may instance measles and cancer. There are still a great number of experiments to be made, both in the laboratory, and practically by the sanitary authority, before trustworthy conclusions can be arrived at. In my judgment it is not desirable to turn away any of the energies of sanitary authorities into a different channel till these conclusions have been arrived at, a process which will take many years.

SUFFICIENCY OF MEDICAL ASSISTANCE.

12. There is no evidence that the health of Northampton is suffering from any insufficiency in the medical assistance available for the poor. The death-rate in 1906 was 11·6, which is considerably below the rate for the country generally. The borough was extended in 1900, so that the rates before that are not comparable with the present rate, but there has been a drop since 1901, when the rate stood at 13·9.

The death-rate from phthisis has sunk from 2·06 per 1,000 in 1876 to 0·87 in 1906; there has been a drop even since 1901, when it stood at 1·21.

47746. (Chairman.) How long have you been medical officer of health for Northampton?—Rather over four years.

47747. You have under you, I assume, an infectious hospital?—Yes.

47748. You have also certain special arrangements for pulmonary phthisis?—Yes.

47749. Do those come under you or do they come under any other medical officer?—The late cases which I mention in my statement, advanced cases, come under me absolutely, there is no other medical officer concerned. The early cases are selected to be sent away to this sanatorium in Norfolk by one of the medical men in the town. They, however, first of all come to me before they are sent to him.

47750. I assume pulmonary phthisis is a notifiable disease?—Voluntarily so.

47751. All the medical men notify to the health authority, I suppose?—Those who notify do so to the health authority, to me.

47752. Is phthisis very prevalent in Northampton?—No.

47753. What is the condition of the health of Northampton? Is the death-rate low?—Yes, I think it is the lowest of any manufacturing town; last year it was so, if I am not mistaken.

47754. The boot trade is not an unhealthy trade?—Improved In my opinion it is not.

47759. On the whole, you are not in favour of the amalgamation which has been suggested?—I am not in favour of it; I should like, however, to obtain if we could, information as to sickness from the Poor Law medical officers; if that existed I think it would be an advantage.

47760. Would you take over vaccination?—Yes, I think that would be an advantage.

47762. (Mr. Loch.) You refer to the medical officer of health, that is to say yourself, wishing, or thinking that it might be useful to have returns of sickness from the Poor Law. Would you just elaborate that a little? What do you wish?—It is in this way. I suppose that there are many diseases which we do not tackle at present which are really preventable, and it would be useful, supposing a medical officer of health wanted to examine or investigate a particular disease, for him to get hold of the cases sooner than he does through the death returns, in order to make his investigations. I think that the medical officer of health, if he has an idea that a certain disease is prevalent should, if possible, try to get into touch with the patients. That is only tentative, and his investigations might lead him nowhere, but I think he has a duty, if his ideas lead him in that way, to investigate.

47763. Should I be right in saying at present there is no register of disease available from the Poor Law?—That I cannot answer, I am not under the Poor Law authority.

47764. But to carry out your purpose would it not be desirable there should be?—Yes, if such a thing does not exist at present, I think it ought to exist and be accessible to the medical officer.

47765. It is not notified to you in any form at present? Need of —Of course we get the death returns, but no sickness further notification of disease by district medical officers to medical officer of health.

47766. I am taking your own point, that you want it before that?—I do not say there is not such a register, I do not know.

47767. It is not notified to you?—No, it is not.

47768. If you had that, would you feel that your position was very much strengthened in dealing with the sickness of the district?—No, I should not; I should only feel that I was in a position, if I wanted to investigate a particular disease, to investigate it.

47769. But it would show you, I suppose, more clearly what the particular location of the sickness is, where you might find out geographically that a certain amount of it came from particular areas; would not that be a help to you?—I get that from the death returns at the present time, after death. The only value to me would be to get hold of the patient and talk to him, it would only be if I wanted to investigate a particular disease.

47770. Have you had anything to do with the Poor Law guardians?—No.

47771. Neither now, nor before?—No.

47772. Do you feel you could answer a question as to whether relief being given by the Poor Law guardians is unduly deterrent; that is to say, is there any reason for thinking that as there is a safeguard to be considered, this relief is so given that people who should be relieved do not receive it?—I have no information whatever on the subject.

47773. Have you health visitors of any kind?—Yes, Health visitor at Northampton and estimated number required.

47774. A paid one?—Yes.

47775. Has she any voluntary assistants?—No.

47776. Do you think that in a large town, one should suffice?—No.

47777. What would your staff be, if you wanted a staff sufficient for your purpose, as you conceive it, in a town like Northampton?—We do not at the present time, unfortunately, visit the houses where births have occurred, because my staff is too small and the health visitor has other work. Roughly, 2,000 births occur in Northampton per annum. I should imagine that one, and possibly two additional health visitors would be required in order to give the necessary instruction in these cases.

47778. Are you able to deal with these phthisical cases when they come home from the sanatorium, from the point of view of supervision?—We supervise every case, so far as we can, which is known to us; do you mean as regards obtaining them work. Supervision by sanitary authority of convalescent phthisis cases.

47779. No, I was thinking from the point of view of health after they left the sanatorium and returned to their normal life?—They are visited regularly.

47780. By the health inspector?—Yes, it is part of her duties.

47781. Have you ever considered whether it would be possible to get voluntary help of a sufficiently good standard to assist you in such cases as those?—The question has come before me, certainly, but I have not yet organised it; I am not quite prepared to say whether I could get it sufficiently so in Northampton, or not.

47782. As new questions of this kind are pushed on to the sanitary authority, the question of visitors will become more and more important, will it not?—I should imagine so.

47783. Is there any unwillingness to pay for health visitors?—Do you mean by the sanitary authority. Attitude of sanitary authority to increase of health visitors.

47784. By the municipality?—There is a strong feeling at present that there ought to be no addition to the official staff of the town.

47785. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Can you tell us anything of the housing conditions in Northampton?—On the whole conditions they are fairly satisfactory for a town of its size. The more recent houses are fairly well built. Northampton is a garden city, that is to say, nearly every house has a garden of some kind or other, and the slums have been largely cleared out under the Housing of the Working Classes Act. Housing conditions in Northampton.

47786. Have you left open spaces where they cleared the slums away?—Not dedicated them as open spaces for all time, but spaces exist now, over which houses will be built.

47787. They are not meant to be left as open spaces?—No.

47788. Is there any attempt to control the growth of the town and the way it is laid out, so as to be healthier?—That I am not in a position to answer, except that we demand that certain regulations and bye laws should be carried out.

47789. Is there any large amount of overcrowding, do you think?—Practically none, judging on the standard of two persons per room. I should not think we have had occasion to serve notices half-a-dozen times in the year on the subject.

47790. Is there a sufficiency of houses?—Yes, quite.

47791. And rents would be low?—They vary from 3s. 6d. upwards.

47792. Are they all of the cottage type, or do you have blocks?—All of the cottage type.

47793. Are there any back to back houses left?—There may be a dozen at the outside, but there are not more.

47794. Really the good health might very possibly be attributed to the housing conditions?—Unquestionably that has had its effect, and also, of course, the soil has something to do with it; Northampton is built on exceedingly easily drained soil and on a hill. Another great advantage from the town point of view is the comparative absence of smoke. I should imagine that it is the cleanest manufacturing town in England.

47795. Are you able to get your manufacturers to consume their own smoke?—They chiefly use gas engines.

47796. (Mr. Gardiner.) As medical officer of health have you anything to do with the school children who are now under the corporation?—Not as medical officer, but I have had some experience in the matter in this way, I generally visit our schools if there is an epidemic disease prevalent, and if the school teacher asks me I examine a few children. As regards the general question of medical inspection of school children, in order to reach some views on the subject myself, I took one school, and I went through the boys' school, and also through the girls' school, weighing and measuring, examining eyes and ears, and also other matters in connection with them; I have not quite analysed my returns yet, but I have done that altogether with about 600 children.

47797. Supposing you were able to give more time, do you think it would be for the benefit of public health for you to overlook the children's health carefully?—I do.

47798. And with an enlarged staff, you would like to do that?—I would.

47799. That would affect health conditions generally, would it not?—In my opinion it would.

47800. You would then come across cases of overcrowding, which you might never hear of otherwise?—Yes, but we do house to house inspection now.

47801. But your staff is hardly as large as you would like it?—I have four sanitary inspectors, in addition to the one health visitor I mentioned.

47802. That is enough you think?—It is a very fair staff for a town of that size and character.

47803. Is measles compulsorily notifiable?—No.

47804. Would you like to have it made so?—No.

47805. Is there any other disease you would like to have made notifiable?—I would like to have consumption compulsorily notifiable.

47806. Any other disease?—Not that I know of.

47807. (Mr. Phelps.) Will that return with regard to the school children be published?—As regards the reason of it, I was asked to make a report to a special committee of the sanitary authority upon the subject, and in order to do so I had first of all to learn something of the subject myself, and that is the way I took to do it. I do not think it will be published, it will only be made for the benefit of the sanitary authority.

47808. (Mr. Bentham.) You have the system of voluntary notification of phthisis?—Yes.

47809. Is there a fee paid?—Yes, the same fee as is paid for ordinary infectious diseases.

47810. You do not say in Paragraph 2 of your statement that all cases are notified, you say: "All cases of pulmonary phthisis notified to this office are visited and instructions given to them as to how to live" etc.?—That is the point, because they are voluntarily notifiable I take it for granted all are not notified.

47811. You have not come across cases that have not been notified in the usual way?—Yes, we frequently come across cases in the death returns, we hear of cases regularly. Last year I took out the number of cases notified as compared with those who had died and I found of those who had died we were only acquainted with a little over 60 per cent of the cases previously.

47812. Therefore you urge compulsory notification?—I do.

47813. In the case of those that are sent away to the sanatorium I suppose the corporation bears all the expense?—Yes.

47814. What do they do with regard to the families of people sent away?—They have done nothing up to the present.

47815. You do not know whether relief has been necessary or whether it has been given under the Poor Law?—It may have come through the Poor Law.

47816. Do you keep these six beds fully occupied?—That has been the aim this year as an experiment. I may say the result has not been such as to justify that experiment being continued, and the council have agreed to reduce the amount that they contribute for that purpose. We do not intend to keep these six beds fully occupied in future, in fact we are only allowing for about one bed for the whole time, and another bed for a month or two; we are only going to send very few cases next year.

47817. Is it because the cases have not come under your notice early enough?—That is my view, and they will not go early enough, although we know the cases that we believe would be suitable; I write to them and ask them will they come and go to a sanatorium if considered suitable, they write to me and say they are not willing to go, that they are doing very well now. Six months afterwards they are willing, probably, but then they are unsuitable.

47818. Would you advocate compulsory removal of those cases?—No, because those cases are in the early stages, and therefore are not to any extent infectious.

47819. Would you advocate removal at any stage?—I would under certain conditions; if there was no isolation possible at home in the advanced stage, I would.

47820. You would treat it as an ordinary infectious disease?—Precisely.

47821. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to the children, assuming that the Bill before Parliament passed and that you had means of medical inspection and treatment, would you suggest that the medical officer employed for that inspection should be under the medical officer of health?—Will you not say "medical inspection and treatment," will you say "medical inspection" alone.

47822. I was thinking of the Bill as it is at present?—I understand that only gives permission to treat. If you put it on the ground of medical inspection only I should prefer it to be under the medical officer of health.

47823. Would the difference of the Bill being medical inspection and treatment, which I believe it is, dissuade you from having it under the medical officer of health?—No, I should prefer it simply to be under the medical officer of health because it would be the lesser of two evils, but only for that reason.

47824. The point I want to get at is whether you want that officer under you or not?—I do.

47825. I gather that although you object generally to the combination of treatment with preventive measures, you do not object in respect of phthisis?—Yes I do, my isolation and treatment of advanced cases is purely from the same reason that we isolate cases of diphtheria or smallpox.

47826. But you do not object to the treatment of those cases?—No more than I object to the treatment of smallpox.

47827. You regard treatment there as necessarily connected with prevention?—Unquestionably, we have taken these people on as a trust and we must treat them.

47828. So in many cases treatment is incidental?—Precisely.

47829. Has the area of that incidental quality increased at all in the last thirty years?—I should think so, I should imagine, for example, that consumption has come under it.

47830. Do you know what proportion consumption bears to other diseases in adult life?—I have not worked it out for Northampton, so I cannot answer that question just on the spur of the moment. I know it causes a very great number, but I cannot exactly tell you how many.

47831. So that is a very great area in which you get both prevention and treatment?—Precisely, but I apply it only in the case of advanced cases.

47832. You would not favour any kind of treatment in the early cases?—Not by the sanitary authority.

47833. You would leave those to the Poor Law?—If they require treatment I think the Poor Law ought to take it on. I would certainly instruct them how to live in order to prevent them infecting others.

47834. You would have hygienic advice in the early stages?—Yes, in order to prevent the infecting of others, it is not for their own cure; please understand I am not instructing them in order that they may get well.

47835. I am not considering your purpose, but your practice, your practice is hygienic advice?—Yes.

47836. And your practice is treatment in the advanced cases?—That would be so.

47837. I gather you do not object to the health officer giving medicaments in the case of diphtheria?—Because it is the lesser of two evils. I do not think there is any other way of getting it. I should prefer that came through the authority that relieved the poor.

47838. In practice you prefer to do it yourself?—Because it would be better than nothing.

47839. In practice you prefer that the health authority should give free medicine for diphtheria?—No, pardon me, that is going too far.

47840. Free medicaments, I use your own words in your annual Report for 1904, "treatment by anti-toxin" (reading to the words) "on request." You are in favour of that I gather from this?—Yes, if the Poor Law authority will not do it, if the Poor Law authority would take it up I should prefer they should.

47841. The Poor Law authority must apply the usual deterrent principles to prevent the people coming on the Poor Law?—Precisely, if that be so, and there is an expensive measure that will prevent disease spreading and there is no other way of preventing it, I think in that case the sanitary authority ought to do it.

47842. In practice they ought to give this medicament?—Yes.

47843. As regards infantile diarrhoea, are you against the practice of the Manchester Town Council giving the diarrhoea mixture?—The question has not come before me, nor am I convinced that it is such a preventive.

47844. You say that diarrhoea is the great King Death?—Yes, I indulged in a little rhetoric there.

47845. And therefore you would not positively say that you were against giving medicine in an epidemic of diarrhoea?—I am not prepared to say so, but I think there is a better way of doing it, and that is by hygienic advice to these people as to how to keep their children in health.

47846. And is not hygienic treatment the greatest part of the treatment?—Not when they are ill.

47847. You still think medicine is the real part of the treatment?—Yes.

47848. I believe you give hygienic advice?—Certainly, before they are ill.

47849. I notice in your directions for the feeding of infants your hygienic advice goes on after the time they are well, it continues when they are ill; you do not stop your health visitor giving hygienic advice when the child looks in a bad state of health, do you?—I do not think you will find that anywhere in my report. I think you will find in the case of infant feeding I put at the end of my directions, "If the child does not thrive under this method call in a medical man."

47850. I quite agree about that. You would not object to the health visitor, when the child looks sickly advising a different kind of feeding?—I should strongly object. I should say it is not the health visitor's business.

47851. Not to give medicine, but to give hygienic advice?—Yes, in advising a different kind of food she has taken on medical advice there which I think she has no right to do.

47852. She is giving definite hygienic advice here?—Yes, that is hygienic advice.

47853. You say in the "Directions for the feeding of Infants" in your Annual Report "an extra feed may be allowed for very weakly infants during the night"?—Yes.

47854. What is the meaning of weakly, is it not ill-health?—Certainly not necessarily ill-health; it may be the case of a child that has been prematurely born and is not up to full weight.

47855. Surely that is a case of ill-health?—Yes.

47856. You are therefore instructing your health visitor to advise them to give an extra feed during the night when they are in a weakly state?—One cannot hope to mathematically draw the line. I think, as to the line I have drawn, although it may be hazy at certain points, it is fairly strong. I think a case of that kind does not transgress the principle.

47857. You give treatment in all infectious diseases as a necessity?—As a necessity certainly.

47858. You give hygienic advice where the illness is being caused by bad habits, in the case of the mother suckling a child?—Yes, before the child is ill, I hope.

47859. And when the child is weakly?—When the child is weakly if you like.

47860. I gathered you regard early diagnosis as of importance in checking smallpox?—Yes.

47861. Would not that point to a certain amount of careful medical inspection?—Smallpox, at any rate, does not offer any practical difficulty in that matter, because in Northampton at any rate, if a man suspects he has a case of smallpox he sends for me.

47862. You mean a medical man?—Yes.

47863. Supposing it is a case in a common lodging house and the person does not get medical attendance?—If a person is ill of smallpox it generally makes them very ill for the first day or two and they would apply to the parish relieving officer, but in any case it is part of the duty, if I am not mistaken, of the keeper of a common lodging house to inform the sanitary inspector if there is any illness.

47864. I know it is his duty, but I am told it may not be carried out?—I do not know what it is elsewhere, but as far as my recollection goes it is tolerably well carried out with us.

47865. Do you consider that the treatment of a case ever leads to an early discovery of an infectious complaint? I mean to say, supposing you had more medical treatment in poor homes, would you discover cases which are not now discovered?—That is an exceedingly difficult question to answer.

47866. (Mr. Nunn.) With regard to inter-communication with Poor Law officers, I am afraid I do not quite understand the point. I thought you said that you did not think it necessary to get lists of persons who are suffering and are being treated by the Poor Law medical officers, because your death returns furnished you with the information that you required. Did I gather that?—I state that I should very much like to have access to registers if those are kept (I do not know whether they are kept or not) of sickness treated by Poor Law medical officers.

47867. With regard to consumption, may I ask how long your town council sends the patients away for?—That is largely left to the discretion of the Kelling Northampton sanitary authority.

authorities, but if the case is doing well it would never be kept less than three months, and it might be longer.

47868. I want to ask your opinion whether you think that three months, which I think is a very usual time for patients to be kept at sanatoria, is really sufficient, not of course for the acquisition of knowledge of what persons habits ought to be who are suffering, but whether it is actually long enough for the formation of habits with regard to the cure and the prevention of the spread of the disease?—It is long enough for the improvement of the habits.

47869. Habits with regard to sputum, ventilation, etc? —I think it is long enough for the formation of these habits.

47870. Are you of opinion that the feeding up which persons get at these sanatoria is prejudicial or the reverse to their continued progress after they return to their own conditions, which are generally, of course, less suitable?—I do not think there is any probability—I speak as a medical man now specially—that it is prejudicial to their health afterwards, but, of course, if they cannot maintain the high standard of nutrition after they come home, they must fall back, but I do not think that in itself it is injurious.

47872. May I ask whether you keep the returns of all your phthisical cases and have any means of following them up after they have returned from the sanatoria?—Yes, we are notified when they come home, and we watch them. We have developed an after-care committee of the local branch of the Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, to which these cases are referred, but you will observe that is a purely voluntary effort.

47873. You employ their health visitors?—They do not have any health visitors.

47874. Then how do they watch their cases?—The after-care committee tries to get the patient work after he returns from the sanatorium, but further than that—at the present time at any rate (it is only of recent formation—they would not follow the case; we, however, keep in touch with the case through the health visitor because she visits the homes in which any consumptives live regularly.

47875. That is the health visitor of the sanitary authority?—Yes.

47876. With regard to the question that was raised by Mrs. Webb, I suppose there is an alternative between the Poor Law and the sanitary authority acting, that alternative might be filled up by some voluntary body which came in and gave assistance to a person, assistance that was not legal at all?—Yes, certainly.

47877. Is there any organisation of that sort in Northampton?—In so far as this local association tries to obtain work for them.

47878. But it does not supply them with nourishment, supposing they really are deterred by the Poor Law, because they are very highly respectable people, for instance; there is no charitable or voluntary body that would take up their case and assist them?—Not by itself; they might get assistance through the churches, or something of that kind, to which they belong.

47879. But it is not organised assistance?—No.

47880. I confess I do not quite understand in what way the continuation of the preventive and curative assistance in two hands secures harmony and economy in administration; I do not quite see what point you arrive at in Paragraph 10?—My point is this, if you do the blending your aim must be to secure harmony of administration; if you do not do the blending there is no necessity to secure harmony, no more occasion than there is to secure harmony, say, between the police force and the Poor Law, or anything which is totally unconnected with it. If you do the blending you must try and secure harmony; if there is no blending there is no necessity.

47881. In the case of smallpox, is there any loss of economical efficiency; if it comes under one authority would it not increase efficiency?—If a case of smallpox occurs under any Poor Law medical officer I am at once informed of it.

47882. You have to send to the public vaccinator before you can vaccinate, or do you take that into your own hands?—Northampton is one of the centres where views on anti-vaccination are extremely prevalent, and 70 or 80 per cent. of our people avoid vaccination altogether, but of course I would accept the view that vaccination should come under the sanitary authority, because I think that is essentially a matter of preventive medicine.

47887. You do not think you would gain any real advantage if you had to deal with the cure as well as the prevention of such a disease as consumption?—I do not, provided I know where the cases were; that, I think, is essential.

47888. That you would get by compulsory notification?—Yes.

47889. (Mrs. Webb.) Do I understand that you are now against the special municipal dispensary for consumptives that you advocated in 1905?—I am not against that municipal dispensary, because I advocated it as a way of getting hold of the cases.

47890. You did propose to treat there?—Undoubtedly, because it is the lesser of two evils.

47891. I only want to get clear that you do propose to treat with regard to phthisis?—In order to get in touch with the cases.

47892. I am not considering your purpose?—If I had compulsory notification I should get in touch with the cases.

47893. (Mr. Loch.) Mrs. Webb asked you a question with regard to a purpose; is it not necessary that your purpose should be stated in order that the question should be properly answered?—That was my idea.

47894. Would you mind stating your purpose, because that qualifies the answer?—My idea in advocating this dispensary was to get hold of the cases.

Tramps as a vehicle of small-pox.

Extent of co-operation between guardians and sanitary authority as to housing conditions, etc.

Absence of connection between housing conditions and pauperism or infantile mortality at Northampton.

47895. (Mr. Nunn.) I think I was asking you whether voluntary notification is any assistance towards the adoption of compulsory notification, or whether it is the reverse. Supposing you came across a borough where there was no voluntary notification at all, would you be inclined to advocate voluntary notification as a means of educating public opinion?—I would.

47896. (Mr. Phelps.) Have you many common lodging-houses in Northampton?—Only about six.

47897. Do they come under your inspection?—Yes, at least there is an inspector of common lodging-houses in my department.

47898. Have you ever traced epidemics to them?—No, not to them—not since I came to Northampton have I ever traced an epidemic to them.

47899. Or to tramps coming into the casual ward?—I have found a case of smallpox in the casual ward, but I have not traced any outbreak of the disease to any particular person.

47900. Then would you say you do not think that is a source of danger which requires to be guarded against?—I do think that smallpox has been brought to Northampton through tramps in certain cases, but that is only an inference, a guess, not a proved thing.

47901. Does your department have any relations with the board of guardians on such points as overcrowding? Have you ever had a case reported to you by the board?—I believe the relieving officer has reported in one or two cases that a house has been extremely filthy, and our inspectors have visited it and dealt with it.

47902. I gather from you that Northampton is very free from bad areas as regards housing and so forth?—Yes, it is at present.

47903. Are there any areas in it that you connect with pauperism?—Do you mean simply because the people in the area are very poor?

47904. I will put it in this way—where the social condition of the people is due to the character of the area that they dwell in?—That would mean that the houses and their surroundings were so wretched that the people had no inducement to self-respect?

47905. Yes?—In my opinion, I do not think so. I think that almost any house could be made tolerably decent.

47906. It has been put to us in evidence by some medical men that there is a great loss of life in consequence of the surroundings in which confinements take place; is that your experience in Northampton?—Of course that would mean that some puerperal accident had occurred. As a matter of fact, there were only two cases of death from puerperal fever last year, and about two deaths from puerperal fever in our average for years past—sometimes there are none. On that ground, I should think probably there is no great loss of life from that cause.

47907. Nor to the children?—No more than through the ignorance of the parents.

47908. All I want to lead up to is this: would you be in favour of a public establishment in which confinements could take place?—That is asking me a very wide question. I do not think it is fair to ask me to answer that without full consideration.

Dr. GEORGE HENRY PERCIVAL, called; and Examined.

Dr. George Henry Percival.

26 Mar. 1907.

47919. (Chairman.) I think you are surgeon to the Northampton General Hospital, district medical officer of health, and Poor Law medical officer for the Hardingstone district of the Hardingstone Union?—Yes.

47920. Where is Hardingstone?—It adjoins Northampton on the south and east sides for some distance.

47921. You have prepared for us a short paper which we will take as your evidence-in-chief, if you will hand it in?—Yes, I will do so.

The Witness handed in the following Statement.

1. My qualifications are that I have held the post of surgeon to the Northampton General Hospital for nearly thirty years, and for almost the same period have acted 47909. You think there is no evidence that the health of Northampton suffers from the insufficiency of medical assistance available for the poor. Do you know what the proportion of doctors is to the population in Northampton?—Yes, I can give you the actual facts upon that subject. I find that there are registered as giving addresses in Northampton, forty-two doctors, of whom twelve are not in practice. That leaves thirty who are in practice, and the population was between 91,000 and 92,000, I calculated, in the middle of last year.

47910. It is reckoned, is it not, that one doctor to a thousand population is, I will not say a proper proportion, but a possible proportion?—It is supposed that a moderately well-to-do population of one thousand persons will support a doctor.

47911. We will put it that way. You do not think a thousand people in Northampton would support a doctor?—I am sure they would not.

47912. That may be due to the healthiness of the town. Have you any large number of what in towns are called sixpenny doctors practising among the poor?—I speak under correction, as I am not quite sure on the subject, but I do not think there is much of that. The way it is worked is through dispensaries, that is to say, they have people joining a dispensary and paying a certain amount per month, and then they get treatment for that.

47913. Those would be individual dispensaries, so to speak?—Yes. I would say—I think I have mentioned it in my statement—that we have two public dispensaries, if I may call them so, and then a great number of medical men have organised individual dispensaries.

47914. Those competing, I suppose, rather with the larger ones?—Yes, unquestionably.

47915. Do your medical dispensaries have a staff of doctors, or are all doctors eligible for membership?—Take, for example, that medical institute which I mention in my paper; it has two doctors who are employed by that institute and paid salaries. As regards the other, the Victoria dispensary, I understand there are five medical men on the staff, who receive, I believe, the amount that is paid into the dispensaries in proportion to the number of patients connected with the dispensary that enter under them.

47916. Would you describe those as charities; take first the Northampton friendly medical institute?—No, I should not imagine that was a charity.

47917. Would you describe the second, the Victoria dispensary, as a charity?—That depends upon the view that a medical man takes when treating a case—whether he considers that if he gets below a certain amount of money, therefore he is giving charity. I do not know whether that enters into their minds at all, or whether they simply look upon that as a source of income. That I could not answer.

47918. That is what I really wanted to get answered. Do you think the five medical officers regard themselves as doing a charitable act to the poor, or do you think they are well paid for their services?—There is a member of a partnership one of whose members is connected with the Victoria Dispensary present here to-day, and I think you should ask him that—not me.

as medical officer of health for the villages round three sides of the town for about five miles, and have also had a country district under the Poor Law.

2. In my district there are two rural district councils looking after the sanitary needs of the population. One of them has an infectious hospital for the treatment of infectious cases, the other makes no provision for such cases, which are consequently treated in their own homes. Both councils of course look after the sewage, drainage, water supply, insanitary houses, milk supply, factories and workshops, etc.

3. I act as medical officer under the Poor Laws to the Hardingstone district of the Hardingstone union, one of the three districts to the whole of which I am medical officer of health.

Proportion of doctors population at Northampton.

Medical clubs and non-Poor Law dispensaries at Northampton.

Medical assistance the poor rural district council.

Attitude of Hardingstone Union towards outdoor relief. 4. This union is much against too much outdoor relief being given except in very urgent cases: the number of orders is small, and mostly only very old people quite past work apply for medical relief.

Prevalence of the aged in country districts. 5. The district is almost entirely an agricultural district, and the population is diminishing. It consists largely of old people, as most of the young ones prefer to migrate into the towns, where wages are better and there are other attractions.

Voluntary Effort.

Northampton voluntary hospital. 6. The Northampton General Hospital takes in all accidents and emergencies at once freely. The unions subscribe, and any severe case or one requiring operation is admitted into the hospital by letter, either from the union or from a private subscriber.

Northampton Victoria Dispensary. 7. The Victoria Dispensary covers a small part of my area close to the town. Poor people subscribe so much yearly and their families are admitted and entitled to medical relief from any one of six medical officers whom they may choose.

Medical clubs. 8. Medical clubs exist, but mostly for men, though there are one or two small female clubs in my district. The men are entitled to attendance during illness and receive so much per week whilst ill. The medical man is paid as a rule about 4s. per year per member. In some of the female clubs provision for midwifery attendance is made.

Prevalence of infectious diseases by medical officers. 9. The sanitary authority, and this only in one of my districts, takes charge of the infectious cases. In almost all cases no fee is charged now. I have urged that this should be done, as it popularises the hospital, people go into it more freely and we can thus more easily prevent the spread of an epidemic. It is also for the good of the whole district that the epidemic should be quickly stayed and so the expense should be borne by the whole public in my opinion.

The Poor Law.

Relief to the aged and members of clubs. 10. Orders given are few, mostly to the very aged, and these generally because through being out of work they are unable to keep up their payments or in some cases they have joined a club which has become bankrupt. I have known instances of great hardship from this latter cause, men have paid into a club for years and when approaching old age the club has failed.

Prevalence of infectious diseases. 11. Medical clubs have become so common in this district that it is only in exceptional cases like those I have mentioned that recourse is had to the Poor Law. There is a feeling amongst the better class poor against Poor Law relief and I think the number of Poor Law orders given now must be considerably less than fifty years ago.

Prevalence of infectious diseases. 12. The overlapping is mostly that now the medical clubs do the work of the old Poor Law. Then the infectious cases come under the sanitary authority as distinct from the Poor Law and the Poor Law subscribe to the hospital which admits their worst cases by letter and their operation cases. A large number of instruments are also supplied yearly by the hospital in exchange for letters.

Prevalence of infectious diseases. 13. To hand all medical care of the poor over to one authority would, I think, be very difficult. There seems, however, no reason why infectious cases should be treated by the sanitary authority and other cases by the Poor Law except that the taint of the Poor Law might prevent people making use of the infectious hospital. I think medical clubs should come under some form of Government supervision.

Prevalence of infectious diseases. 14. I do not think the health of the community suffers at all from insufficiency in amount of medical assistance, if anything there is too much of this and it would be far better if there could be more consolidation.

Prevalence of infectious diseases. 15. As regards quality the local village doctor generally is obliged to take the Poor Law appointment to keep out other competitors and the Board are obliged to appoint him, having no choice in the matter. The village doctor is the same person that as a rule attends all the gentry and others in surrounding villages, and is much better up in his profession than was formerly the case. The appointment is also for him worth holding, as he is practically now paid twice over—once by the Poor Law and again by his club for, at one time, most of the club patients came under the Poor Law.

47922. (Chairman.) Your evidence, I see, relates generally to Hardingstone?—Yes; I supposed I was asked to come here to speak about rural districts.

47923. The Hardingstone Union is a union which is purely agricultural, and its population is diminishing?—That is so.

47924. Are the medical clubs that you speak of in the Hardingstone district, or are they in Northampton itself?—The medical clubs I refer to are in the rural district of Hardingstone.

47926. What is the reason of this development of the medical club? Is it because the people who get medical relief from the Poor Law have felt rather the stigma of being attached to the Poor Law, or is it, do you think, because they did not think they got adequate medical treatment from the Poor Law?—I think they objected to the term "paupers" for one thing. I do not think they thought that the medical treatment was any the worse, because I had a club at one time in one of the villages, so they got just the same treatment.

47927. These clubs, I understand, have practically superseded Poor Law medical relief?—They have almost entirely.

47928. What sort of remuneration does the medical officer attached to the club get per case?—He gets about 4s. a year. I think that is the rule.

47929. How many persons were there in the club of which you were the doctor?—I forget how many there were at the time I had a club. It was only in one of the villages.

47930. Has the amount of pauperism in Hardingstone gone up or down in recent years?—I think it has gone down.

47931. Assuming a case is a serious one, I suppose the medical man can get the case taken into the Northampton General Hospital?—The guardians subscribe to the Northampton General Hospital, and in any very serious case would give an in-patient's letter. That is mostly done for operations.

47932. Would they do so, even if the man was not a pauper?—Yes, I think so.

47933. Then you refer to the Victoria Dispensary; is that in this Poor Law district?—Most of my district is entirely rural, but it is rather difficult to describe it. There is a little tiny part out of Northampton, just bordering on Northampton—a suburb of Northampton—which comes into my district for Poor Law purposes, but which is out of it for sanitary purposes; so it is a little bit complicated. The Victoria Dispensary goes into that. Then also the staff of the Victoria Dispensary will attend patients in the villages, if the patients will pay the doctor's fee for going out; that is, if they will pay a sum extra.

47934. The Victoria Dispensary is very much on the same footing as some of these medical clubs, I think?—Yes, it is; but it only takes a few villages round Northampton, just the nearest villages. No doctor would go more than a mile or two, as it would not pay. There are some villages nearly ten miles out, which the Victoria Dispensary would not touch.

47935. What is the population of the Hardingstone district?—The population of the Hardingstone district is 7,846. Besides that, for Poor Law purposes the Far Cotton district, which is the little suburb that I was referring to as being attached to the town, has a population of 4,086. Really the rural district has a population of 7,846 now. In the census before that it was 8,420, so it is going down considerably.

47936. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Is that the rural district that you are speaking of?—Yes, I am only taking the figures for the rural district.

47937. (Chairman.) Would you go so far as to say that you think the fact of medical relief being associated with the Poor Law is a deterrent, and prevents people getting medical relief when they require it?—I do not think so, because there are so many of these clubs now that they always go to their club doctor.

47939. That is not quite my point either. My point is this: Does the fact that the relief they get is associated with pauperism prevent them from applying as soon as they otherwise would if there was no such stigma?—I think it does.

47940. You state that you think that feeling had something to do with the formation of these clubs?—Yes, I certainly think it had.

47941. Are these clubs general throughout Northampton?—I should say they are everywhere almost throughout Northamptonshire.

47942. Though perhaps not proportionately on the same scale?—I think they are almost universal in Northamptonshire. I do not know any village without a club.

47943. You are not in favour of amalgamating the present medical service with the sanitary authority, I gather?—In rural districts they are practically the same authority, are they not? The board of guardians meet, and then, when their Poor Law business is over, they continue sitting and then they call themselves the rural sanitary authority, but they are the same people.

47944. I rather read your Paragraph 13 as expressing an opinion contrary to such an amalgamation?—I think my idea is exactly different. It is rather ridiculous to call these people the guardians in the one case and the sanitary authority in the other. If it were all under the rural district council, it would be much better, no doubt, and it would avoid the stigma of pauperism being applied.

47945. What is the meaning of these words: "To hand all medical care of the poor over to one authority would, I think, be very difficult"?—First of all there is the distance. I was taking it that you meant the one medical man for the whole district.

47946. I beg your pardon. As regards the appointments connected with the Poor Law, one of the inducements to a medical man to take such an appointment is in order to keep somebody else out?—Yes. A medical man who settles in a village must do that, of course.

47947. Because he not only gets whatever may be the emoluments from the Poor Laws, but he also gets the chance of setting up a club or being connected with a club?—Yes.

47948. Would you be in favour of medical officers being paid for their whole time?—There would not be sufficient in a rural district for them to do.

47949. Take a big town district?—In a big town district you would have to break the work up; one man would not be able to do the work, I think.

47950. Would you be in favour of paying a whole-time officer?—Do you mean as Dr. Beatty is paid whole-time as medical officer of health?

47951. Yes, to give up your whole time?—I think in large towns you must have it so.

47952. (Mr. Bentham.) That is, instead of a general practitioner being paid a small salary under the Poor Law, a medical man should be paid for his whole services and give all his time?—In a town?

47953. In suitable areas?—Yes.

47954. (Chairman.) Are you in favour of that?—I am.

47955. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) But such a medical Proposal man would not be able to cover the whole area of a good whole-time sized town, would he?—Not at all—taking the Poor district Law work and the medical officer of health's work as medical officers in town, and difficulties in connection therewith.

47956. In fact, you would be obliged to have more than one such officer in a place the size of Northampton?—Yes; the work would have to be divided.

47957. It would probably be a more expensive plan than the present one then, would it not?—Yes.

47958. There might not be enough work for that man in a particular area, and yet if he was to go beyond that area the distance would be too great for him to do his work, and so the man would not have this whole time fully occupied?—Are we talking of towns or rural districts?

47959. Of towns?—I suppose that would be so in towns.

47960. The Victoria Dispensary is a provident dispensary, is it not?—Yes.

47961. Might I ask you what the people subscribe yearly? In Paragraph 7 you say "so much"?—I think it varies a little according to the number of the family, but I think it is 4s. and upwards. I have not the figures with me, as I did not know I was going to be asked about the town work.

47962. Do you think their subscribing 4s. to that gives them an idea that it justifies them fully in making a call upon the medical man?—Yes. If they go for six months without their doctor, they think they ought to have a bottle of medicine certainly.

47963. They think they are being done out of something; they have paid their 4s., and they are not getting anything for it?—Yes; that feeling is very common.

47964. (Mr. Phelps.) Are you one of the doctors of the dispensary?—No, but my partner is.

47965. Then I might ask you the question that I left off with Dr. Beatty. Do doctors, as a rule, regard it as a lucrative form of practice?—Yes.

47966. They do?—The treasurer of the dispensary is here. One doctor has taken more than £1,200 a year out of it.

47967. Which there would be great difficulty of recovering probably in the ordinary way?—Certainly from that class of people it would be difficult to recover it in the ordinary way.

47968. That doctor would not regard it as a charitable undertaking on his part?—No.

47969. But as a pure matter of business?—Yes.

47970. At a 1d. a week you can afford to do that?—Quite so.

47971. Do you know at all what the average rate of wages is in your district, the Hardingstone district?—Average wages are 13s. 6d. in Hardingstone rural districts. It might be put down that the average is from 13s. 6d. to 15s. a week.

47972. Are those the wages of the adult labourer?—Yes.

47973. In most houses there would be something else coming in, would there not—either the wife would work, or the son would?—Yes, and then they always get a little cottage with a bit of garden.

47974. I was coming to that. Is the family income often different from the individual income of the head of the family?—Where there are grown-up children, of course it would be; and I think very often there are.

47975. What do rents average with you?—They average about 2s. a week.

47976. For that can you get a good cottage?—For that you can get a good cottage and generally a bit of garden, or, if not, there are generally some allotments which they can take at a very cheap rate.

47977. Do you find that the people who come under your care have suffered from insufficient housing or bad housing?—That has improved a great deal of late years. As medical officer of health, I have had the worst cases cleared out; but there is a great deal of difficulty in that, and we cannot clear out all that we should like to, because it is very hard on the cottagers, as the landlords will not put up fresh cottages.

47978. You act for the guardians, do you not?—Yes.

47979. If you report a case as being badly housed for the purpose of cure, would they offer the workhouse to such a case?—They probably would, but I do not think such a thing has ever occurred.

47980. Do you ever recommend cases as being more suitable for treatment in the workhouse than at their homes?—No; I do not think I ever have done so.

47981. In the average cottage in villages which you visit, what number of rooms would you find?—Two at the most, as a rule, I should say.

47982. In the Northampton hospital that you attend, have you any special class of disease, any local malady, any particular disease I mean running through a large number of cases?—No, except you might say tuberculosis. I think we might say there are a good many of those cases.

47983. Do you think it is more rife with you than it would be in an average parish in England, or in the district?—I do not think it is so common as it used to be, especially taking tuberculosis of the bones. I can remember the hospital I am afraid more than thirty years ago when I was a pupil there, and then we certainly had more cases of tubercle in the bones and joints than we have now.

47984. On the whole, you think it is becoming less?—I think so, in the villages especially. The housing is better and I think tuberculosis is gradually decreasing.

47985. (Mr. Gardiner.) I do not quite understand the end of Paragraph 13 where you say, "I think medical clubs should come under some form of Government supervision"?—Some of these clubs used to be village clubs. They used to join amongst themselves and form a club, and then they got the medical relief, and also a certain sum per week for themselves when they became old men. Then as time went on, the younger men did not join these clubs, but they joined rather the Hearts of Oak and the other friendly societies; but the old men were of course getting older, and they drew more on the funds. So the club would break up, and that threw a great many of the old men on their beam ends as they got older.

47986. What kind of Government supervision would you desire?—All clubs could be registered, could they not?

47987. You want compulsory registration then. Anything more—about the audit?—Yes, certainly.

47988. They ought to be audited by a certified Government auditor?—Yes, I think they ought to be.

47989. Anything further than that? Would you say that every man should have a copy of the Government Report?—Quite so, and then if the audit shows that it is coming to grief, there should be power to break the club up and distribute the funds as far as possible.

47990. Start at the other end: Would you allow a group of labourers or working people to start a club of this kind without Government permission?—I do not think you ought to. It will come to grief again in the same way, and then it will be very hard for them as they grow older.

47991. So you would like to see a Government licence before the club is started, and Government inspection after the club is started?—I think I should.

47992. (Miss Hill.) You do not suggest that Government supervision is required so far as they are purely medical clubs; it is only when there is sick benefit attached to them you think that is required?—The doctor would be the only person to suffer in the case of a sick club failing.

47993. You are not proposing this supervision from any feeling that the medical attendance is insufficient or unsatisfactory?—No, and I do not think it is, because they could change their doctor directly.

47994. There is no dissatisfaction with the clubs, or with the medical attendance provided by those clubs?—No.

47995. (Mr. Loch.) Has this growth of clubs been due to the fact that the Poor Law guardians of the district have adopted a restrictive line in regard to medical outdoor relief?—I suppose one could not say that altogether, because it is so universal. I do not know that all guardians have been restrictive.

47996. You have referred to the medical relief being given on loan; is that a common practice in the area of which you have been speaking?—It is done in the Hardingstone district, and it is done in the Olney district in Buckinghamshire, I know; but I think it is not done in the Brixworth district.

47997. So that you think this is to a large extent a natural outcome of the people, irrespective of the Poor Law pressure, so to speak?—Yes, I do think so.

47999. Is there any reason why what you have done or what has been done in this union should not be done all over the country?—None at all.

48000. Do you think that the relief in other cases is more attractive, and that that is the reason for its not being done; or have the doctors not pressed it?—We cannot press it unless we get orders, and there are not many orders given.

48001. The doctors have, I suppose, manufactured by degrees this system of medical aid through their clubs as an alternative?—Yes, I suppose they have.

48002. Do you think that that might not equally be carried out throughout the country?—Yes.

48003. So in your opinion, judging from your experience, one may say that the Poor Law medical relief of the country might be reduced infinitely if this system prevailed everywhere?—Yes. I think the villages only suffer in two directions. They do not get sufficient nursing, and the midwifery is very bad indeed. The Midwives Act is absolutely a dead letter.

48004. To get those two things righted, would you be prepared to suggest that the nursing, to take that first, should be provided in connection with voluntary associations?—Yes, certainly; that was my meaning.

48005. Would you be prepared for the guardians paying for the nurse, if she has been so provided?—My idea was more that it should be done in connection with a voluntary association. They are doing that very much in South Northamptonshire, where Lady Knightley has taken up the scheme so very much. They have five districts, and there are four or five villages, according to the size, in each district; and each person by paying so much a week has a call on the nurse according to their circumstances, so that the very poorest person by the payment of 1d. a week, that is, 4s. a year, can get this nurse to attend his or her family.

48006. Is there anything in the industrial conditions of those districts that makes it easy for them to do that, but will make it difficult elsewhere?—Not at all; it might be done everywhere, I think.

48007. As to the midwifery, is it your idea that it could be treated in the same way?—This nurse attends to the midwifery in the same way. At present, in my district, the old midwives are practically attending, and they are registered; but they are the most ignorant people possible.

48008. Are they beginning to promote this nursing and midwifery method in other parts of Northamptonshire?—They hope to extend it; it is gradually extending.

48009. Is this being done by a county association?—No. Lady Knightley has taken it up in her district mostly, that is in South Northamptonshire.

48010. But it is spreading?—It is spreading a good deal there.

48011. Have the doctors done their best to bring this new system into their unions?—There has been a little breeze, because Lady Knightley would not have the doctors on the medical committee. The British Medical Association took it up, and had some correspondence with Lady Knightley, and as a compromise for the time, to see how it works, two doctors are now on Lady Knightley's committee.

48012. Then your evidence comes to this, that, at any rate in this county, which is not singularly exceptional, the voluntary element, given good sway and well led, can practically meet the demands of medical relief?—It would entirely, I believe.

48013. (Sir Samuel Provis.) I am not quite sure what your view was about these whole-time officers. Let us first of all take the case of a town. Is it your view that a district medical officer might be required in the case of a town to give his whole time to his duties?—I did not come prepared to think the matter out as regards towns, I am afraid.

48014. Then let us take the other case?—I think if you combine the medical officer of health's work and the Poor Law work, you would have to cut it up into districts in the case of a town like Northampton with a population of 90,000. That is what I am thinking of.

48015. In a case like Northampton, which has a population of 90,000, how many officers would you want?—You would want three officers to do that work, I think; but you must cut it up in a certain way.

48016. Do you think it would be desirable that the medical officer of health's work should be cut up in a town like that; or do you think it would be better that there should be one such officer for the whole town?—I think it better that there should be one such officer myself.

48017. Even if that were the case, it would be possible so to divide the town that the district medical officers' work might require the services of whole-time officers?—Yes.

48018. Would you think that desirable?—Under one public health officer I suppose you mean, so as to embrace the whole of the town?

48019. Not necessarily; that would be another matter. Could a town be so divided that the district medical officer's work might require the services of whole time officers?—I think it might be done.

48020. (Mr. Bentham.) That means the medical man being paid a salary to give his whole time for Poor Law purposes for a given suitable-sized area, instead of being paid a salary as now and doing private practice?—I think there would be many objections to that. I have not thought it out yet. But I think that poor people would not like it at all.

48021. (Chairman.) Not having whole-time officers?—The poor people would not like to have a whole-time officer. "He is only a pauper doctor" they would say; and they would not like it.

48022. (Sir Samuel Provis.) They would have just as much choice as they have now, because they can only send for the Poor Law medical officer for the district in which they reside?—Yes; but there are three different district medical officers in Northampton, and they are all in private practice.

48023. But a particular poor person who wants a doctor cannot choose any one of these three?—No, but then if he sent for a whole-timer—a pauper doctor—that would be a sort of stigma.

48024. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Every one of those three is attending to private practice, you say?—Yes, every one of them.

48025. (Sir Samuel Provis.) There are cases, of course, where district medical officers do give their whole time to their duty?—Not in the country districts.

48026. But in the towns?—In very large towns.

48027. Now take a country district; would you not say the area would have to be too large if a man was required to give his whole time to the duties of medical officer?—Yes; and then the distance the people would have to send for medicines and for a doctor would be also against it.

48028. (Mr. Bentham.) Have you ever known cases of people who are in receipt of Poor Law relief being members of a medical club?—I have known cases where they have been members of a club, and have come down, I think, in most cases.

48029. Have you known people who are receiving outdoor relief and paying their pennies into these medical clubs at the same time?—No, I do not think so.

48030. You do not know of such cases?—No, I do not.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

SOCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL CONDITION OF UNION.

Social and industrial condition of Brixworth
Union.

1. A rural district consisting of thirty-six parishes. Population (1871), 13,866; (1901), 11,829. Rateable value (1871), £102,232; (1901), £109,350. The increase of rateable value arising from increased assessment of railway, construction of waterworks to supply Northampton, and development of ironstone workings.

2. The district is about the centre of the county of "Squires and Spires." The spires remain, the squires have departed, their places occupied by hunting men often non-resident except in hunting season, and as a rule recognizing no local responsibility.

3. Agricultural land has depreciated in value from 10 to 40 per cent. in the last thirty years, much laid down to grass, and there is less labour required, the otherwise surplus labour being employed in the ironstone works.

Lack of success of small holdings and
allotments.

4. Agricultural tenancies average from 200 to 300 acres. Small holdings and large allotments have been tried here and there but without much success. The agricultural labourer finds that a small garden at his cottage door and a rood of allotment ground pays him much better. Almost every village is well provided with allotments.

Industries and wages in Brixworth
Union.

5. There is a small pinafore factory at one village (Spratton) and a shoe factory at another (Walgrave), otherwise the district is purely agricultural, small home industries such as lacemaking and shoemaking have almost disappeared. The agricultural labourers' wages are nominally 14s., being about 1s. increase in thirty years, the purchasing power for 1s. is, however, for necessities, more than twice what it was thirty years ago. Skilled labour is getting scarcer as more machinery is introduced. Young men gravitate to the towns for the big shilling.

6. Co-operative Societies are strong in three or four villages, notably in one, Harleston, where the whole distributive trade, including the public-house, is co-operative, one result being that debt has disappeared.

7. Almost the whole of the male industrial population belongs either to local or affiliated benefit societies. The former as a rule are insolvent and their amalgamation with the latter is very desirable but difficult to effect. Only one is so amalgamated. The National Deposit Society has not yet "caught on." Medical clubs for the women and children are very general.

8. Pauperism is comparatively small but has very largely increased during the last twelve years for reasons explained below in paragraphs 18 to 20.

9. Of the thirty-six parishes a considerable number of the smaller ones are "close parishes." The apparent advantages of these must be largely discounted. They have a tendency to weaken independence while the fictitiously low rent of the cottages tends to depreciate the market value of cottage property elsewhere and as a consequence to depreciate its quality and to increase the difficulty of the housing problem, as well as to affect injuriously the character of the people and the rate of wages.

PECULIARITIES OR EXPERIMENTS IN POOR LAW ADMINISTRATION.

10. During the strict administration of the Law which began in 1873 and continued until 1894, a medical club was formed for the whole union district of which each parish was a branch and each guardian a steward. By means of this the restriction and gradual abolition of outdoor medical relief was effected, a further consequence being that by degrees each parish was induced to provide its own medical club, and the union medical club ceased to exist.

11. A small charitable fund to which three or four gentlemen contributed was placed at the disposal of the Chairman (myself) to meet exceptional cases. At first this was worked without the cognisance of the guardians, but subsequently it was (unwisely, as I think) administered with the knowledge of the whole Board. It was never intended to become permanent, and as the outdoor pauperism decreased it was less and less required.

THE RESPECTIVE MERITS OF INDOOR AND OUTDOOR RELIEF.

12. Indoor relief has the merit of being:—

- (1) An effective test of destitution.
- (2) The only safe way of giving a right to relief.
- (3) The only sure way of applying the first principle of the Poor Law, that the lot of the pauper should be less eligible than that of the independent poor.
- (4) An assurance to the charitable and the necessitous that no one need starve.
- (5) If well managed, a place of more or less comfort for the unfortunate and more or less discipline for the undeserving.

13. Outdoor relief is a purely mischievous system, demoralising to rich and poor and largely responsible for the pauperism of the country.

CLASSES OF PERSONS APPLYING FOR RELIEF.

14. Mostly from the agricultural class of labourers, who have been encouraged to think that they have a prescriptive right to outdoor relief when past work.

15. The partially disabled, pedlars, hawkers, women earning a little by charing who want just a little in aid of earnings and whom it will be so cheap (the guardians think) to relieve.

CAUSES OF PAUPERISM.

16. Ignorance, outdoor relief, endowed eleemosynary charities, indiscriminate charity, insanitary conditions, bad cottages, free hospitals, especially the out-patient department.

CLASS OF PERSONS SEEKING ELECTION AS GUARDIANS.

17. Clergymen (a few), farmers, small tradesmen, artisans, and occasionally a labourer.

PARTICULARS AS TO ADMINISTRATION OF THE UNION.

18. Until thirty-five years ago the administration was very lax with the usual results; in 1872 one person in every twelve was a pauper, at a cost of £8,406.

19. In 1872 a reform was begun, and administration became careful; outdoor relief gradually restricted until in 1895 there were (January 1st) seventy-three indoor and but eighteen outdoor paupers and total pauperism one person in every 126. Total cost, in-maintenance and out, £1,039.

20. In 1895 the devil broke loose again after the Act of 1894 elections, and the number of paupers, both indoor and out, have largely increased, standing (January, 1907) at 101 indoor and 127 outdoor, total pauperism one in forty-three. Total cost in and out maintenance, £2,326, an increase of £1,287.

SUGGESTED REFORM IN LAW OR PRACTICE.

21. The following suggested reforms are the outcome of my experience as a guardian:—

- (1) Abolition of out-relief, the one thing to be aimed at.
- (2) President of the Local Government Board to be a permanent appointment.

429—IV.

- (3) Stipendiary chairmen without voting power.
- (4) A guardian nominated by the Local Government Board for each union.
- (5) Enquiry by experts on the spot as to extremely pauperised and extremely depauperised unions.
- (6) His Majesty's Inspectors to inspect out-relief cases from time to time.
- (7) Prohibitory Orders strengthened by limiting exceptions to "sudden and urgent necessity."
- (8) Rules of administration approved by experience to be made Poor Law Orders.
- (9) Abolish Law of Settlement.
- (10) Abolish compound householders.
- (11) Make out-relief a parochial and in-maintenance a union charge, in the event of (10) being carried out.

22. The main difficulty connected with Poor Law administration in the rural district is the indifference of the general public and the almost entire ignorance of the subject on the part of the guardians.

48032. (Chairman.) You are rector of Harleston, and you have been guardian and chairman of the Brixworth Board of Guardians in Northamptonshire for a good many years?—Yes.

48033. That is a purely agricultural district, is it not?—Yes.

48034. I see the population has considerably diminished during the last thirty years?—Yes.

48036. That club is still going on, I understand; is that so?—The club that I started was the union club. There were no medical clubs in our district when what I might call the reform began in 1873. With a view to restricting outdoor medical relief and starting medical clubs in the various parishes we started a club for the whole union, of which each parish was a branch and each guardian was a steward. That had the effect of practically doing away with the necessity of medical relief from the guardians and of starting medical clubs in each parish. There are medical clubs now in each parish, but Poor Law medical relief has begun again, since 1895.

48037. If you have a serious case in these medical clubs, you are able to transfer it either to an infirmary or to a hospital, I think?—That would rest with the doctor, and whether he thought it necessary to do so; if he thought it necessary it would be done.

48038. You have had a very long experience as a guardian, and the result of your experience has made you very hostile to outdoor relief?—Yes, it has.

48039. You go so far as to suggest that it should be altogether abolished?—Yes, I should like to see it abolished.

48040. Have you had any experience of the administration of the Poor Law in a big industrial centre?—No, none at all.

48041. Would you be disposed to apply so drastic a rule to an industrial centre?—I should, but I should not like to speak about industrial centres, because I do not belong to them. Still I think that what is good for the country in the long run would be good for the towns.

48043. Did you ever have cases of that kind?—I do remember one. No doubt there were more. That was a case of an old man and his sister living together in a most miserable condition—only one bedroom upstairs and one room downstairs. We thought, and I think rightly, that that was a disgraceful condition for them to be in. They resisted coming into the house for a very long while, and they were privately helped I suppose by their friends in the parish, otherwise they could not have lived at all. But the conditions became worse, and they at last came in, both of them. If I remember right, the man went out after a certain time and came back again, and I think they both died in the workhouse. I will not be quite certain about them both dying in the workhouse, as it is many years ago now.

48044. Coming back to the abolition of outdoor relief I assume that under your administration anybody of a bad character and of vicious habits, who was proved to be destitute and wanted relief would, as a matter of course, be sent to the workhouse?—He would be offered the workhouse.

48045. Supposing a fairly respectable couple came up and applied for relief, how did you treat a case of that kind?—We should, first of all, endeavour to find out whether the case was really destitute, what relations there were that might or could help, what sources of relief could be procured in the parish; and if the worst came to the worst, which it hardly ever did, I should have been able to help that case to a sufficient amount from a small charitable fund which I had at my disposal. But that very rarely happened.

48050. It seems to me at the same time that to carry out your ideas it is necessary that there should be some co-operation between charity and the Poor Law?—Yes, at first, certainly, but not necessarily after a while, because I think the abolition of out-relief would by degrees dispauperise a whole district.

48051. You resigned the chairmanship of the Brixworth Board in 1895?—Yes.

48052. And somebody else apparently took your place?—Yes. I did not mean to be personal in that paragraph.

48053. Pauperism has gone up a good deal since?—Yes; it is going up rapidly, I am afraid.

48054. Has the effect of that increase of pauperism been confined merely to its evil results on the Poor Law administration, or does it show itself outside; for instance, does it affect medical clubs, do you think?—It has not done so at present; I do not think the effect has been felt sufficiently for that.

48055. Did the Act of 1895 make much difference in the character and status of the guardians who were nominated?—Yes, it did. There were a good number of guardians who came in who had not very much stake in the poor rate at any rate, and there were a certain number of labourers who were of a class naturally likely to favour outdoor relief, and who of course had been very much interested in the contest that had gone on between those who favoured out-relief and those who were opposed to it. They had naturally taken what was called the popular side, and came prepared to support the popular side, which was the outdoor relief side.

48056. There were labourers on the board, were there?—Labourer. There were two or three when first the Act was passed and the first board of guardians under the Act came in. There are not any now, I think.

48057. As regards your recommendations, I suppose I am right in assuming that what is at the back of those uniform recommendations is a desire to establish uniformity, more ministrations or less?—Yes.

48058. You make various suggestions all with that object. Your third suggestion is that there should be stipendiary chairmen without voting power. What is your idea in having a paid official in that position? Do you mean to have a man who would go round and preside over, or associate himself with, various boards of guardians or do you propose that he should concentrate his attention on one particular union?—My real object in making that proposal was to prevent what is continually happening in rural districts, and I dare say in towns as well, namely, the change of chairman. A strong chairman is very strong for both good and evil, and if you are constantly changing your chairman, it very often happens, especially when the board is equally divided in opinion about outdoor relief, that you may have for one year a chairman very strongly in favour of out-relief, and for the next year a chairman very strongly opposed to it; so there is no continuity of policy, and I think that is a very bad thing for administration. I think on the whole it would be a good thing to have a permanent chairman, assuming that he held views such as I hold myself, and to retain him in that position.

48059. Assuming there is a change of the character you have just described, of course it does not merely affect a particular period, but it disorganises all the administration and upsets the minds of officials?—Exactly.

48060. Your next suggestion is that there should be a guardian nominated for each union by the Local Government Board?—Yes. That is again with the same object in view; and I should like to have added "without power to vote," because I think if these nominated guardians vote, they would excite opposition and suspicion on the part of the other guardians, whereas if they did not vote they would be there merely as instructors, so to speak, of the way in which the relief should be given. There again I am assuming that the Local Government Board will nominate such guardians as I should approve of.

48061. Then you suggest inquiry by experts on the spot as to extremely pauperised and extremely depauperised unions? I assume the object of that would be rather to instruct the guardians, and give them a line as to what a certain course of conduct on their part is pretty sure ultimately to involve their union in?—Exactly so; and I think even here there would be another effect which will be good. It seems to me very hard for a well administered union, which has been going on for a number of years, to have, side by side with it, a very badly administered union; because the poor people cannot understand why relief should be given to A.B. in one union and denied to a similar case in another. That leads to the good unions, where relief is strictly administered, getting a bad name in the district; and it makes it all the more difficult for guardians, who have not got moral courage, to act on their convictions in any particular case.

48062. Your next suggestion is that His Majesty's inspector should inspect out-relief cases from time to time. As I understand, the system at present is such that the inspectors hardly have time to go into that side of the question; they inspect the institutions and so on, but they do not, as a rule, attend out-relief committees?—That is so, but I think it would be a very good thing if they did.

48063. I suppose you would say that the treatment of applications by out-relief committees really dominates the policy of the board?—Yes. I have no experience of the way of administering relief in large unions, but I understand it is done by committees. In small country unions, it is done by the whole board.

48064. Then you would limit the prohibitory orders?
—Yes, I would strengthen them very much, if I could, by certain limitations.

48065. You would tie up the boards of guardians generally by making rules which experience has proved to be correct?—They would be very helpful to the guardians.

48066. And you would abolish the law of settlement and compound householders if possible?—Yes.

48068. I suppose, summing up your experience, you would say that it is exceedingly difficult to carry out on economic, or on what you believe to be right lines, the Poor Law administration on the present suffrage?—Yes, it is very difficult. So long as outdoor relief exists it is impossible to administer Poor Law relief in accordance with the three great principles laid down by the originators of the Poor Law. The only form of relief in which the three great principles can be carried out is workhouse relief. Directly you admit outdoor relief, you open the door to abuses of all kinds, and to great disastrous consequences, both as regards cost and as regards the character of the people.

48069. What should you say were the three great principles of the report of 1834?—The first principle is that relief should be only given for destitution. The second, as I understand it, is that the condition of the pauper should be less eligible than that of the independent poor. The third is that the obligation to relieve should rest, in the first instance, on the next of kin. Whenever those three principles are carried out strictly, without fear or favour, pauperism has been shown, as a matter of history, to be a disease that can be cured.

48070. (Sir Samuel Provis.) I will take one or two of your suggestions. In the case of the stipendiary chairman, do you propose that he should be elected by the board of guardians, or that he should be appointed by the Local Government Board or by some other central authority?—My idea was that he should be appointed by the Local Government Board or by some central authority.

48071. Do you think that the guardians would much relish having a chairman of that kind appointed by an outside body?—I do not think they would.

48072. If they did not, might not that lead to friction?—At first it might, but I think they would get used to it, as long as he did not vote.

48073. You think that not giving him a vote would practically remove that difficulty?—I think they would soon get to be rather glad to have such a man there, and it would avoid that constant friction which there is among the guardians when the election of the chairman has to take place.

48074. Would you not give him a vote in the case of an equality of votes?—I think I would never give him a vote.

48075. What would you do in the case of an equality of votes?—It would have to go in accordance with the usual rule, that is to say, against the proposition that is made.

48076. The next thing you suggest is that a guardian might be nominated by the Local Government Board for each union, and I think you added just now that you proposed that he should not vote either?—I think he had better not.

48077. Would a man under those circumstances care to act as a guardian?—I think if he is fond of the business he would.

48078. But he would have no voice?—He would have a voice to speak.

48078. But not a voice to vote or determine?—Not to vote.

48079. Do you think he would be satisfied with that position?—I think he might be a very useful man indeed, and I should like that position very much.

48080. Your sixth suggestion is that the inspector should inspect out-relief cases. In the Brixworth Union the out-relief cases are dealt with by the whole board of guardians, I understood you to say?—Yes.

48081. Is the inspector sometimes present?—Yes, he is.

48082. Were you contemplating something further than that the inspector should be present when the relief cases were dealt with? Were you contemplating that he should inspect the homes?—Yes, that is what I was contemplating.

48083. What is your precise object in that; do you mind saying?—Because I think if he went and saw the homes of some of the paupers that were having relief, he would be better able to say to the guardians whether they were doing right or wrong. He can never say very much about the out-relief as it is, because he has no practical acquaintance with the poor people in his district.

48084. That is to say, he does not know the circumstances of the particular case, and therefore he cannot say much about it?—He does not know the circumstances, and he cannot say anything about it.

48085. With regard to the prohibitory order, do you think it might be safe to limit the exceptions to it entirely to cases of sudden and urgent necessity?—Yes, I think it would.

48086. Take the case, for instance, of burial expenses?—That is not any difficulty at all in the country districts. They are almost all insured, and the expenses of funerals are almost always covered in that way. If they are not, and there happens to be any difficulty, it can be met. I remember one instance in my experience of nearly forty years of a difficulty in the case of a burial. There was a great disturbance about it, but it was not our duty to bury, and it was not really a Poor Law case, although the overseers tried to throw the onus upon us. We refused to bury, and there was a great deal of ill-feeling created by it. Fortunately for us, just at the same time, or a week after, a similar case happened in another parish, in which it was shown what was the right thing to do. Just a few people put their heads together, and their hands into their pockets, and buried the poor unfortunate person. The effect of that throughout the union, I think, was very good.

48087. Practically in a case like that, you would rely upon voluntary agency; it comes to that, does it not?—Yes. It is a very small amount in question, 30s. would bury a pauper person.

48088. Would you treat a case of sickness in the same kind of way?—In regard to sickness they are almost all in sick clubs in our union.

48089. Therefore we come back to this, do we not, that your plan would only work where you could safely rely upon voluntary agencies of that kind?—My plan would also have the effect of creating voluntary agencies if they were wanted.

48090. Therefore time must be allowed for it to come into operation?—Time, of course, must be allowed.

48091. (Mr. Lock.) With regard to your suggestions 3 and 4, do you propose that the other members of the board who have votes should be elected in the ordinary way?—Yes.

48092. You suggest that the chairman and one of the guardians should be nominated, but you do not say anything about the franchise which elects the ordinary guardians?—I assume they would go on as before, and be the ordinary elected guardians.

48093. Have you found boards of guardians in the country too large for the work they have to do?—No, not as a rule.

48094. Practically you would leave everything just as it is, otherwise?—As regards the guardians.

48095. In all your efforts in regard to outdoor relief, have you come across any cases in which, in consequence of your policy so far as you can test the matter, widows or children have suffered starvation or something approaching it?—No, never.

48096. Have you yourself made inquiry about these cases?—Constantly.

Extent to which charity would be necessary upon restriction or abolition of out-relief.

Classification by character in Brixworth union.

Objection to the county as the Poor Law area.

48097. With that result?—Yes, after the reformation started, the first year I was asked to make an inquiry, which I did with the help of the relieving officer as to what had become of all the cases that had been struck off. The inquiry was a very searching one. I visited many of the cases myself, and the relieving officer followed up every case that had been struck off. The result was most satisfactory, even to those who had opposed our policy. In ten years' time we made a similar inquiry, and that inquiry showed such satisfactory results that we restricted our relief by a few more rules, with the effect that in twenty years' time we practically stamped out out-door relief altogether.

48099. Your proposals depend upon the Local Government Board having a clear policy in regard to the administration of relief?—Yes, that policy being my policy.

48100. Your policy, you say, was originally based on the Report of the Poor Law Commissioners?—Yes.

48101. And since that time on experience?—Exactly.

48102. Without going so far as to make any proposition as to time, would you say experience was large enough to authorise such a body as the Local Government Board to state a definite policy?—I should say so. I should like to add that I think my experience in the small union to which I belong was just a miniature of the Poor Law history since Elizabeth's time.

48103. Following that just one step further, would you say that unless there is a definite declaration of policy on the part of the Local Government Board, there is no solution of this question?—That is what I think.

48104. To take one other point; I understand you to say that although charitable relief might facilitate the change from a less strict policy to a stricter policy, yet it is not necessary to have a large amount of charitable relief in order to make the change?—To begin with, in a badly administered union, if the out-relief were suddenly restricted, you would want a good deal of charitable relief to help you out, but by degrees you would want less and less.

48105. That is to say, if you dealt with your new cases on the new principle by degrees you would get the administration straight?—Exactly.

48106. There was one phrase which I think you did not use, but which might by implication be laid down as being used by you; that was that possibly you would not refer people to the workhouse, because it might be full of bad characters. I noted that at the time, and I thought I would just ask you whether you have not in your workhouse practically such a classification that you can deal with peculiar cases in the manner desired?—Yes, we have. I do not think there would be any danger of that kind. The association of bad characters would be hardly felt; it would be simply the fact that they were at the workhouse which would be felt in a small union of our kind.

48107. Have you any opinion on the question whether there should be such a county administration—I am taking your own districts—that the workhouses should be connected rather with the county as a central organisation than with the local parishes?—I should not like to see it.

48109. Do you think that the local interest helps to make that institution more or less humane, we may say?—It makes it, as I suggest in my statement, more likely to be a place of comfort for unfortunate people.

48110. I should like to ask you a question upon a remark of Mrs. Calverley's in one of the papers which have been sent in to us. She says she believes outdoor relief to be costly, that it checks the instinct of brotherly kindness, that it discourages prudence and thrift, that it weakens family ties, and that it destroys the honourable independence of the working classes. Can you, out of your experience, say whether the instinct of brotherly kindness has been developed in consequence of the line you have taken on the Poor Law?—That would be very difficult indeed to prove. I could not give any definite instance; but when the whole character of a people is elevated and the whole conditions improved, it stands almost to reason that a condition such as you are supposing would be brought about, though I cannot give you any particular instance.

48112. (Miss Hill.) I suppose the policy you have adopted has really been based on the belief that there is more power among the poor to help themselves and one another than is generally believed by well-to-do people in most parishes?—I believe there is quite sufficient power amongst the poor people.

48113. And circumstances have justified that expectation?—Thoroughly.

48114. I suppose if that were so, in 1895 (when, as I understand, outdoor relief was greatly increased) you did not notice any greater comfort in the cottages and among the people in consequence of that?—No, none at all.

48115. So that in the interests of the poor themselves, you would feel that the abolition of outdoor relief was really beneficial?—It was most beneficial. That is the real reason why I advocate it.

48116. It is not a question of mere economy?—No.

48117. But of real belief in what the poor can do for one another and for themselves?—Yes, I have sometimes said I should not have been so much attacked, and it might have been better, if it had cost more to carry out my policy rather than less.

48118. In fact when the attention of a family is concentrated on their own duties, they can perform them for themselves far better than we can perform them for them?—Far better.

48119. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Can you tell us how the change of authority was initiated in 1895? Was there any cry of any special hardship got up?—Yes. Always there was a cry of special hardship going on during most of the twenty-five years I was employed, with others, in carrying out our policy. It came to a head, if you may say that a cry comes to a head—it came, at any rate, to be openly and bitterly expressed, just about 1894, or a little before that, by a political organisation which was got up—an association formed to resist our out-relief policy. In a short while it was headed by a very able exponent of the opposite policy who was just the man they wanted. The association became very strong, so much so that they could influence elections, and they had the power therefore to turn the scale of the board of guardians against me altogether. So my policy was destroyed, and I was ousted.

48120. Did they base their outcry on any special cases, or was it merely a general complaint?—That was the great difficulty. They based their cry on general statements of hardships, and whenever I endeavoured to bind them to any particular case, the case was never produced. But, if I may be allowed to say so, all that came out in the Commission on the Aged Poor, when I was examined. All the hard cases that I could procure were brought before the Commission and described to them; then a subsequent witness produced a number more, and I had the privilege of telling what was really the case about them. I think it may be said that every case entirely broke down when it was brought to the proof. But it was sufficiently strong to influence the people who knew nothing about the subject and who had votes, and consequently my policy was destroyed.

48121. It has been suggested to us rather frequently that to restrict the medical relief, and to throw back the people on medical clubs, is really to throw them back upon incompetent medical help. Have you any information about the help that they get through the clubs?—It is exactly the same that they would have otherwise. The same medical officers are in the union now that there were then.

48122. You mean that they would be the same men attending the clubs who were the medical officers?—Exactly the same.

48123. Can you tell us how the co-operative societies you mention in your statement were originated? Did they arise among the people themselves?—Yes. All useful organisations originate from amongst the people themselves—or almost all.

48124. Do you know whether there was any special campaign on the part of the central co-operative societies to do it?—No, there was not. I have started two, but others were initiated by the people themselves in their own villages.

48125. Does the co-operative public house work well?—Very well, I think.

48126. Do they give dividends on the amount that is drunk; is that the sort of thing they do?—The arrangement is rather curious. The public house is co-operative inasmuch as it belongs to the co-operative society and is worked by a committee of the co-operative society. Then there are two shops in the village, which are both in the hands of the co-operators. The profits on the drink, which are large, as I dare say you know, are given upon the groceries, draperies and other things purchased at these shops, and thereby a very large dividend is given every quarter to the members who purchase at these shops.

48127. Then the dividend is not on the drink but on the groceries?—It comes from the drink.

48128. But it is given in proportion to the groceries bought?—It is given in proportion to the amount of goods they buy at these shops.

48129. (Mr. Gardiner.) Then they do not give cheques on the drink really?—No, they do not.

48130. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) So that when one man drinks and another man buys sugar?—The sugar man gets the profit on the other man's drink.

48131. (Mr. Gardiner.) In your tenth suggestion you say "abolish compound householders." Do you think there is any reason to expect that any House of Commons would have a more restricted franchise for even boards of guardians than they have for the House of Commons?—What I meant was not to abolish the householder, but only to abolish the system of compounding.

48132. So that all should pay their rates direct?—Yes. I have not put my meaning quite clearly there.

48133. What about the franchise?—That would not alter the franchise. An ordinary labourer in an ordinary cottage does not pay the rates, but he gets a vote. Under my proposal, I should do away with that, and see that he does pay his rates. But he would not lose his vote, and there would be no difference to him except that he would have to pay his own rate and would know when it was increased.

48134. Do you think that you could get a continuity in policy in accordance with the suggestions you have made it you were to abolish this compounding?—I think that would help towards it. My real idea is that he would begin to feel the inconvenience of having a very extravagant system of relief—and the relief must be extravagant if there is outdoor relief—and he would begin also to feel that he would not like to see some of his neighbours having relief which he had to pay for.

48135. (Dr. Downes.) In 1895 you tell us there were but eighteen outdoor paupers; does that eighteen include those who were in receipt of medical relief only?—There was no medical relief then; it had been abolished some time before—at least we did not abolish it, but there was none, as they were all in medical clubs and we always refused to give that relief.

48136. Could you carry in your mind what proportion of the indoor relief at that time was sick cases?—I cannot say.

48137. Coming to the later period (1907), when you have 101 indoor and 127 outdoor, is that increase to any extent due to the increase in the number of the sick?—No. It is the ordinary relief given to the ordinary applicants. Some would be sick, some incapable, and so on.

48138. You do not think it is a disproportionate increase due to sickness?—No, not at all. There has been no epidemic or anything of that kind.

48139. With regard to the fate of the union medical club which was eventually superseded by parish clubs, what was the reason that the parishes superseded the union club?—Personally, I always encouraged the parishes to have their own club. It was rather an inconvenient business to carry on the union club, and the guardians did not very much like being stewards, and so on.

48140. It was not because the union club failed?—Not at all. The same doctors took on the parish clubs.

48141. Medical clubs for women and children you say are general; what sort of payments are made by them to the medical clubs in your district?—1s. per quarter for an adult and 6d. for a child, so a woman with three children would pay 2s. 6d. a quarter.

48142. In the event of cases requiring institutional treatment, what arrangements are available?—The board subscribes to the general hospital, and has so many letters, and the paupers apply for letters sometimes under the advice of the doctor.

48143. I was thinking for the moment rather of the people who are not paupers, but who are in these medical clubs. Assuming that a man in a medical club needs treatment in an infirmary or hospital, what would be available?—If the doctor of the medical club recommends it, then voluntary charity will almost always be found sufficient to supply the letter.

48144. Have you found voluntary charity fail you in that regard?—I think voluntary charity does too much in that regard.

48145. Although you told us that the squires have gone from the district?—Yes, but all the charitable people have not gone with the squires.

48146. Do you rely on outside charity at all, that is charity from elsewhere than within the union?—No, I do not.

48148. What tides over the difficulty in your parish?—Is it charity?—Yes. It is the charity of the neighbours chiefly, I think—my own and other people's.

48149. In regard to the nominated stipendiary chairman, would you have them sign cheques and take part in the ordinary business in that way?—Yes, I would have the chairman do his ordinary work.

48150. You have told us that you approve of the size of boards of guardians; I take it that you referred there to your own experience?—Yes.

48151. Would you approve of a board consisting of many as 110—I think there are cases like that in country districts?—Then they would have to divide up into committees, I suppose.

48152. I do not know what they do, but they are very large boards?—Much too large.

48153. With regard to the rules of administration, had you any in use in Brixworth in your time?—Yes.

48154. Are they still in use?—No, they are not. They abandoned all rules and all principles when they broke with me.

48155. Have those rules been published anywhere?—Yes, you have them in the Local Government Report.

48156. ((Mr. Phelps.) The principles which you quoted were laid down in 1834, were they not?—I thought they were evolved certainly in 1601, because I thought, and I think still, that the Report of 1834 reverted to those principles.

48157. At any rate, they figure prominently in the Report of 1834?—Yes, very much so.

48158. In many ways the condition of the country has altered very much since 1834?—Yes.

48159. Do you think that that is in the direction of those principles, or against them?—What sort of conditions may I ask are you thinking of?—

48160. The material improvement in the condition of the people?—In favour of them.

48161. To take a point, which has not been raised, with regard to the workhouse, do you think residence in the workhouse ought to be, to a certain extent, deterrent?—I think all relief ought to be, to a certain extent, deterrent.

48162. Do you think that the standard of living or comfort in the workhouse might safely be improved now?—It has been of late years very much improved, and I am doubtful whether it should be more improved; in fact, I do not think it need be more improved than it has been.

48163. In what direction has it been improved in your experience?—There has been better food given, a better diet, I think, a good deal, and pleasanter clothing. I think, generally speaking, the old people who are supposed to be more or less deserving who happen to come in, are much more comfortable than they used to be in the old days. The whole condition of the inmates is, I think, in a higher scale, and I think a great deal more attention is paid to their comfort by people who visit the workhouse and so on. So it is really a much happier place than it was before, though it is still, and I hope always will be, a deterrent system of relief.

48164. What do you think is the deterrent feature in it now?—Partly the name, which is an awkward name, and partly the want of liberty and the certain amount of discipline which has to be enforced; also, sometimes, the association with people they do not like.

48165. Now with regard to the housing, clothing and diet, do you think that the position of an old man in Brixworth workhouse is preferable to the position of a man outside?—I think it is in material things, but there is the sentiment of it, and the feeling that he cannot see his friends, and smoke his pipe when he likes, and so on. As to healthy conditions, I think the workhouse is very much improved, and is quite good enough.

48166. Take the case of the children; what policy did you, or do you adopt in regard to your children at Brixworth?—We still keep our children in the house, not because we think it is perhaps the best system—the best system is that which is the best administered, I think—but because we have no means, as we think, of properly boarding them out. We do not see how we can get a really efficient committee, and we have not very many children.

48167. Do you think boarding out is a good system?—I think it is a good system if it is very well worked, but it wants working with immense care.

48168. Do you think it is open to the objection that it makes the lot of a pauper's child preferable to that of a labourer's child?—I think it does.

48169. You do think it is open to that objection?—Yes, I think it is. It is often remarked by the poor "I wish my child could have such good clothes," and so on.

48170. (Chairman.) That is when they are boarded out?—Yes.

48171. (Mr. Phelps.) Do you think that applies to other systems, the cottage home system, for instance?—Very much so.

48172. Do you think that that strikes the imagination of the labouring classes?—Yes, very much so.

48173. With regard to the sick, the provision for the sick has very much improved in workhouses, has it not?—standard indoor medical relief.

48174. What accommodation have you in your workhouse infirmary?—We have sufficient, I think, for the men, but we have not now sufficient for the women. Our workhouse has become, under the lax system of relief, overcrowded.

48175. Do you think that the hands of the guardians require to be strengthened with regard to certain cases?—Somebody has alluded to the cases of obstinate people who refuse to come into the workhouse infirmary; would you be prepared to see legal powers of compulsion given to guardians?—I do not think it is necessary. I think if it is known that the board of guardians is a strict one and really means to stick by what it says the difficulty would very soon disappear.

48176. Do you think that powers of that kind are needed in the case of mentally defective girls who come in to be confined?—Powers of retaining them, do you mean, in the workhouse?

48177. Yes?—I should like to see those powers strengthened.

48178. Have you experience of that at Brixworth?—Yes. We have one or two cases where they go out and come in very frequently indeed in the same condition.

48179. You said that after the system which you support had been working for ten years, a census was taken in the union in a sense to discover the effect of it?—I did not speak of a census, I think, but I spoke of a committee of inquiry as to what had been the effect of our strict rule.

48180. Has any inquiry been made into the effect of the new system, the present system?—No, not at present.

48181. Have you any figures or facts in your own mind which would lead to a conclusion as to its effects?—At present only as to the cost and number of paupers. I have not gone into the question of the character of the people at all.

48182. Or the effect upon clubs and provident institutions generally?—I think it has had no effect, and will not have any effect, at any rate for some time, upon clubs. I think that medical clubs and other agencies, such as co-operation, which have already been in force, are so popular that even the worst system of out-relief will not affect them very much.

48184. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) With regard to the children, admitting that the idea of the Poor Law is that the pauper should be in a less eligible position than the one who is not a pauper, would you say the same thing of the pauper's child?—Yes, I think I should.

48185. Then you are placing the pauper's child at a double disadvantage; first of all, he is the child of a pauper, and then he is to have a less eligible bringing-up than the ordinary child?—I should have begun by preventing the child's parent being a pauper.

48186. Quite so, but I cannot carry the matter back as far as that; that has been settled. Does it fit in with your principles that the pauper's child is to be brought up in a less eligible way than another person's child?—I think it must be so, inevitably.

48187-8. Is that not likely to cause perpetual pauperism in that particular family?—No, I do not think it is more likely to cause that than the proposal to improve that child in any particular way. I think the child must bear, as it were, the sins of the father and the father the sins of the child to a certain extent, and I should not like Poor Law relief to interfere with that.

Canon

26 Mar. 1907.

48189. In regard to the workhouse itself, it seems to me, looking at your account of what you would like the indoor relief to be, that the basis of your plan is a kindly-conducted workhouse with extreme severity outside?—No; a kindly-conducted workhouse as far as possible, but a disciplinary workhouse as regards those who are not supposed to be decent characters, and no outdoor relief.

Difficulties of classification in a small workhouse. 48190. In a small workhouse would it not be difficult to keep separate those who are desirable from those who are undesirable?—Yes, it is very difficult. That is one of the disadvantages of a small workhouse.

48191. That is rather hard, is it not, upon the desirables?—It can be dealt with. A good master and a good matron can always make arrangements in a small workhouse, because there will only be a few people, and can only be a few people of this sort, and so you can make arrangements for their comfort as a rule, I think.

Effect of abolition of out-relief upon voluntary agencies. 48192. I take it that the abolition of outdoor relief has made dependence upon voluntary agencies almost absolutely necessary?—It has to a certain extent, and ought. One does not want to discourage voluntary agencies.

Voluntary charity and its administration. 48193. Are they as a rule, in your opinion, carefully administered—as carefully administered as other means? Would you say that voluntary agencies are generally well-administered?—Do you mean charities?

48194. Yes?—That is another question. I do not think they are at all well-administered. I was not meaning that, and I thought you meant individual charity between neighbour and neighbour.

48195. Even that sometimes is rather abused?—Yes, it is very unwise sometimes. My only point would be that it is sufficient to meet all cases.

48196. Also in regard to your suggestions, you do not go beyond rural areas, and you only claim to speak in regard to them?—Yes. I do not wish to be examined on urban districts.

Question of prestige of stipendiary chairman without a vote. 48197. With regard to the chairman without a vote, and the expert without a vote which you spoke of, do you think that very much notice would be taken of these experts if they were people simply coming in that way and having no vote and being looked upon rather as people who were critics and not sharers in the work?—I think at the first there would be a good deal of that kind of feeling against them, but I think it would wear off, and if it was found that the man was a useful, kindly and genial sort of man (which we hope he would be) they would gradually find the advantage there was in having such a man with them. The advantage outside would be more perhaps than the advantage inside.

Extent to which charity is necessary upon abolition of out-relief. 48198. (Mr. Booth.) You told Mr. Wakefield that some use of charity is necessary, but I take it from what you have said before that that is rather from the point of view of a temporary expedient?—Exactly.

48199. And not as a permanent solution. Then you rely—I go over it again because it is so very important—chiefly on real independence and on self-help to secure that?—Entirely, in the long-run.

Question of desirability of substituting charity for out-relief. Effect on indoor relief of restricting out-relief. 48200. That is to say, your plan is not the substitution of charity for Poor Law relief?—No.

48201. Far from it?—Yes, the contrary.

48202. I want to be quite sure of that, because sometimes it is thought that it is so. Your method of the refusal of out-relief is supposed by some to encourage going into the house; is that so?—On the contrary, we find that by restricting out-relief we also gradually empty the house.

48203. So that it is not a substitution of another form of poor relief?—No, not at all.

48204. Excuse me if I ask these things, which Mr. Loch asked to a certain extent, because they are important. Then there is a consequence from that which I should like to pursue. Does not the passing of out-relief result rather in the absence of the older, respectable denizens of the poor-house?—It naturally would do so.

48205. They are also found in the world outside because their friends come forward?—Exactly.

429—IV.

48206. So that actually those special cases for which almost almshouse treatment is secured in kindly workhouses, are very rarely to be found there at all?—I quite agree.

48207. And the effect comes to be that less classification is needed?—Exactly. I quite agree with that.

48208. Again it would lead to an immense simplification of the whole problem of the Poor Law if your proposals could be carried out?—It does, in my view, entirely. That is the object one has in view. The financial aspects of the abolition of out-relief.

48209. On the other hand, it is not necessarily a cheaper system, because you may have more elaborate medical relief, perhaps?—I think it must be decidedly a cheaper system, and in practice it is very much cheaper.

48210. We do find, do we not, in some of those unions which are administered on your principles, that the expenditure has very largely increased?—I do not know one.

48211. You would not say that that was so?—Certainly not in the country districts.

48212. I should not regard it as important if it were so?—Neither should I.

48213. One question with regard to this stipendiary proposal. Would the stipendiary chairman be a local man?—If the President of the Local Government Board was able to find a good local man it would be advisable to have him, I think; but otherwise we would keep clear of the local men. Proposed permanent stipendiary chairman of board of guardians.

48214. Otherwise he might be sent down, just as a stipendiary magistrate is sent to any town?—Yes; but I think they would much prefer one of their own selves.

48215. It would be better to have a local man?—I think so.

48216. The nominated guardian you spoke of would be a local man in any case, I take it?—Yes. I am always supposing that the Local Government Board takes a strong line in the direction that I am advocating. The functions of nominated guardians in promoting uniformity.

48217. At any rate, it would be a means of arriving at a great deal of uniformity?—Yes, it would.

48219. I only ask whether they might be treated better or not than the surrounding children?—I should not like to see them better treated. We should give them the same treatment that any ordinary child would have. The only difference would be that if they came into the workhouse they would be supposed to be treated in a less eligible manner.

48221. How would you treat the children who are absolutely thrown upon the Poor Law, that is to say, the children who are adopted and who are completely separated from all their past?—I see no way of treating them less eligibly than the independent labourer's child, except by bringing them into the workhouse, where they would practically be treated quite as well as they are in their friends houses; but at the same time the mere fact of their being in the workhouse would make it a less eligible lot.

48222. Then you do not share the view which is very generally held that the children should be removed from the workhouse?—No, I do not. I am only speaking for rural districts. May I go on to say why? In going round the various workhouses in my county, I have visited many workhouses where the boarding-out of children was adopted. In almost every case it was found impossible to board-out the whole of the children, and there were perhaps one or two little children left in the workhouse. A more miserable condition I cannot imagine for a child than to be a solitary child, or just to have one companion, in a workhouse. That was the other side of the boarding-out system, which rather set me against it; and that is inevitable under the boarding-out system, because you cannot place them all out.

48223. But you might have cottage homes?—Yes; you may have cottage homes; but then I have no experience of cottage homes.

*Mr. Charles
Cecil

26 Mar. 1907.

Mr. CHARLES CECIL BECKE, called; and Examined.

48224. (Chairman.) You have prepared a paper for us, I think, which we may take as your evidence-in-chief?—

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

Financial limitations to operations of rural sanitary authorities.

1. I believe that as a rule the sanitary authorities in towns carry out their work very well. In country districts they are greatly hampered by want of funds. Owing to the very heavy rates, especially for education, the rural authorities naturally hesitate to expend money in even necessary operations; thus wells are allowed to be used that should be closed. Sewage matter in an unadulterated state finds its way into ditches, brooks and rivers, and drains are not properly inspected. I can see no way of amending this state of things unless pecuniary assistance can be given from the public funds. The difficulty of doing this I fully appreciate.

work for the unemployed
by municipi-
alities

2. I do not think the experiment of town councils providing work for the unemployed has proved successful; the council have not the experienced staff properly to supervise. Gangs of men are put on to work as to which they have no practical knowledge; the result is that the work costs more and is not so well done as it would be by ordinary labour, besides which competent workmen are displaced.

Dispensary at Northampton.

3. With regard to voluntary effort I have formed very strong opinions and have endeavoured to carry them out with a certain amount of success. Some sixty years ago a meeting was convened, in Northampton, of a number of gentlemen interested in the poor. Various methods of helping them were considered, but one thing was very much pressed upon them and that was the great advantage it would be to aid them in the time of sickness, which always produced a great strain on their resources. It was true that from the Poor Law or the hospital they could obtain gratuitous relief, but the committee found that the thrifty artisans did not wish this, and therefore it was suggested that an association should be formed which members of the artisans and labourers class should be asked to join, paying a very small subscription, and that in consideration thereof the association, subsequently called the Royal Victoria Dispensary, should undertake to supply them with medical attendance, advice and medicine. The idea was welcomed both by patients and doctors; the latter recognised the fact that instead of obtaining their fees with difficulty, they would be regularly paid.

4. The institution was started and proved a great success, and has been largely copied throughout the country. It gave the members a feeling of independence, encouraged them to call in medical attendance whenever necessary, and so decreased sickness and, especially in the case of epidemics, prevented a large strain on the resources of the Poor Law. I enclose copy of our rules and last report. (For copy of rules see Appendix No. XXVI. (A).)

5. At the present moment we have some 18,000 members on our books, which number would be considerably augmented had not a large number of medical men in the town and neighbourhood, seeing our success, started similar clubs and dispensaries of their own. As the poor get the advantage of the system, we have always encouraged this competition.

6. Another want that was felt at about the same time was the strong desire of the artisans and labourers to obtain allotments and garden ground near the town. They could not do this individually, and recognising that healthy outdoor work would be likely to be advantageous, about the same body of gentlemen resolved to form an allotment society, taking land and dividing it amongst members. We began in a very small way, but were so successful that we have gradually extended our operations, until at the present time we rent some 57½ acres of land, which are sub-divided amongst some 251 tenants who each occupy about 20 poles.

7. We found that the effect of providing healthy and profitable work for the men and their families had another most desirable effect. Instead of spending their evenings at the public-houses, they spent them on the land; the result was that many of them began to save money. This they asked us to take care of for them, and in connection with our allotment scheme we formed a provident fund, the rules of which I enclose. (See Appendix No. XXVI. (B).)

8. It will be seen that a depositing member was not allowed to withdraw his monies until attaining the age of fifty years, except he was removing from the neighbourhood. This fund thus forms a retiring pension for the members and has proved most valuable. Pensions b.
allotment societies at their manageme.

9. Both the allotments and the provident fund are mostly managed by working men, who have admirably performed their duties, and both are in a very flourishing condition.

10. I have been connected with both the dispensary and the Artisans and Labourers' Friend Society for upwards of forty years, and can speak to the fact that they are greatly appreciated by the working classes. Every effort is made only to allow artisans and labourers to participate in the advantages of these societies.

In these remarks I must not be supposed to think that I can advantage your Commission. I only give my experience as showing that the only true way of assisting the poor is to encourage them to help themselves.

48225. (Chairman.) You are a great believer in voluntary effort, and you have taken a great deal of trouble to try to organise voluntary effort in various directions in Northampton, I believe?—That is so.

48226. And you succeeded in establishing or promoting the Victoria Provident Dispensary?—I did not establish it myself—it was my father who established it. Origin and
Royal Victoria
Dispensary

48227. It has been a great success, and I understand it is still growing?—It is still growing.

48228. You have 18,000 members on your books, I understand?—That is about it.

48229. So successful has your system been, that various medical men who came into the town have tried to start similar clubs in competition, I gather?—That is so.

48230. Would you go so far as to say that this provident dispensary has provided medical relief for a large number of people, who, if it were not in existence, would probably have had to go to the Poor Law?—That is so, undoubtedly. The substitution of provident
dispensaries for medical relief.

48231. You have tapped a stratum so low as that?—Yes.

48232. Can you tell us what would be the minimum of the wages of those who join it?—The wages in the shoe trade—and Northampton is almost entirely dependent upon the shoe trade—average from 20s. a week to £3. Minimum
provident
dispensaries

48233. As much as that?—Yes.

48234. Do the young people get anything like that?—They do not get as much as 20s. At about the age of fourteen they get about 6s. a week.

48235. We have had other evidence from Northampton to-day—I do not know whether you heard it all; but the purport of that evidence is that medical clubs have taken very considerable root in Northampton and its neighbourhood, and seem to flourish there?—That is so. Almost every medical man has his own club, unless he belongs to our dispensary. The prevalence

clubs in Northampton and quality of their medical assistance.

48236. Would you say that the poor are medically well looked after in Northampton?—Extremely. I have been Secretary of the Victoria Provident Dispensary for twenty years, and during that time I have only had two complaints.

48237. The general hospital does not give out-relief, does it; or has it any out-patients?—Yes, the general hospital has out-patients. The dispensary has no letters at all, but the general hospital gives outdoor medical relief.

48238. Does that conflict with you much?—No, not very much. Of course it does, but as a matter of fact the outdoor relief given at the hospital is given to people that we should think were not proper objects for it—it is given to the better class of people, really.

48239. I suppose the attraction of your provident dispensary is that you make domiciliary visits?—Yes.

48241. With your knowledge of the provident dispensary system, you must have given a good deal of thought to this question. What is your opinion about the out-patient treatment at hospitals?—I believe as a rule it is most injurious. I believe it does a good deal of harm. Instead of the poor people thinking that they are entitled to relief, as they are at our dispensary, for instance, they have to go about begging for these out-patient letters. I am a subscriber myself, and I know the sort of people who come to me for outpatient letters; they are people sometimes earning £3 a week.

48242. I assume the treatment is necessarily somewhat cursory?—Yes.

48243. Would you like to stop all these out-patients?—I do not know that I should like to stop the system altogether, because I think in country villages, where they have no doctors, it is a very good thing for the country people to be able to come to the hospital and see a really good doctor.

48244. Do they do that in Northampton?—Yes, very largely.

48245. It is an agricultural country one might say, right up to Northampton, is it not?—Yes. A very large number of the subscribers are living in country villages, and they distribute their out-patient's letters in their own villages.

48246. Is much of the medical relief given in Northampton associated with the Poor Law?—There is a great deal, but we flatter ourselves, whether rightly or wrongly, that our system at the dispensary has reduced it very much.

48247. Does the dispensary pay its own way?—Yes, and the larger it is the better it pays, just contrary to the hospital.

48248. May I ask you what your system is? Are there a large number of medical officers on your list?—The number that we are entitled to is six, and at the present moment we have got five.

48249. Do they come on certain days in the week to the dispensary?—Each one of them has to take one day in the week, and then they see patients also at their own houses every day.

48250. And visit patients besides?—And visit patients when necessary.

48251. May the patient select his own doctor?—Yes, they select their own doctor out of the five.

48252. How does that work?—Very well. There is, of course, a certain amount of favouritism. Certain doctors get a great many more patients than others do, probably because they are better qualified, or at any rate are more popular.

48253. (Mr. Phelps.) Can they change from one doctor to another afterwards?—Yes.

48254. (Chairman.) In the middle of the year?—Yes, at any time by giving a month's notice.

48255. A month's notice?—Yes, we take it so for the convenience of the accounts, that is all. It used to be a week, but we found a week was a little complicated.

48256. Some proportion of the population of Northampton is supposed to hold rather advanced and socialistic opinions, but you have not found these to interfere with the growth or maintenance of your provident dispensary, apparently?—Not at all. The Socialists join us in larger numbers probably than any other class. They appreciate the fact that they are not begging.

48257. That is the motive, is it?—I think that is it. They like to be able to say, "That is our doctor, and we are entitled to have him, and he must come and see us."

48258. What do the doctors do as regards remuneration?—They are very well satisfied. This last year, 1906, we divided amongst the medical staff, five of them, not quite £1,900.

48259. They do not give their whole time, do they?—No, most of them, I may say, have assistants; we allow them to have assistants.

48260. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Is the remuneration divided in proportion to the work they do?—The work they do depends upon the number of patients they have. As I said, any patient has a right to select any one of these five to attend him, and some of them have a great deal more work than others.

48261. Which they would get more pay for?—They get more pay.

48262. (Chairman.) How are they paid? Are they paid by the number of cases they attend, or do they get the contributions of the family which they go to?—There is what we call a free members' fund, to which all the members subscribe. That is divided amongst the medical men in proportion to the number of their patients.

48263. How do the attendances count?—There are the attendances at the dispensary, the attendances at their own house, and the attendances at the houses of the patients; they all count.*

48264. A day attendance, I suppose, counts so much?—Yes, it counts so much.

48265. They all pay to a common fund which is divided amongst the medical men?—Yes, after deducting certain expenses. Perhaps I ought to say that there is an honorary fund as well, and that also contributes towards the expenses, but it has gradually got down to a very small sum.

48266. Is that honorary fund composed of subscriptions from outside?—Yes.

48267. (Mr. Booth.) That, you say, is a very small sum?—Yes, not more than £90 a year. The dispensary therefore is practically self-supporting. I have got the figures here if anyone would like to look at them.

48268. (Chairman.) Is the medical man paid upon the number of visits he gives?—No.

48269. Then how is he paid?—The medical man has to put down every patient he attends whether at his own house, or at the dispensary, or at the patient's house and he has to enter it also on the patient's card. Those entries are checked every week, and, therefore, we are enabled to keep each individual doctor's account.

48270. One case may require a great many more attendances or more attention than another case?—Certainly.

48271. Then the doctor would be paid in proportion?—Yes? If he has to make four attendances at a house in the day, he would have four separate attendances put down to him.

48272. (Mr. Booth.) Can he attend as often as he likes?—He can attend as often as he thinks necessary, but we keep a check upon that, because, practically, one doctor keeps a check on the other.

48273. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Theoretically then, one doctor might have 400 people who had chosen him, and

* As to the point raised in Q's. 48263-73 as to "attendances," the witness subsequently forwarded the following explanation:—"I am sorry to say I was wrong as to this. The Free Members' Fund is divided amongst the medical staff according to the number of patients they have; the number of visits are not taken into account although they are entered."

another might have 300, and the man with 300 might be paid more in the year than the man with 400?—I do not think that could very well happen. For instance, at their own houses they would only have one attendance a day, and at the dispensary they would only have one. It is in the attendances at the patients' houses where they would have more than one, and even there they very seldom attend more than once in the day, in fact, I do not suppose they ever do, except it is a very bad case, and there are two or three children ill.

48274. (Chairman.) I suppose you have inquired into other provident dispensaries?—Yes.

48275. This is not the usual method followed, is it?—No, I am afraid it is not the usual method. Generally there are much larger subscriptions.

48276. I understand they not infrequently take the family, and the doctor who takes the family takes all the payments that the family makes?—That is so.

48277. But that cannot work out as evenly as your system, can it?—It has not been found so. Our system has been adopted now in almost all the large towns in England. I am having inquiries almost every month from different places as to why ours is so much more successful than theirs, and they end generally by adopting our plan.

48278. Could you tell us any places where your plan is in operation?—Manchester has, I think, exactly our system, and so, I think, have Leamington and Birmingham.

48279. Would you mind sending us, when you get home and have time, a list of the places?—I will send a list.

(The witness subsequently wrote that owing to the removal of his offices he had unfortunately lost the material which would have enabled him to send the list asked for.)

48280. In addition to the provident dispensaries, you have taken up work in connection with allotments?—Yes.

48281. That also has been satisfactory, I gather?—That has been very satisfactory. It is not very large, and it has not so many members as the provident dispensary. We let out about 58 acres of land in allotments in small quantities of about 20 poles.

48282. Have you any difficulty about the rent?—No. We make them pay the rent in advance.

48283. Do many have to give up their little holdings by being unable to pay in advance?—Occasionally it happens, but inasmuch as they have paid previously in advance, it does not injure them so much; I mean we do not suffer by it, and as a rule, they leave at a time when there is nothing on the land.

48284. What is the Artisans and Labourers Friend Society which you refer to in your last paragraph?—It was originally formed simply for the purpose of allotments, but after a little time the members came to the committee and said they were saving a little money, and could we take it for them and allow them interest upon it. We agreed to do so. We made what we call a Provident Fund into which every one of them pays a 1d. a week who chooses to join it; that 1d. a week we allow them 4 per cent. interest upon, but they must not take it out until they are fifty years of age.

48285. What sort of sum does it get up to?—£60 or £70. If they choose to pay more, we allow them to pay more into a separate fund, which we call the Investment Fund. They may pay as much as they like into that, and they get allowed such interest as we can afford them, which has always averaged 4 per cent.

48286. Are these societies increasing?—Yes.

48287. They do not show signs of falling off?—No; on the contrary, they are both doing extremely well. If we could get more land, we could let a great many more allotments, but the difficulty near a big town is to get land at a reasonable rate.

48288. Passing on from your work to the work of the town council, I gather that you were not very well satisfied with the attempts of the town council to find work for the unemployed?—No; it did not work in Northampton at all satisfactorily. The men did their work in a very loose way; there was not sufficient supervision over them, and it was much more expensive than if we had employed more skilful men with proper supervision.

48289. Have you any idea about how to deal with the unemployed? Do you think that the Poor Law agencies are sufficient?—Personally I do not, but I must confess that it is not a subject that I have given very deep attention to.

48290. You have had a great deal to do with these self-supporting provident institutions, and I should, therefore, like to ask you this one question. Have you ever thought about old-age pensions?—No, I have not—I mean not in a way that would help you at all.

48291. (Mr. Booth.) Going back for one moment to the doctors' visits, do you know how much the amount that a doctor may receive comes to on the average per visit?—I did work it out. It comes to about 6d., taking those at their own houses, at the dispensaries, and at the homes of the patients.

48292. So there would be in that sense no great temptation to the multiplication of visits?—No, scarcely any; in fact, the less visits they pay the better the doctors like it.

48293. (Mr. Phelps.) That system surely complicates your accounts a good deal, does it not?—No. For a long time I kept the whole of the accounts myself, but I found it was rather a big matter to do, and so I have recently employed a collector to collect and keep the accounts.

48294. You have a collector then?—Yes; and the people have to go to the dispensary to pay their subscriptions.

48295. Do you make them pay them in themselves?—Yes.

48296. And you find that work?—Yes, very well indeed.

48297. Do they prefer that to having the collector come round?—We prefer it, certainly.

48298. You have a limited number of doctors, I think you said?—Our limit is six, but we have only at present five.

48299. How are they appointed?—They are appointed by a committee of subscribers.

48300. Have you a large number of subscribers?—I should think about 150.

48301. Have you ever considered the question of throwing it open to all the doctors in Northampton if they like to join?—We did so when we started the dispensary.

48302. What was the result?—The result was that a few doctors got the great proportion of the practice, and the great proportion of the pay; and the others got little or nothing, so they gradually resigned. When we got down to the number of six, we thought it better to stick to that number.

48303. Is the £2,000 a year distributed unequally between them?—Yes.

48304. Could you give me an idea of the proportions?—I can give you what it was last year. One doctor got £211 17s. 2d., the next got, curiously enough, almost exactly the same, £211, the third got £288, the fourth £551, and the fifth, £959.

48305. Do you foresee a time when there may be a difficulty from your restricting the number of doctors? Can you get a doctor to resign, for instance?—If he was incompetent, we have the right to call upon him to resign, but as long as he is competent we would not dismiss him.

48306. Do you think that the outside public resents the system of restricting the number of doctors?—There is a great deal of diversity of opinion about that. At one time, we were pressed to take more doctors, but, as I said, when we first started we tried that system and it did not answer at all, because no one took sufficient interest in it. Our great idea is to make the doctors feel that this is a very valuable portion of their practice.

48307. With regard to the persons joining the dispensary, have you any test of their means or any standard?—Yes.

48308. What is your rule?—We only take artisans, labourers, and domestic servants.

48309. Have you wage limit?—No, we have not. Every case is enquired into. Every person who wishes to join leaves his name at the dispensary, and all the circumstances of the case is inquired into by one member of the committee.

48310. You do not have a paid agent to do it, then?—No, we do it ourselves.

48311. Do the doctors exercise any supervision over that point?—Yes. If the doctors find that any one is, in their opinion, earning more wages than entitle him to assistance from us, they are to report that fact to the Committee, and they do so.

48312. Supposing a man joined you when he was earning 20s. a week, and afterwards his earnings went up to £3 a week, would the doctors report him?—Yes, they would report him.

48313. What is the basis of that? Why is that done?—Because we do not think it would be fair to the other doctors who are not on our staff to keep on people who can really afford to pay for medical attendance themselves.

48314. Do you regard your provident dispensary as a charity?—No, not at all.

48315. Do the doctors make a good bargain in joining it?—Yes, if they choose to work and are popular.

48316. I do not see why everybody should not join if he liked?—There are none of the doctors in the town but what would like to join us. Mr. Percival, the gentleman you had to day, has a partner who is one of our doctors, although he is not himself.

48317. (Dr. Downes.) What is the subscription that the artisans and labourers pay to the dispensary?—At fourteen years of age they pay 1½d. a week, but if they are grown up and have a wife and family we take them for 3d. a week. The ordinary member, whether a girl or a boy, at fourteen pays 1½d.

48318. What is your drug bill?—The drug bill comes to about £350 a year.

48319. Out of a total expenditure of what?—Out of a total expenditure of about £4,000.

48320. Of which about £2,000 went to the doctors?—About £2,000 goes to the doctors and £350 goes for drugs.

48321. What do you do with regard to surgical appliances? Supposing a man wants a wooden leg, for instance?—We really provide them. We charge a small sum for certain things like trusses, for instance. We charge just exactly what they cost us wholesale.

48322. You get them at trade prices, then?—Yes.

48323. And you charge to the man?—Just the trade price with no profit at all.

48324. Do you provide any midwifery?—No, none. It is purely a medical dispensary.

48325. Do the doctors undertake midwifery cases amongst the subscribers?—Yes.

48326. What is the charge for that?—10s. if they have a doctor, and 5s. if they have a midwife.

48327. You have midwives, then?—We have midwives that we employ. They are not on the staff exactly, but we pick out certain people, and they are put down on the list, and we allow them to practice as midwives.

48328. In dividing the pool amongst the doctors, does an attendance at a patient's house count for more than an attendance at the dispensary?—No.

48329. Does it count just the same?—Yes.

48330. Do the artisans and labourers who subscribe take any part in the management of the dispensary?—No.

48331. Has there been any agitation for that?—There was an agitation in this way, that we were asked to take over a very large medical club in the town, but we thought they had a very much better class of persons belonging to it than those we thought ought to belong to us. I think there were a thousand of them who wanted to join us, and they wanted if they did join, to have a voice in the choice of doctors and in the appointments and all the rest of it.

48332. What would your view be as to the representation on your committee of the artisan and labouring classes?—I do not think it would answer. It certainly has not answered in the case of that medical society of which I spoke. They do not get anything like such a good class of doctors. A good class of doctors, in my experience, does not care about serving under a committee of working men.

48333. On the point of possible difficulty in getting rid of an incompetent doctor, would it not be the fact that an incompetent man would be practically weeded out because the people would not go to him?—Just so; but really we have never had a case of an incompetent man, fortunately.

48334. (Chairman.) What is your committee that nominates the doctors composed of?—Subscribers. Any person who subscribes 10s. a year is entitled to attend the general meetings or special meetings, and the doctors are selected by them.

48335. I understood that you said the doctors did not like being selected by working men?—They never do.

48336. Are there working men on this committee?—No, there is not one.

48337. What are they?—Tradespeople and clergymen and some landowners in the neighbourhood.

48338. Are they selected?—No; they simply become honorary members of the dispensary by the fact that they pay subscriptions.

48339. Then this provident dispensary is practically managed by a committee of subscribers?—That is so; they are chosen every year by the subscribers. There are about eighteen on the committee.

48340. That is one of the reasons that the thing works smoothly, I suppose?—That is so.

48341. Do the working men agree to that?—The working men have all agreed to it, and they have never made any attempt to alter it.

48342. (Mr. Booth.) Are the doctors on the committee?—Yes.

48343. That is to say, the doctors are part of the committee?—Yes.

48344. If a doctor got so very small a share, if he was incompetent in the sense of being known to be incompetent and very few people wished to have him, would you leave it to him to resign?—We should call upon him to resign.

48345. So in that way you would maintain your standard by getting rid of an incompetent man?—That is what we have not done as yet during the twenty years I have been secretary. We have never had occasion to get rid of any doctor during that time.

48346. (Mr. Phelps.) Would you draw a hard and fast line and say that if a doctor had less than a certain number of patients entering under him he must go?—We have drawn no such line. It is to the interest of the doctors really to get as much pay as they can.

48347. Have you ever considered that point of letting the members, as distinct from the subscribers, nominate one member of your committee?—I have considered it a great deal, but I do not think it would work satisfactorily at all; and in other dispensaries it does not.

ORGANISATION OF LABOUR AT THE LIVERPOOL DOCKS.

DRAFT PROPOSALS ON CLASSIFICATION OF WORKMEN, BY COL. HORNEY, CHAIRMAN, AND MR. W. GRISEWOOD, SECRETARY, LIVERPOOL CENTRAL RELIEF SOCIETY, PREPARED FOR CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE OF EMPLOYERS AND WORKMEN, LIVERPOOL.

1. The object which the Committee has in view is to reduce the present irregularity of Dock Labour, to make the work and earnings more regular and constant for as many men as possible, and to so reduce the number of men employed casually as to take away the inducements for so many men to go to the Docks on the chance of picking up a day or half-day's employment.

2. The first steps towards effecting this seems to be for each employer to classify his men, according to ability and regularity of attendance, into, say, three classes :—

(a) Permanent men who would receive wages at a rate to be fixed for a certain number of hours per day, and be paid for overtime at current rates, and have three days' leave annually in addition to general holidays. The number of these men would be determined by the individual employer, according to the demands of his business. They would form list "A," and each would have a number.

(b) Preference men, who would receive wages at a rate to be fixed per working hour in the day, with overtime at current rates. No man to be discharged with less than a half-day's pay unless under conditions to be agreed upon. These men would form list "B," and each would have a number.

(c) Casual men—as required to be employed when there is pressure of work, at same wages as those on "B" list.

In engaging the men, the whole of "A" list would be first taken, so that all permanent men might be engaged, and the "B" list would be exhausted before any casuals were taken.

3. The next step would be that groups of employers would be formed, and the various classes of men be "pooled" each in their own class, and drawn upon in their order, as each employer might require.

To effect this, each employer would send in his classified lists to a Central Office, where they would be entered in a general classified register. Each employer would send in every afternoon a memorandum of the number of men required by him the following morning :—

(1) His own "permanent" and "preference" men would be first allotted to him, then any disengaged permanent or preference men of other employers ; and (2) when all the "permanent" and "preference" men on all the lists were allotted, recourse would be had to "casual" men.

4. Although the Central Office would be advised of the men required by every employer in the various groups, and would ascertain the men to be allotted to each employer, and take steps by posting a notice to let the men know where their work would lie the following day, yet in practice it would, no doubt, be found that the individual employers would engage the men from their own lists, as far as this met their requirements, and the function of the Central Office would be limited to allotting the surplus not required by employers who were slack to other employers who were busy.

5. The Central Office and necessary staff might be provided by the Labour Bureau of the Distress Committee, unless the various groups of employers preferred to take this upon themselves.

6. The question what employers are to enter into the various groups can only be settled by those acquainted with the requirements of the various classes of work. The following grouping may be suggested for consideration :—

(a) By Trades :—Timber, Grain, Cotton, General Produce. Coasting trade separate.

(b) By Locality :—The North Docks, the Middle Docks, the Coasting trade, the South Docks.

Liverpool, July 25th, 1906.

APPENDIX No. III. (D.)

LIVERPOOL CENTRAL RELIEF AND CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—REGULATIONS FOR DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

General.

The Committee of the Liverpool Central Relief and Charity Organisation Society (hereinafter called the Central Committee) shall have full power of control of all branches of the work. By it the appointment of the District Committees, and the regulations which govern their action, shall be made, and all finance and general business not appertaining to the District Committees transacted.

The official Agent (called the Agent) shall be responsible to the Central Committee.

All regulations shall be interpreted in accordance with the General Rules of the Society.

Composition of District Committees.

The District Committees shall be appointed by the Central Committee, and shall be composed of:—

(1) Chairman.

(2) Visitors, ordinarily fifteen in number, one of whom shall be elected Vice-Chairman, and one Honorary Secretary.

The Central Committee shall decide all cases which may for any reason be referred to it by the chairman of any District Committee; also all relief cases involving an expenditure of more than £2, emigration, and convalescent hospital cases. No expenditure, other than for relief, shall be incurred by a District Committee without the sanction of the Central Committee.

The district chairman to be invited to attend the meetings of the Central Committee once a quarter.

Meetings and Order of Business.

1. The regular meetings are to be held fortnightly or monthly as may be most desirable.

2. Five members shall form a quorum.

3. In case of absence from duty, each visitor shall appoint a substitute approved by the chairman.

4. Visitors shall give the chairman notice in writing of any absence they can foresee, and shall write to explain any unforeseen absence.

5. The secretary shall take minutes of each meeting. These shall be signed by the chairman after being confirmed at next meeting; they shall be delivered to the Central Office within two days after the meeting.

6. The chairman shall be provided at each meeting with a list of cases to be considered, and particulars of any previous decision.

7. Each visitor shall come provided with the report of each case in hand in his section, duly written up to date, with answers from employers, or other references. In this shall be noted all changes in circumstances, as ascertained by the visitor, with amount of relief when given, and decisions come to by the Committee. The chairman shall cause necessary portions to be entered in the minutes and in the Decision Book. When the case no longer needs attention, the report to be handed to the agent of the district.

8. The District is to be divided into sections, one of which shall be allotted to each visitor.

9. Care is to be taken that no visitor has, as a rule, more than five active cases at a time in his charge. When more than that number occurs in his section, the chairman shall request the visitor of some less burdened section to undertake the surplus. In case of extreme pressure it will be understood that no fixed limit can be laid down.

10. The chairman or agent shall, when possible, conduct a new visitor to all the cases in his section then before Committee.

Treatment of Cases.

1. The visitors shall always have in view that their duty is not so much to relieve as to prevent the poor from needing relief, and when relief is given, to let it be in such a form as may, if possible, help them into a position of self-support.

2. It is understood that no visitor may give private alms to cases in hand, except with the concurrence of the Committee.

3. The Committee is empowered to relieve any deserving person in temporary distress in accordance with the following regulations.

4. Application for relief is to be made either by Recommendation Note, personally, or by a friend, at the appointed application offices of the society, at the hours fixed; or a written application may be sent to the Central Office, 2, Exchange Street, E. All applications will be recorded by the agent, who will then visit the case and make due enquiry, and, if the need be urgent, give temporary relief. As soon as his enquiries are completed he will forward the report to the visitor of the section who shall visit as early as possible, and report at the next committee meeting.

5. If the need be still urgent, and the visitor be satisfied from enquiry on his visit that the case is a good one, he may further relieve, pending the meeting of the Committee.

6. In all cases the visitor shall report to the District Committee, and the Committee shall decide how each case is to be further treated.

7. The points to be investigated are:—Present position; antecedents and character; cause and duration of distress; income from all sources, including clubs, parish and charities; and whether entitled by law to support from relatives. All these points to be reported on to the committee.

8. Antecedents and character shall be carefully gone into by means of previous records of the case, references to employer or other respectable persons.

9. If illness is the cause of application, some evidence of this shall be produced, and the nature and duration of illness, and what doctor is attending, shall be noted.

10. If the applicant be out of work an order to the workshops may be given, the meaning of which shall be explained to him by the visitor.

11. If the income be evidently too little to live upon, the applicant should give some reasonable explanation as to manner of living of late.

12. In cases where there is a relation legally bound and able to provide, but unwilling to do so, it may be advisable to bring the case under the notice of the parish authorities. In all cases the assistance of employers and relatives should be sought.

13. During the continuance of a case the visitor shall keep himself fully informed of the means and conduct of the family.

14. All cases requiring attention to be visited weekly.

15. Able-bodied men shall be relieved only for a certain length of time in one year, as may be determined by the Committees.

16. Relief may be given in food, fuel, clothing, tools, medical appliances, convalescent orders for sick persons or in any way that shall be productive of permanent benefit.

17. In exceptional cases money may be granted; the visitor to see to the wise spending of the grant.

18. If in food, fuel, or clothing, it is to be given in orders upon tradesmen appointed by the Central Committee.

19. Meat or medical or surgical appliances are to be supplied only on the certificate of the doctor attending.

20. Parish relief shall not be supplemented unless the circumstances be extremely exceptional, and then only after communication with the parish authorities.

21. It will be within the scope of the District Committees to make efforts to obtain, from private individuals or other sources, such continuous relief as any deserving case in their district may require, and as may not be within the rules of the Society to grant. Amounts received in this way to be reported to the Central Committee.

APPENDIX No. III. (E.)

Handed in by Mr. W. Grisewood, Liverpool. (Q. 37105-26.)

EXTRACTS FROM MANUAL OF INSTRUCTION FOR THE FRIENDLY VISITORS OF THE LIVERPOOL CENTRAL RELIEF AND CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

(1)—Introduction.

This manual is drawn up, not with the idea of providing for every contingency that may occur—for that would be impossible—but to suggest the course which experience shows to be wise to follow in regard to the principal classes of cases likely to arise, and points which it is advisable should be taken into account in regard to the various methods in which help may be given: and also to provide a useful reference concerning the proper discharge of the work of a friendly visitor* in connection with the central office and the District Committee.

(2) Applications to the Society for Help. How Cases of Distress are Reported.

Cases of poverty and distress may be reported by anyone interested to the society at the head office. Recommendation forms are issued by the central office to all bona fide persons interested in the poor, and who apply for such forms. These forms are for the purpose of reporting cases well known to the recommender. After filling in the particulars, the forms should be placed in the receiving boxes, of which a list is given on the back of the form, or sent by post to the central office. Application tickets may be obtained at the head office. These are to be given to casual applicants who are not known to the sender.

Persons in distress may make application by letter, or personally.

(3) Registration of Cases.

Particulars of all cases dealt with are registered at the central office, and, on receipt of an application, reference is made to see if the society has a previous knowledge of the case. Reports concerning writers of begging letters, and ordinary applicants, are issued to legitimate inquirers. Information may also be obtained respecting the various charitable institutions in the city, bona fide and otherwise.

(4) The Work of the Friendly Visitor.

All new cases of distress must be notified in the first place to the central office, to be visited from there and a preliminary inquiry made. The case papers are then sent to the friendly visitor in charge of the section in which the family reside. The friendly visitor calls on the family as soon as possible, but no relief should be given until seven days after the date when the family may have received relief from the central office. Further papers, replies from employers, etc., are sent on to the friendly visitor, who carefully notes the same, and attaches them to the other case papers. General instructions and books containing relief cheques are supplied to the visitors, who may give relief if necessary, pending the next meeting of the District Committee, and subject to the rules and regulations of the society.

The friendly visitor visits families residing in the section allotted to him by the Committee when such families apply to the society for assistance. He should not have more than five families in his charge at one time, unless in exceptional emergencies, when, if he is willing to undertake a larger number, a maximum of ten may be allotted to him for regular weekly visitation. Arrangements can generally be made so that cases are equally shared among the visitors on any committee.

Reports of the Visitor.

Every request from the central office to visit a family is accompanied by a report of what is already known of the family in question at the central office. In this report, following on what the official agent has recorded, further information is to be entered. In addition to visiting the family weekly, the visitor makes all needful inquiry into the case from week to week, duly reporting same on the case papers; and brings all the case papers with him to the next committee meeting, recording any point of value, but omitting irrelevant details. Relief given and decisions of the Committee are entered on the case papers under the proper date.

Absence from Duty.

Inability to attend a Committee meeting should be notified to the hon. secretary of the committee, or to the central office, and case papers (duly written up) forwarded so that the Committee may be informed of the circumstances of the families. Should the visitor be able to arrange with another member of his Committee to deal with such cases, and report them to the meeting, he is at liberty to do so.

Regular Visitation.

Visits are made regularly each week as long as the case is retained, and if the visitor is unable to carry this out, he either obtains the co-operation of one of his colleagues, or sends the papers to the central office for visitation. Great hardship may be caused to the family if the weekly visit is not regularly paid. No relief is to be sent through the post office. The loss of case papers or relief books should at once be notified to the central office, so that steps may be taken to recover them, by advertisement, if necessary.

(5) The District Committee Meeting.

The meetings of District Committees are held monthly, as a general rule. The chairman is provided with a decision book, which contains an outline of the history of each case. He records therein the decision of the meeting and any action taken.

The hon. secretary is provided with a list of cases for consideration at the meeting, on which he notes the decisions of the committee. The agent attends the meeting in an advisory capacity.

The friendly visitor brings with him a report of each case in hand in his section, duly written up to date, with replies from employers and other references attached. Reports may be read either by the visitor or (preferably) by the hon. secretary, according to the custom adopted by each committee. The visitor states what relief has been given (with dates), and suggests what in his opinion is the best treatment to be followed.

Decisions of the Committee.

If the Committee decide to continue the case, the visitor hands over to the hon. secretary the re-visitation slip, showing amounts of relief given, and dates marked thereon, duly signed. He retains the case papers until the next meeting, and continues his visitation of the family.

If the case is dismissed, the case-papers are handed over to the hon. secretary, who transfers them to the head office for registration. If it is decided to refer persons to the relieving officer, the visitor calls to see if they have made an application, as instructed.

In recording the action taken (other than the amount of relief, etc.) in the books and reports, the following classification is followed at the meeting:—

* N.B. For convenience the Friendly Visitors are referred to in the masculine gender.

APPENDIX No. III (E.)—Continued.Handed in by Mr. W. Grisewood, Liverpool. (Q. 37105-26.)

Visitors are earnestly desired to attend at committee meetings as regularly as possible, even though they may not have any cases in hand at the time. Fully attended meetings are stimulating to the whole committee, and ensure detailed information about the cases and judicious treatment of the same.

Should a visitor continue to absent himself from attendance, the Committee may decide whether it is advisable to remove his name from the list of members.

(6) The Value of Training.

The staff of the central office are always prepared to advise friendly visitors on any point concerning their work in which they may be in doubt. The agent or district superintendent may be seen at the district committee meeting. The agents remain at the central office until 12 noon daily.

The duties of a charitable worker call for the exercise of patience, courtesy, sympathy, and intelligence. Practical experience, a knowledge of the people and their habits, and an acquaintance with the true principles of charity and the means of carrying them out, are essential, and can only be acquired as a result of practical work amongst the poorer classes, and a proper study of the experience of others.

To thoroughly grasp the objects and methods of the society needs time and thought, and the closer a visitor keeps in touch with the administration, the more quickly is knowledge of the local conditions secured.

(7) The Visitation of the Home. Nature and Conduct of Inquiry.

Visitors should inquire into the moral and material condition of the families in their charge. They should know:—

- (a) Of how many members the family consists.
- (b) If each member contributes to the expenses of the household according to his or her ability.
- (c) What are the total family receipts and expenses.
- (d) If the clergy, guardians, employers, relatives, or friends help, and to what extent.
- (e) What are the antecedents and character of the family.
- (f) What is the cause of the distress or poverty.
- (g) If there are relatives able to assist (especially if they are legally liable); if so, their names and addresses.
- (h) The facts as to housing, clothing, feeding, and bedding of the family, and the schooling of the children.
- (i) If the family income is economically spent.
- (j) If any provision has been made against a time of need by saving, or joining a club or benefit society of any kind, and if anything is being received in this way.

Most of this information will be found in the report of the agent on the case-papers: the remainder may be obtained as opportunity offers.

Visitors are desired to avoid most carefully all that might hurt the religious susceptibilities of the families visited. The society is entirely non-sectarian. Any question as to which church or chapel the persons attend should only be asked in order to ascertain if they receive support from religious societies or institutions and to enable the visitor to confer with those who may thus be directly interested in the families. The society can often co-operate with the church or chapel or with other institutions.

All questions should be made in a tactful way, and the family made to feel that there is every desire to learn how they can be helped in a proper manner. It may be necessary to see the rent-book or pawntickets in exceptional cases, to ascertain for how long a time the distress has existed, etc.

Borrowing from extortionate money-lenders should be firmly discouraged. This is a notorious feature in the life of the poor (almost as rife as betting), and causes a large proportion of poverty among them.

Any case of a family living under distinctly insanitary conditions should be reported to the central office, who would then communicate with the health department.

(8) The Children.

Visitors are especially requested to observe the condition of the children in families under their care. Parents should be urged to take proper care of them, keeping them as far as possible, clean and tidy, and fed nutritiously. It is not generally known that neglect to properly feed one's children is an offence under the law. The schoolmaster or schoolmistress may sometimes be seen regarding the family.

It is desirable to persuade some of the elder children to join evening clubs for boys or girls.

Opportunities occur of inducing the elder girls to enter domestic service.

Occupations such as step-cleaning are wretched means of earning wages, and should be discouraged. The boys may be persuaded to enter a good trade. Youths should be discouraged from hawking in the streets. It is the conclusion of all authorities that the most hopeful means of minimising poverty in the future lies in providing children with a proper chance of self-support in a decent environment when they come of age.

Younger children may be secured admission, if suitable, to various charitable institutions, if the parents are absolutely unable to keep them at home.

The mutual obligations of parents and children should be remembered, and wisely mentioned. Experience teaches that it is preferable, for the interest of the family, to promote this sense of responsibility. Children should not be removed except after serious consideration.

Cases of ill-treatment or neglect of children must be reported at once to the central office, who will see that the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children are informed of the circumstances without delay.

Crippled children are brought under the notice of the Kyrle Society, and when old enough, can often be taught a trade at the workshops for cripples. There are homes, schools, and workshops for the blind, and deaf and dumb. The central office will immediately investigate such cases, and do what is practicable.

For further reference, see the society's pamphlet giving particulars of institutions.

(9) The Object of Relief.

With the exception of permanent allowances granted to old people (and described elsewhere) relief is given by the society as a means of thoroughly helping poor persons of good character over their temporary difficulties. No case should be retained by a District Committee unless there is a clear prospect of early self-support, and a plan of real help should be thought out carefully. Otherwise relief may become a mere palliative, leaving the condition of the recipient exactly the same as before it was given. When a case has been relieved continuously or intermittently for ten weeks, it is to be revised by the Executive Committee.

Relief should be given so as to encourage thrift and self-help, and to discourage any tendency to depend upon others. Sometimes it may be desirable to require repayment of the whole or part of the assistance granted, after the removal of the distress; or to make further relief conditional on the exercise of providence in future. The District Provident Society, who collect the savings of the poor, will co-operate in the matter, if asked to do so; and friendly visitors will find their work among the poor far more cheerful if they also visit as collectors for the District Provident Society. The people are found to be quite communicative in the best sense when they are not expecting anything to be given to them, but are rather being asked to give something to the visitor, even for their own benefit.

Many persons believe that they have a claim to charitable relief, quite regardless of their own lack of effort, or the defects in their character and habits, which so often cause poverty. To encourage such mistaken ideas would be to seriously weaken the beneficial work of thrift societies, and place a premium on all that is weak or undesirable in the character of the poor. The friendly societies, provident clubs, savings banks, and other institutions are doing a magnificent work. Misdirected charity tends to impede their efforts and to depreciate their value and influence.

The welfare of a whole family is to be considered, and not merely the interest of the single member of it who asks for help. Efforts should be made to draw out the help of friends, employers, and particularly relations, those legally liable for maintenance being specially noted. Roughly speaking, the law compels those related in the direct line (father, son, grandson, mother, etc.) to mutually support one another when able to do so. Charitable relief cannot be made a substitute for the help of relatives, without slackening the family bond.

Distress is often due not so much to misfortune as to faults in character. So far as this is the case, relief alone can do only a limited amount of good ; and may do a great deal of harm. Personal advice and influence alone can be of true service, and relief should only be given when there is a clear effort towards improvement. A lazy or drunken person receives no lasting help by being supplied with food alone ; and when there is an urgent need of help, this may be obtained for such cases from the relieving officer under more rigorous conditions than charity can apply.

(10) Relief in Kind—Instructions.

Relief by the society in temporary cases is given in kind usually, in money occasionally ; the circumstances determine which is the more suitable. Arrears of rent are not paid. If it is necessary to save the home by paying current rent for a short period, this is occasionally done. Experience, however, disposes the society to give relief in kind where temporary material provision is needed, and unless a special plan of help requiring money is decided upon for some good purpose.

Relief books are issued to visitors, containing orders for bread, milk, oatmeal, groceries and coal. Milk is an important item where there are young children. Orders for sterilized milk can be procured through the central office. Meat is given in cases of sickness on a doctor's certificate that it is necessary.

The allowance granted by the official agent on his visit, is a good index for visitors to follow ; but there may arise exigencies where more or less should be given according to the discretion of the visitor. Sickness may demand an increase, for instance : unforeseen or new earnings may require a reduction.

The quantities of bread, milk and oatmeal, and the money value of the groceries, should be stated in figures and words on the tickets. Bread orders are to be made in multiples of 2 lbs. The name of the head of the family, the quantity and value of bread and meal, and value of groceries, milk and coal, should be entered on the counterfoil of the relief book. Prices of the various items are communicated to the visitor when he receives the books, and notification is made of any change in prices. Groceries are given from 1s. to 2s. 6d. in value.

The orders can be taken by the applicants to any of the tradesmen mentioned on the back of the tickets. The goods are supplied on demand during business hours.

The relief books should never be passed out of the possession of the visitor, nor should the tickets be given to any persons not placed in the care of the visitor by the central office. When a book is finished (or if the visitor resigns from the committee), the counterfoils or books must be at once returned to the central office.

All amounts are to be entered on the report form in the column provided, and also on the re-visitation sheet on the front of the case papers. Attention to these details is essential to the correctness and proper record of the work.

Any case of imposition by selling or giving tickets to other persons, if detected, should be summarily checked, and reported to the central office.

There is no charge made for delivery of coal to the home.

The tickets are to be filled in with either ink or indelible pencils. Ordinary black lead pencils should in no case be used.

Any assistance being received from other sources is to be recorded on the case papers. Visitors should not give private gifts to the applicants, except after consultation with the district committee. There is no objection to assistance being obtained by visitors from other quarters, provided the matter is duly reported and approved.

(11) The Workshops of the Society and the Unemployed.

With a view to test the statement of applicants professing to be unemployed, and to assist an able-bodied man to tide over a period of temporary lack of work, orders on the workshops are given out by the agents, and occasionally by the friendly visitors. These orders should not be handed to beggars or casual applicants.

Experience has proved the value of the society's work-test. Approximately, about 50 per cent. of the men make use of the orders. Of those who do not, some already have work, others obtain it immediately, and a large number seem indisposed to do any labour to support their families. It is obvious that no relief should be given to such persons, but the aid of the law should be obtained to compel them to do their duty.

The friendly visitor will frequently have a case in hand where the bread-winner is at the workshops. Reports are issued to the visitors every week by the manager, stating the earnings and conduct of the men in question. Should the visitor not receive any report, he may conclude that the man is not at the workshops.

The manager occasionally obtains work elsewhere for men ; but the purpose of the workshops is merely to aid a man temporarily, leaving him to find work at his trade in the usual way. The society could not suitably take the place of a man's own efforts in this respect.

The men attend before 9 a.m., as a general rule, but they are admitted up to 10 a.m., and they are expected to work (with an interval at noon) up to 5 p.m. Full opportunity is therefore given for seeking work elsewhere early in the morning. A man may be admitted at a later hour, provided he can explain his late attendance reasonably.

After several days' work, a man's card may be stopped, to give him a better chance to look around for work in his own trade ; but, should he be industrious, he can return to the workshops and again resume his work there.

By making a proper effort, a man may receive from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. daily at the workshops. Piece-work is adopted, and a bonus is given beyond the amount actually earned according to scale. No man, however little he earns, is paid less than 1s. a day.

If a man is deliberately wasting his time, or is quite incapable of any reasonable effort ; or if it is found that he is of bad character, he will be discharged, and a report of the circumstances will be sent on to the visitor in charge of the family.

Patience and kindness are exercised, and if a man is anxious to do his best, but is physically weak, lighter work is given to him. Chopping and sawing wood, bundling chips, and making fire-lighters, dipping and other work is provided. The work is not difficult or arduous.

Work orders may be given to men by the friendly visitor if the family is in his charge, and the man has not already received one from the agent, or the order has been lost. The particulars must be filled in properly, and either "yes" or "no" marked in the space "I.R.G." (If relief given).

Attendance cards are handed by the manager to all men put to work. The amount paid, and the date when earned is given on the card. The friendly visitor can thus check the man's statements by an inspection of his card. If the man is out when the visitor calls, and the card is not visible, directions should be given for the card to be left for the inspection of the visitor at a later visit.

In addition to wages paid, relief is given to the family as required, if the man's progress and credentials are satisfactory. Relief is usually given by the friendly visitor on his weekly visit. From the manager's report he will be able to judge if relief is desirable. If the man is able-bodied and will not work, no relief should be given. If no report has been received from the workshops, visitors are expected to call and ascertain why the work-order has not been used. It is not sufficient to assume that the family are not in need. Sickness, accident, or other employment may be the cause ; and such information is most important, and should be ascertained promptly.

Frequently a statement is made that by attending the workshops a man is prevented from obtaining his ordinary employment. Trades Union men may, it is said, lose their allowance by attendance, or they may have to follow up their chance of work at their club room. All such cases should be taken on their merits, and careful enquiry made. The club card, etc., may be asked for to verify the statement, and only in rare cases can the work test be dispensed with. The society will preferably assist a man who, by joining some provident society or club, has endeavoured to provide for the future. As a rule, however, such cases do not apply for charitable assistance.

Vagrants and beggars of the tramp class, and men living in common lodging-houses, are not eligible for the workshops. They should be sent to the relieving officer or the workhouse.

(12) Medical Relief.

On application to the relieving officer, and if an order is given by him, medical attention from the parish doctor, and sometimes nourishing food, can be obtained by sick persons who are unable to pay for treatment. Such medical relief carries with it no loss of vote. The healthy-minded aversion to going "on the rates" is in this matter hardly existent.

When there is sickness in the family, the visitor should observe if the hygienic conditions are of a satisfactory nature. Bad smelling drains, overcrowding, lack of ventilation, dirty persons, and dirty clothes, are common causes of disease. The advantages of nutritious diet and a wise selection of food are frequently quite unknown to the poor. Bedding and blankets can be provided through the Central Office in suitable cases.

If the visitor meets with a case of infectious disease he should notify the Health Department (Municipal Buildings); or communicate with the Central Office, who will see that the matter is reported. In certain cases the law requires such notification by the head of the family.

Cases of chronic disease are not generally treated by the society. These are referred to the parish hospital or other institutions. Special incurable cases are sometimes procured admission to institutions such as the Home for Female Incurables, or the Turner Memorial Home of Rest for men; the society contributing towards the weekly charge.

Cases of serious illness or accident are to receive proper medical treatment. A doctor should be seen, and, if necessary, patients instructed to enter or attend one of the hospitals. A large number of outdoor patients are treated at the various dispensaries. It is sometimes advisable to make relief conditional on such action being taken by the applicant. Visitors should remember the various branches of the Queen Victoria District Nursing Association, and, if necessary, communicate with them. The nurses are prepared to visit any case which is reported to them.

Cases of consumption are generally referred to the guardians, who have power to send patients to their sanatorium. In exceptional instances, recommendations for the Consumption Hospital in Mount Pleasant, and Delamere Sanatorium can be obtained through the Central Office, on the advice of the society's medical officer.

Surgical instruments may be granted through the Central Office to poor persons, but they can also be obtained from the guardians. The recipients should be urged to save, in view of the necessity of repairs, etc., to the instruments, and the replacing of those worn out.

The Central Office grant Convalescent Orders on Buxton, Woolton, Southport, West Kirby, and New Brighton Convalescent Institutions. Frequently a case of illness requires such treatment to ensure permanent benefit. The order is usually handed by the friendly visitor to the patient, and a letter containing instructions to the visitor accompanies it. A visit should be made to the patient on his return to ascertain if he has derived proper benefit.

It is most desirable for visitors to point out the duty of a man joining a club or society providing sickness or accident benefit. Friendly societies, tontine clubs, and trade unions largely provide in this way. Often, through age or physical disability, a man may prove ineligible for membership, but this obvious duty is lamentably neglected in too many cases. A number of friendly society members are connected with the district committees, and will gladly follow up suitable cases in order to persuade men to make such provision for their future.

Co-operation with the Health Department is desirable. The Central Office grant special orders on the Corporation milk depôts, for milk for young children when they are delicate. The lady visitors of the Health Department can advise on numerous points.

Women of respectable character, unable to provide a private nurse, can obtain attention from a midwife, and if necessary from a doctor also, through the Ladies Charity.

Applications should be made at the Ladies' Charity and Lying-in Hospital, Brownlow Hill. . . .

(13) Charity and the Poor Law.

Under the English Poor Law, no one need starve for want of the absolute necessities of life, food, clothing, and shelter. The relieving officer is always accessible; the workhouse door stands, so to speak, always open. It is either ignorance of this fact, or want of confidence in the help being readily available, which leads sympathetic persons to respond to the appeals of beggars who represent themselves as in absolute destitution. The guardians are empowered to assist those in distress, either by outdoor relief or within the workhouse; and they are able to treat the sick, either in their well-appointed hospitals or in their own homes. They can assist the able-bodied by setting them to work; and in regard to children, they may place them in cottage homes or board them out with respectable families.

The guardians also have important powers of dealing with lunatics and others mentally afflicted, and can deal in many ways with women and children temporarily or permanently deprived of support.

Persons who should be left to the guardians as being outside the sphere of charitable help may be divided into two main classes, viz:—

(1) Those whose distress is chronic, and who cannot be helped out of their difficulty by temporary aid.

(2) Those who are of confirmed bad character. It is the function of charity to concentrate its resources on those whose condition may be permanently improved by temporary help.

Criminals are dealt with by the police, but there remain a large number of persons morally unfit, and therefore in chronic difficulties. The only hope for such people lies in a renovation of character, and if any influence of a reformatory nature can be brought to bear upon them from other sources, it is desirable for visitors to put such in motion. Cases of this type are, however, unsuitable for ordinary treatment by the society.

Associations such as the Discharged Prisoners Aid Society, the Church of England Temperance Society, and the police court missionaries, may be wisely communicated with, and the Church Army and Salvation Army can sometimes effect a reformation.

The mentally unfit are well provided for in the Poor Law asylums. They are ineligible members of society by reason of their affliction, and are much happier and more advantageously situated in the asylum than elsewhere.

The epileptic and the feeble-minded are treated by the guardians, if the family are unable to support and care for them properly. The Home for Epileptics, Maghull, and the Homes for Feeble-minded Girls at Lancaster, Knotty Ash and Parkgate, receive paying patients. The Education Committee, moreover, has power to provide for children so afflicted.

Deserted wives should always be referred to the relieving officer, and generally, cases of old people whose children do not maintain them, though able to do so. Cases of this type usually present features calling for the legal powers exercised by the guardians; and charity cannot hope to assume their functions in such matters. Widows unable to support their families, should also, as a rule, be left to the guardians; though it is very desirable that they should be placed in charge of some friendly visitor, who would take the part of a friend and adviser to them.

The society is frequently able to intervene, however, in the following contingency:—The man who is the breadwinner falls sick, or meets with an accident. He is removed to the parish hospital, or receives treatment by the parish doctor. The society intervenes to support the family pending his recovery, provided that his incapacity is of a temporary nature, and the family are of good character. In very exceptional cases of respectable old people, the society co-operates with the parish authorities in making up a sufficient weekly allowance for decent maintenance.

But except in rare instances, it is held as a general principle that the functions of the Poor Law and of charity should be kept quite separate: cases suitable for parish relief being left to the guardians. One reason for this is obvious.

The more closely charitable societies adhere to this rule, the more probable is it that parish allowances will be made adequate. Friendly visitors can always obtain advice from the central office as to the advisability of referring cases to the relieving officer, who is by law compelled to temporarily relieve any case of sudden and urgent necessity. The applicants have then to appear before the relief committee of the guardians at their next meeting, when the cases are considered in due course.

The society closely co-operates with the guardians. The West Derby, Liverpool, and Toxteth Boards of Guardians forward lists of applicants for relief, to the society; and thus a wholesome check against overlapping is provided. Suitable cases for the society are observed and taken in hand by the central office, and on the other hand, imposition is detected. The society is constantly communicating with the various boards of guardians.

It is observed that the large majority of those persons referred to the parish by the society's visitors do not make any application to the guardians, though directed to do so. How such persons contrive to exist is a problem. The inference is that in many cases there are sources of support which have not been divulged. The casual assistance of benevolent persons may account for a certain percentage. Neighbours, friends, and relatives, constantly help cases of distress—although the poor are most reluctant to admit this fact to strangers—and it is very difficult to ascertain the actual extent of such assistance in individual cases. Many families apply for help again and again to the society, and practically no change is observed in their condition; in spite of the fact that they have been invariably instructed to apply to the guardians. If such families could be permanently supervised on the Elberfeld system, the problem of poverty in this country might be better understood, and perhaps be more effectively and wisely treated. The society has arranged with the guardians to supervise a number of cases of widows receiving parish relief where it is thought that friendly advice would prove beneficial.

The popular conception of the Poor Law as a harsh and repellent administration is difficult to understand. Should friendly visitors desire to have a closer knowledge of the Poor Law administration locally, arrangements can be made for them to visit the workhouses, schools, and other institutions, when they will certainly appreciate the excellent provision for the inmates, and the valuable work which is discharged by the administrative officers.

(14) Widows.

In suitable cases, the society is prepared to place widows, with a sufficient number of children of working age (say two or three over fourteen), in situations in the factory districts. During past years, a large number of such families have already been transferred, to their permanent benefit, and greatly to the satisfaction of all persons concerned. The fact that the widow is in receipt of parish relief does not disqualify her in any way. As a general rule, girls are preferred to boys; and some factory owners incur very considerable expense in supporting such families until the children can earn a living.

If the widow has a family of young children, under working age, it is generally a matter for the guardians, who grant an allowance if they think desirable. But if the matter is thoroughly taken up, it is often found that by co-operation on the part of friends and relatives, a widow can be made self-supporting and kept off the rates.

Aged widows without means of support, present a very difficult problem for charitable help. Except in cases suitable for extended relief, these are not relieved by the society but left to the guardians. Incurable cases are procured admission to the Female Incurable Home in Upper Parliament Street occasionally, and some old persons may obtain admission to the Widow's Home, or the almshouses.

The Association of Trained Charwomen aims at meeting a distinct want in training women to do a better class of cleaning, etc. Opportunities also occur for the training of widows of a superior class as certificated midwives, nurses, etc. . .

It is often wise on the part of the widow to allow some of her children to be placed in schools, where they are properly educated, taught a trade, etc. The society is sometimes able to assist in efforts of this kind, but the guardians have sometimes greater facilities at hand in this matter.

(15) Extended Relief for Old Persons.

In deciding extended relief cases, the executive committee bear in mind the following considerations:—

- (1) Good character.
- (2) Advanced age.
- (3) Inability to maintain themselves.
- (4) Reasonable efforts to provide for old age (allowing, however, for exceptional difficulties).
- (5) Willingness of relatives to assist.
- (6) Sufficiency of the allowance to permit the recipient to live in decent comfort.
- (7) Allowance granted for a limited period only, and that the recipient's circumstances be revised and reported on before renewal.
- (8) Allowance taken to recipient's place of residence regularly by a visitor.

The allowance should be taken in person by the visitor to the recipient's house. If the visitor is unable to go, he may occasionally ask a friend to do so. Payments should never be sent by post. If away, or prevented from visiting for several weeks, the visitor should notify the central office immediately.

In the case of any sudden change in the recipient's circumstances, a report should be at once made to the central office. In illness, the report should state the name and address of the doctor attending, and also if the recipient can be nursed at home, or is in need of special nourishment, etc. The visitor should report to the district committee if anything is necessary, such as clothing, bedding, etc. Any increase or decrease of contributions from relatives or others should be reported also.

Periodically, report forms are issued to the visitors, so that the executive committee may be assisted in their revision of these cases. Reports should be submitted first to the district committees. The ordinary reports are to be written up in the usual way on the case papers. Amounts spent should be entered both on the front sheet and on the report form. Signatures of the recipient, which should be in ink, are to appear against each payment on the receipt-slip supplied to the visitor. These receipts and the front sheets are handed in at the next meeting.

The visitation of these aged and distressed persons can be made a delight and a benefit both to the visitor and to the persons visited. The friendship thus gradually established often becomes a very close one; and in this work may be found, perhaps, the most secure and positive opportunity of brightening and uplifting the lives of those poorer ones who, in the evening of their days, need the influence and presence of a true friend.

APPENDIX No. III. (F.)

Handed in by Mr. W. Grisewood, Liverpool. (Q. 37110.)

THE COLLECTION OF SUBSCRIPTIONS TO CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS THROUGH A CENTRAL OFFICE. BY W. GRISEWOOD, SECRETARY OF THE LIVERPOOL CENTRAL RELIEF AND CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

The object of the present paper is a very simple and practical one, namely, to give a brief account of the establishment of the system of receiving and collecting subscriptions to local charitable institutions, which for the last twenty-nine years has been in operation in Liverpool, and to explain somewhat in detail the way in which it is carried out, and the results which have followed its adoption.

The proposal to receive subscriptions through a central office in Liverpool dates back about half a century; though it was not until thirty-seven years ago that an attempt was made to carry it into actual practice. The matter was then taken up by a gentleman favourable to the scheme, but who had hitherto taken no part in its promotion, and an arrangement was made with one of the banks to receive and transfer to the charities any subscriptions that might be tendered without application. No special means were taken to give the matter publicity or to provide the necessary forms, and probably from these causes, as well as because it was not systematically and energetically carried out, it fell through after one year's trial. This failure retarded the adoption of the plan for some years.

A circumstance which probably helped forward the movement was the publication in 1873, at the instance of a few gentlemen, of a combined list of the subscribers to thirty-eight of the principal Liverpool charities, both medical and general. This list brought to light several facts altogether unlooked for. It showed:

First, that the regular annual subscribers to the whole of these thirty-eight charities numbered only 6,668, these contributing in all 19,365 subscriptions, amounting to £28,101—being an average of about three subscriptions, or four guineas, to each subscriber.

Secondly, that of the 6,668 subscribers, 3,491, or 52 per cent., supported only one charity, and 1,051 or 16 per cent., supported only two charities.

Thirdly, that of the 19,365 subscriptions, 10,590, or considerably more than half, were contributed by 1,193 persons.

It may be well to point out that the combined list was not exactly a fair criterion of the liberality of individuals, for the following reasons: that it took no account of donations; that it made no distinction between large and small subscriptions, and that it excluded distinctively religious charities which are often largely supported by benevolent persons whose names do not appear in the lists of what may be called the secular charities. A number of persons also contribute anonymously to the charities through yearly collections in places of worship. Still the list was useful for the purpose named, that is, as showing how few comparatively were the regular annual subscribers to the charities.

The next step in the movement was taken in 1875, when a memorial signed by about 200 of the largest subscribers was presented to the mayor of the city at that time (Lieut.-Colonel Steble) requesting him to take such measures as he might deem best to establish a central office for the collection of subscriptions. After consultation with the promoters of the memorial, the mayor referred it to the committee of the Central Relief and Charity Organisation Society for their consideration, and they in reply expressed their readiness to undertake the duty through their staff, should it be desired by the various charities, the committee reserving to themselves the right of selection. The intention at that time was to collect, through one agency, the whole of the subscriptions to approved charities, in lieu of the existing collection by individual charities. On the matter being put before the charities a sufficient number did not avail themselves of the arrangement to promise success to the movement in that form, but several of the leading ones expressed their willingness to allow the society to receive, during the months of January and February, any subscriptions that might be tendered at its office, retaining in their own hands the collection of the balance then remaining unpaid. The committee of the society accepted this modification, and this was the plan in operation from 1877 to 1881 inclusive; that is, the society simply undertook to receive and transfer to certain charities such subscriptions or donations as might be tendered without application, but did not send out a collector. In 1877 the list comprised eighteen charities, whose aggregate subscriptions were £18,459, of which £4,641, or 25 per cent., was paid in at the Central Relief Society's office during January and February, and in addition donations amounting to £328. The number of contributors was 539. In 1881 there were sixty-six charities on the list, whose aggregate subscriptions were £35,103, of which £15,072, or 43 per cent., was paid in, and in addition £5,216 in donations. The contributors in this year numbered 954; the average amount of subscriptions from each subscriber being a little over 15 guineas.

In order to ascertain to what extent the subscription lists benefited by this scheme, the treasurers were asked to furnish returns of the amount of new and increased subscriptions received through the society (deducting any decreases); and these returns showed that the charities had gained in this way:—

being 8½ per cent. of the total subscriptions passing through the society's hands. In other words, one guinea in every twelve was a new subscription. With quite unimportant exceptions all the charities participated each year in the increase. The returns were discontinued after 1881 as no longer necessary, the fact that the charities actually benefited financially having been fully established.

This result fully bore out the opinion of the promoters of the scheme, that the charities would benefit by a list of them being brought prominently before the public, and increased facilities for paying contributions being at the same time afforded.

For the last twenty-seven years contributions have also been invited for an unappropriated fund, the purpose of which is thus explained:—“Experience has shown that there are a number of persons who, though well disposed to assist benevolent institutions, cannot assist all, and in the multitude of claimants are at a loss to make a selection, and also that some of the more wealthy find a difficulty in discriminating amongst the charities. To enable these to contribute, an unappropriated fund, to be distributed amongst such of the charities on the list as may be thought desirable by the committee of this society, has been added. A list of contributions to this fund, and particulars of its disposal, will be published in the society's annual report. It is not intended that this fund should take the place of any existing subscriptions to the individual charities.”

Particulars of the yearly receipts for this fund are given in the statement on p. 21. The total amount received in the twenty-seven years has been £5,910.

The yearly sums were distributed by the committee of the Central Relief Society after a careful consideration of the financial position of the various charities.

A few words as to the way in which the scheme is carried out. Previously to the beginning of each year from 11,000 to 12,000 blank lists are issued. They are sent to all subscribers, and also to any members of the Exchange and the mercantile associations, and to tradesmen and residents in the principal quarters of the town, who may not be subscribers. The list contains the names of the charities, with the amounts of subscriptions as given in the previous published reports, and an explanatory circular on the back.

With the lists are issued copies of a pamphlet containing circulars from such societies as wish to avail of this mode of making their wants known, usually giving a brief statement of their objects and financial position. The expense of the pamphlet is covered by a charge according to the space occupied.

In the present year (1906), this pamphlet contains statements of work and appeals from eighty-six charities.

A printed receipt enumerating the subscriptions is given from a counterfoil book. The moneys received are all banked and are paid over at short intervals by cheques to the banking accounts of the respective charities. The amount of risk therefore from the transference of moneys is reduced to a minimum. The treasurers are at the same time advised of the payment, and a list of the subscriptions and donations, included in the cheque, is furnished to them.

The rate of commission which the society charges for receiving subscriptions varies according to the amount, as shown below, but in every case is considerably less than the cost of collection in the ordinary way.

As already mentioned, the plan just described was that in operation as regards all the charities associated in the movement up to 1881. In 1882 a change was made in the direction of a return to the original proposal. A few of the charities having then asked whether the society would undertake the collection of the whole of their subscriptions, it was induced to again proffer its services for this purpose to all the charities on its list. The result was that twenty-nine of the charities gave their assent, this number subsequently increasing to forty-eight in the present year (1906), while the remainder prefer to continue the existing arrangement. Accordingly, at the termination of the first two months, subscribers' lists are prepared, from a classified register, of the subscriptions still outstanding for these charities, which are then applied for by the collector personally, or, when the distance will not admit of this, by post. The list shows the subscriptions given in the previous year, and contains a blank column to be filled up by the subscriber with the amounts proposed to be given for the current year.

The charge is a percentage varying according to the amount collected and the labour involved—the larger lists of course costing relatively less than the smaller to collect. The charge for receiving contributions in January and February only, where no application is made other than sending out the list and pamphlet, is as follows:—Where the receipts are:—£500 and over, 1 per cent.; £100 and under £500, 1½ per cent.; under £100, 2 per cent.

The charge for collecting the whole of the subscriptions, entailing as it does considerably more trouble and expense, is as a rule 4 per cent. on the full list.

The collection has been carried out to the entire satisfaction of the various treasurers, not, however, without much arduous work and perseverance on the part of the collectors. It may be added that from the beginning all the books and vouchers have been audited annually by one of the principal firms of chartered accountants in the city, and a summary published in the society's annual report. The books are open at any time for the inspection of the various treasurers, with whom, naturally, there is frequent communication.

The system is now thoroughly established, and the two months' list includes practically all charities for which the society could undertake to receive. It has not hitherto been thought advisable to include in the Central Relief Society's list any institutions having exclusively religious objects; a separate arrangement for these has been in operation for several years. The Liverpool diocesan finance committee receives and transmits subscriptions to church societies, both local and national, and the association of religious agencies provides similarly for Nonconformist and other institutions.

At the outset it was anticipated that objections to the system would arise; but these anticipations have proved groundless.

It was feared, for instance, that the smaller charities would benefit at the expense of the larger ones, by subscribers dividing the subscriptions they gave to the latter amongst the former. Even in the earlier years, however, the returns of gains, showing all the charities to have more or less benefited, seemed to indicate that this was not the case, and with the fuller knowledge now possessed by the committee, through having the collection of the whole of the subscriptions of many of the charities under their supervision, they are in a position to say that there is no ground whatever for such an apprehension.

Again: some concern was very properly felt lest the collectors, some of whom had for years been engaged in this work, might suffer through the loss of this occupation. In all new measures it is difficult to entirely escape some cases of hardship, but the change here described has come about so gradually that we are not aware of any such cases having arisen. The collecting of charitable subscriptions was only a portion of the collectors' employment, with one or two exceptions, and in one of the most important of these, compensation was provided by the Central Relief Committee out of the commissions received.

Another objection suggested was that the charities would suffer by losing the advocacy of collectors personally acquainted with, and interested in, their positions. This objection would have more force if it were intended that the collector of the Central Relief Society should supersede entirely the representatives of the charities, but this is not the case. On the contrary, previously to the end of the year, each treasurer is consulted with a view to his using personal influence to secure any outstanding subscriptions that might not otherwise be obtained. It is unnecessary to add, however, that no collector can take the place of the personal interest of an energetic treasurer in maintaining the subscription list at a proper level.

It was also thought it would be inconvenient for many subscribers to pay all their subscriptions in one sum, but the number of such cases has proved to be very limited, and where they occur the amounts are called for at the subscriber's own convenience. Again: it was feared that the effect of showing contributors how much they subscribed in the aggregate might be that they would reduce their contributions. We have not found this result to follow, and, on the other hand, it has frequently occurred that, when a person of any degree of benevolence has had presented to him our list, now including 115 charities, to only one of which, perhaps, he contributed, he has been led to see the duty of extending his liberality and giving to several others. "Evil is wrought by want of thought as well as want of heart," and failure to do one's duty has often a similar origin. One cannot fail to observe that, to some it is a positive luxury to do good in this way.

In enumerating the advantages of the scheme, I would place in the very front its convenience to subscribers, but especially to those who contribute to several charities; and when it is mentioned that in 1905 the average payment of the 1,013 persons who paid their contributions in January and February was £25, it will be seen that these are of sufficient importance to deserve consideration. This is, in fact, to a very large extent, a subscriber's question, as it enables, in many cases, 30 or 40, and in some cases 80 to 100, subscriptions to be handed over in one amount, instead of being paid singly at all times of the year. It also diminishes the risk of any unauthorised person collecting, as has at least once been the case in Liverpool. Indeed, so great has the convenience proved, that several subscribers have refused to continue their contributions to charities which did not avail of the arrangement and so save them trouble.

Again, as a result of the facilities for at once acting upon any benevolent impulse, there has been, as already stated, an increase in the annual subscriptions of £1,000 each year, and to this, no doubt, a great part of the donations received in the past twenty-nine years, amounting to £94,691, as well as the whole of the £5,910 Unappropriated Fund, might be added. On several occasions lists have been sent in containing a subscription to every charity enumerated. On one occasion a gentleman brought a donation of £500, for which a good year of business supplied the impulse, and for two successive years an unknown benefactor availed himself of this organisation to divide £2,500 amongst certain charities on the list selected by him, notice in the Press being the only acknowledgment possible.

The question has been asked whether the subscription lists of the charities actually show an increase corresponding with the figures quoted above. As a matter of fact the aggregate subscriptions have increased; but it should be borne in mind that the subscriptions naturally tend to decrease by deaths, removals, and withdrawals, so that there will always be a necessity for the different committees to exert themselves to keep up the list by bringing in new contributors. In any case it is clear that, whatever may be the position of the various charities, they are better off than they would have been to the extent of the gains through the Central Relief Society.

The saving of expense to the charities in the way of commission is also of considerable account, and in cases where there is no direct saving on account of the collection being made by a regular official, not paid by commission, the advantage is realised by his being set free for other duties.

A further advantage of the centralisation of the collection of subscriptions is, that it is one very practical form of charity organisation. Differing theories and methods of operation may prevent the various charities from ever combining to form one organised body, and co-operation with each other will probably be best brought about by their uniting for practical objects such as that described here. One outcome of the scheme has been the formation of an association of charities for the discussion of matters bearing on their common interests. There is abundant scope and necessity for joint conference and action between the charities.

Amongst subjects for consideration may be reckoned, for instance, that of more systematically and carefully inquiring into the merits of applicants to the various institutions, and their ability to contribute something towards the cost of the benefits they receive. Another question, which would naturally occupy the attention of such a conference, would be how to increase the present comparatively small number of subscribers.

It was estimated in 1878 that there were at that time 20,000 persons in Liverpool able to contribute regularly to charities, as compared with 6,700 supporters of the thirty-eight leading charities, and 1,200 who practically contributed more than half the regular subscriptions to these institutions. To-day it would be quite safe to increase the number of possible subscribers in the city to, say, 30,000.

“One reason of the comparatively small number of names to be found upon our subscription lists is in the system under which at present such support is sought. The presidents, treasurers, and committees of the charities are drawn largely from one circle, and in consequence, these gentlemen, having one and the same range of acquaintance, appeal to the same persons for assistance to the institution in which they take a special interest.

This is not a matter of surprise, for no single institution could appeal with sufficient effect, or could afford to support that organised canvass necessary to embrace the very large area open to be worked for such purpose. If, however, a means can be devised for united action on the part of the charities by a systematic and joint application for aid, a large addition could, without doubt, be made to their annual subscription lists.”—(Forwood.)

We are frequently applied to for information on the best means of establishing and carrying on the system, and therefore it may be well to summarise the practical measures which experience has shown to be most likely to ensure success.

(1) The first step is to obtain the concurrence of the larger subscribers to the charities. This should take some definite form, such as a memorial or requisition for the establishment of a central collection to the managers of the charities. This may be submitted to the charities individually, or to a meeting of treasurers, when any information required can be supplied.

(2) The committee which is appointed to undertake the duty should select the institutions to be included in the scheme. The qualification in Liverpool is that the institution should be carrying on a bona fide philanthropic work, and be under the management of a committee of responsible persons; should publish a report and balance sheet; and have annual subscriptions of not less than £50.

(3) Definite arrangements should be made with each charity beforehand, so that there may be proper authority for receiving contributions, and a clear understanding as to the commission to be charged.

(4) The moneys received should be regularly paid over to the institutions concerned, with a proper list of the subscriptions and donations included in the payment. This payment is best made through the banking accounts of the charities concerned.

(5) The forms and plan of books made use of by the Liverpool Central Relief and Charity Organisation Society are at the service of any committee who may be setting up the scheme.

(6) The system may be carried out either by an existing institution, or by a committee formed for the purpose. The former will naturally be the more economical plan, especially if an office and nucleus of staff are already available. For many reasons the charity organisation, or other corresponding society, may, with advantage, be entrusted with the work, as in Liverpool.

(7) It should not, however, be made part of any general scheme of organisation or co-ordination of the local charities unless there is a desire for such on the part of the charities themselves, as this is apt to suggest that it may lead to intervention in the internal affairs of the institutions. In Liverpool, we scrupulously avoid anything which could give rise to such an impression, regarding ourselves in fact as acting merely as agents for the charities which entrust us to undertake this service for them. This is, no doubt, a great element in our retaining the hearty good will and co-operation of the charities. The working of such a scheme, as shown above, tends in the direction of the co-operation of charities, but every step in that direction must come about naturally, from a conviction of its necessity on the part of the responsible committees of the various institutions.

(8) Finally, the scheme is not one for “pooling” charitable contributions in a general fund, but for giving facilities for the payment of contributions to charities specifically indicated by the donors, except as regards the Unappropriated Fund.

* Information furnished by Miss Emily C. Gerrish, agent Liverpool District Provident Society.

It will be noticed from the above statement that the transactions of the District Provident Society are going down steadily, and this is coincident with the decline in the number of visitors who voluntarily collect the savings at the homes of the working classes. The amount thus saved depends very greatly on the calls of these collectors, and it has of late years been found difficult to keep up their number. It is an instance of the way in which fashion changes, even in benevolent work.

The failure to enlist voluntary service in this case may suggest a difficulty in obtaining voluntary friendly visitors for work in co-operation with the Poor Law. Where, however, a sufficient interest can be aroused in the condition of the poor, it has been found that a large number of helpers may be attracted to the work.

The instances given in my evidence of voluntary organisations in several large towns, including guilds of help, such as that at Bradford, were intended to show that if the use of voluntary help were approved in connection with Poor Law work these organisations might form a foundation on which to build.

Other forms of thrift are the large friendly societies, such as the Oddfellows and the tontine societies, which are very popular in Liverpool, information of both of which can be obtained from the registrar of friendly societies; and also the Post Office Savings Bank.

Note by Witness.

My observation on above cases is that while, no doubt, when they began to receive parish relief the family was too young to support itself, that state of things has now changed, and assuming the family were willing to work, and otherwise suitable, self-supporting work could be found for them, if not in Liverpool, in a factory. If the family had been under the intelligent and kindly supervision of a friendly visitor this might have been kept in view.

* This family, shortly after their arrival, were earning £1 10s. 6d. per week, but hearing that work was plentiful in Lancashire they removed and have since been lost sight of.

† A married daughter with two young children has joined Mrs. B., and earns 10s. 8d. per week.

‡ In this case work was found for the father, who is a cripple.

§ Mrs. D. does not work in the factory, but she earns 5/- weekly by taking care of children.

Note by Witness.

The above statement gives a few illustrations from families recently sent to work in the factories. No one can reasonably doubt, and certainly the people themselves do not, that a transference of this kind is an immense change for the better in every respect. Nothing could be more miserable and hopeless than the condition of the J.-L. family when we sent them away six weeks ago. They are now in comfort and independence.

Copy of letter received by the society from

Mrs. E. A. J.

"It is time I should write to let you know how we are getting on here. I am very glad to say the girls are doing very well, and they like the work. Miss S. is very pleased at the way they have got on. We have a nice little house with a small garden at back and front.

I am very thankful for what you have done for me, and I trust we shall be able in June to pay you back. Miss S. has been most kind in more ways than one. I am pleased to say we found everything ready when we arrived here. Thanking you again.—I am,

"Yours sincerely,

"Mr. Grisewood."

LIVERPOOL CENTRAL RELIEF AND CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

REPORT BY MR. J. W. DAY, THEIR ASSISTANT SECRETARY, DURING THE SUMMER OF 1907, OF VISIT TO FACTORIES THROUGH THE AGENCY OF THE SOCIETY.

Thursday, August 8th, 1907.

MILL No. 1.

"E." is a pretty little village surrounded by high hills on three sides, on the Dore and Chinley branch of the Midland Railway, and in the neighbourhood of such well-known places as Hope, Castleton, Hathersage, Eyam, and Stoney Middleton.

The mill is very prettily situated by a stream, a short walk from the station. The work here is known as doubling and twisting. Commencing with spun yarn, the machines wind from two spools on to one reel, and, when full, these are removed and put on another machine which twists the two threads into one. The yarn is then run through slits in brass tongues to clear it, and it is afterwards wound into skeins. The machines are so finely adjusted that if one thread breaks, that particular part of the machine is thrown out of gear, and the girl-minder collects and ties the ends, sets the reel going, and repeats the process further along the frame if necessary. As payment is by the piece, the quickest workers make the most money, and some of the girls work very rapidly. I found one of the girls sent by us tending four frames containing 232 reels each, and doing the work better than a boy who had only two frames to mind. This girl earns about 12s. 6d. per week, and the total income of the six workers (one half-timer) in this family is about £3 per week. Two of these girls are orphans from the workhouse, and there is another daughter who is, unfortunately, an invalid, and unable to work. I found Mrs. A. looking the picture of health, baking bread in a kitchen 15½ feet by 13½ feet, and, on being asked how she liked the change, she exclaimed: "Oh! sir, if I had only known, I should have been here long before I did come." She told me that the girls all liked the work, and that if for any reason she had to leave, she would on no account return to Liverpool, but would go to some other factory. She is living in a three-storeyed house, with a large yard and small front garden, at a rent of 4s. 6d. a week, and coal costs only from 11s. 6d. to 14s. a ton.

This factory is situated in a valley near Dovedale, one of the beauty spots of Derbyshire. Owing to the extreme difficulty of access, I was only able to stay a very short time, but I was able to note that the character of the work is the same as at "E." The mill is a larger one, and the hands live in adjoining cottages, which do not present such a pleasing appearance as those in some of the districts I visited later.

Mrs. B.'s kitchen was anything but inviting, and I did not stay long. Mrs. B. is glad she left Liverpool, and the girls both like the work, but they say they can never settle in such a dull place. Three children are working, and earning about 32s. weekly, whilst Mrs. B. also earns about 5s. per week by minding children.

Mrs. C. and her three girls have not been long in the mill, and their earnings are consequently small. The two girls have been making from 15s. to 20s. a week, and Mrs. C. was hoping that work would be found for her as well. They were well pleased with the change.

Monday, September 9th, 1907.

MILL No. 3.

This is an immense place employing 5,000 hands in carpet manufacturing. The work is not nearly so dirty as I had imagined, and many of the girls and women in some of the departments look quite neat and trim, although, of course, a good many are the reverse.

Mrs. D. and her eldest daughter are engaged in attending machines which wind linen yarn from skeins on to bobbins, and from bobbins on to cops. The work does not appear laborious, and they earn on an average about 24s. a week between them. They have a three-roomed house, with a large kitchen, in a not very good quarter near the mill, for which they pay 3s. a week. Food and coal prices are much the same as in Liverpool, except that flour is only 1d. per pound. Mrs. D.'s only complaint is against the class of people she has to work with, and she does not intend to let her second daughter commence work amongst the other young girls. I advised her to speak to the manager with a view to this girl starting in another of the many mills.

Mrs. E., one daughter and one son, are earning from 25s. to 30s. a week amongst them, and Mrs. E. expresses herself as perfectly content. I heard very good accounts of her daughter and of the girl, F., who went with her, but I was told the boy is a young scamp.

Mrs. G. and her two daughters are earning about 30s. a week. Unfortunately, the elder girl, who is reported to be a good worker, is delicate, and is obliged to be absent now and again, and the other girl thinks she is entitled to only work as many days as her sister, and stays away without reason. This, of course, is due to lack of maternal authority.

The last family sent here, was that of Mrs. H., with one boy and one girl, able to work, and four younger children, and she was afterwards joined by another boy. Each of the boys was earning 12s. a week, and Mrs. H. and her daughter made 18s. between them. The boy J. gave Mrs. H. 7s. a week, and sent something to his mother in Liverpool, so that there was 37s. a week for a family of eight. The boy H. became dissatisfied, and left the mill last week, and his mother says he has returned to Liverpool. The other boy also refuses to stay with her, and she maintains that she cannot keep her family on her own and her daughter's earnings. She has given notice to leave this week, and intends to come back to Liverpool, where she has friends. I pointed out to her that she was very unlikely to earn 18s. a week in Liverpool, but my arguments did not seem to have much effect. The two boys had formerly had casual work in Liverpool as scalers, and no doubt they will return to this precarious occupation.

MILL No. 4.

The firm of J. W. owns four mills in Keighley, Ingrow, and in this valley. Haworth is a fairly large place with a number of mills round about. The church on the hill is famous on account of the father of Charlotte Brontë having been incumbent there, and the famous authoress of "Jane Eyre" wrote many of her works in this district.

The mill is prettily situated in what is known as the Worth Valley, and is a twenty minutes' drive by a circuitous and hilly route from Haworth Station. The valley is well wooded, and the outlook from the mill cottages is very pleasing to the eye after the brick walls of slumland in Liverpool. I arrived too late to see any work going on, but the workers on their way home to tea looked the picture of health and happiness. I went round the mill, and, from what I have seen in others, I was able to note that the work is by no means heavy, although it is certainly constant, and unremitting attention is required to obtain good results. Payment in the spinning department of this mill is by the day, and 9s. 6d. a week is the amount earned by a good spinner, whilst in the weaving shed, where payment is by the piece, a good hand can earn 18s. to 20s. weekly.

I visited three of the families sent there within the last few years, and without exception they expressed themselves as more than pleased with change in their circumstances. The homes of Mrs. K. and Mrs. L. were particularly clean and tidy, and a number of healthy-looking plants in the windows testified to the owner's care and attention. Splendid cottages are obtainable at an inclusive rent of 2s. a week, but coal costs from 18s. to 20s. a ton.

There is another family here named M., who are not at all satisfied, and are giving a deal of trouble. I saw the mother and the eldest girl, who has been ill with a chest complaint, and has been off work seven months until about a month ago. Her mother states that the doctor says the air is too strong for her and she would be better in a town. She is said to have improved very much during a short stay which she had at Liverpool. Their aim appears to get into the mill at Keighley, where there is more life, but as Mr. W. has sufficient workers there he is anxious to keep these people where they are. Mrs. K. has from 25s. to 30s. a week coming in from four workers; Mrs. N. has two of her own girls and two others earning 35s. 6d.; and Mrs. L. receives from her two daughters and two other girls 33s. 6d. a week. To the question: "Would you like to return to Liverpool?" they all answered with a decided negative.

Tuesday, September 10th, 1907.

MILL No. 5.

In my opinion, this is the most beautifully situated of all the mills which I have visited, and those who have travelled between Leeds and Harrogate will have a good idea of the scenery. Ripley itself is a charming little village, and the three miles' walk to the mills is perfectly delightful. The mills are situated deep down in the next valley to the Nidd Valley, and are not a great way from the Brimham Rocks, which enjoy a fair share of fame in the district. There is also a lovely walk through the woods to the neighbouring villages of Hampsthwaite and Birstwith.

The work is spinning and winding silk, and is much cleaner and nicer work than any I have yet seen, whilst competent girls are earning up to 16s. a week.

I visited the home of one woman who was sent by this society seventeen years ago, and found her extremely comfortable and happy. She has a nice cottage at 2s. 9d. per week, and her parlour furniture included a harmonium. One of her daughters plays this instrument in the chapel. She informed me that three of her daughters are comfortably married, and she has three more working, earning 35s. a week. Two daughters of another family, sent from Liverpool seventeen years ago, are also married to men earning 33s. a week each.

Mrs. S. has four children and herself working, and their total earnings amount to 41s. a week, whilst their rent is only 2s. 4d. She told me that she was perfectly satisfied both with the work and the place.

The last family sent was that of Mrs. T., and at the present time she has two girls working full time and two boys who have just commenced as half-timers. They are receiving 22s. a week, and are at present living in rather a poor cottage, rent free. They do not care for the country, but I think they will settle down.

A Mrs. V. and daughter, whom we sent here to join her son, are earning 9s. and 8s. 6d. respectively, and the son 12s.

Owing to the long distance from the railway, coal is dear, the present price being 1s. 2d. per cwt., but food prices are much the same as elsewhere.

Wednesday, September 11th, 1907.

MILL No. 6.

There appears to be a number of mills of different kinds in this district, but they are scattered about, and, being built of stone, they do not detract from the picturesqueness of the scenery. Meltham itself is only a small place, with no amusements, but market tickets to Huddersfield are obtainable on Saturdays for a few coppers.

The work here is very clean, and I was particularly struck with the pleasing appearance of the girls, many of whom were quite smartly dressed in various coloured blouses, whilst all had exceptionally clean hands and faces. In the combing-shed men and boys are employed, and the light though constant employment of the muscles appears to be conducive to health and strength, as I saw some good specimens of muscular humanity. The boys earn from 12s. to 18s. per week, and the men up to 33s. One of these men is the son of a Brighouse alderman, and is said to be worth a few hundreds as a result of his industry. The character of the work requires the boys to be rather tall than otherwise. Several of the frames were idle on account of this being feast week. The feast lasts two days, but some of the men had obtained permission to stay away the whole of the week to visit some seaside resort.

Mrs. W.'s two girls and one boy are said to be excellent workers and of exemplary conduct, although the elder girl told me that they had had some difficulty in getting her sister to settle. They are earning 38s. a week. Owing to the mother living a considerable distance away, I was unable to visit her in the time at my disposal.

I regret that my report of the X. family cannot be so favourable. I arrived at the time of a family crisis. After Mrs. X. arrived at M. she was joined by her eldest daughter, who has been in service, and, subsequently, by her eldest son, who was in the Navy. This lad turned out badly and was dismissed, and the eldest girl has recently left the mother on account of family disagreement. If these people had been possessed of more equable temperaments they might have been very happy, as the three workers are earning 33s. 6d. per week, and their rent is only 4s. a week and rates, whilst they have a garden about 20 yards long in front of the house.

Wednesday, September 11th, 1907.

MILL No. 7.

This is another pleasantly situated village, and the worker's lot should be a happy one. The work is spinning cotton from the raw material, and there is a great deal of dust and fluff about. There are only two families here who have been sent by us. The first of these was a family of three girls and one boy named Y., and a girl cousin, and the mother and step-father. When our attention was called to them, they were earning 15s. a week amongst them, and they are now receiving 58s. 6d. weekly, in spite of the fact that their step-father, who has a withered leg, is not doing anything at present, as the nature of the work upon which he was engaged caused the wound to re-open. Before this happened, he earned 17s. a week, so that their income would now have been £3 15s. 6d., and there is a boy not yet working. The present weekly income is made up by three girls at 16s. each, and one, the youngest, at 10s. 6d. When they arrived they had a loan of £8 7s. 11d., and they have repaid £3 7s. of this to date. They have a four-roomed house at 4s. 5d. per week and taxes, and, without exception, expressed themselves as delighted with their condition.

The other family is that of Mrs. Z. with two daughters, one of whom is only a half-timer. These people were formerly in a wretched little room in Liverpool, almost entirely devoid of furniture, and, as they had been told to leave and they had nowhere else to go, the manager took them more out of pity than anything else. A married daughter, who had obtained a separation from her husband, joined them later on with her two young children, and the combined earnings were 28s. 6d. a week, but, had they been more regular, they might have been making 5s. to 10s. a week more. The daughter M., who was earning 12s., came to Liverpool for a holiday whilst the mill was closed, and has sent word that she will not return unless she is to be put on "sides" (increasing her pay to 16s.) and that money must be sent to pay her fare. I asked the manager to obtain her Liverpool address, so that we might see her, and show her the folly of her conduct. Their rent is 2s. 10d. a week and taxes.

The general impression which I gathered is that in no case is the work laborious; that the workers appear healthy, and, in most cases, quite satisfied with their lot; that their surroundings are infinitely superior to those which they have left; and that their wage-earning capacity has been greatly increased. The only cases of failure are those in which there is intemperance or shiftlessness on the part of the workers themselves—usually the mother—and this probably accounts for the condition in which we found them in Liverpool.

It will be observed that the income shows considerable fluctuation, owing to the receipt from time to time of large legacies and donations. The expenditure on maintenance affords the best index of advancing outlay.

EXTRACTS FROM LECTURE ON THE RELIEF OF THE POOR IN GERMANY, BY W. GRISEWOOD, SECRETARY OF THE LIVERPOOL CENTRAL RELIEF AND CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

Germany, perhaps more than any other country, is the home of charitable and social experiment, the state or municipal authorities undertaking the relief of the indigent, the care and treatment of the sick, the provision of employment in the form of labour colonies for those out of work, relief stations and travellers' homes to enable the unemployed to go from place to place in search of work, and compulsory insurance arrangements to meet sickness, old age, death or unemployment.

It would be a mistake to suppose that this remarkable care of so many classes of dependent persons is due to any excess of benevolence as a national characteristic. It is entered on in the most business-like spirit, and pursued with scientific method, and steers a middle course between the Scylla of impulsive philanthropy and the Charybdis of economic crochet.

The essential principle of the Elberfeld system is the thorough treatment of each case of need, with the object not only of mitigating suffering, but also of devising some means by which the dependent may be restored to self-support, and the enlistment of a body of almoners or visitors sufficiently large to enable the necessary discrimination to be applied, and a sufficient oversight kept of each dependent person.

In Elberfeld itself, which is a manufacturing town of 163,000 inhabitants, there are in the present year (1905) 585 voluntary almoners, each of whom is supposed to have not more than two dependent cases in hand at any one time.

It will help us to see how the good people of Elberfeld were led to the present arrangement if we study a little the experiments they made. Up to 1800, the relief of the poor was chiefly in the hands of the churches, a private charity existed but was badly administered, and there was a great amount of street and house begging, which was practically unchecked. The results were so bad, that in the year named, six citizens were appointed to raise voluntary contributions for the poor and to administer relief. By the next year it was found necessary to increase the number to twelve. These men took steps to set the able-bodied amongst their applicants to work—a very rational proceeding—and registered and classified their clients. The duties, however, being still too onerous, voluntary almoners were introduced, the town was divided into eight districts, and four almoners with an overseer or chairman were delegated to each district. The number of cases to each almoner was not to exceed twelve. The population which in 1802 numbered 12,000, by 1841 had reached 40,000, and the almoners had each forty to fifty cases in his charge. The number of almoners was then increased from thirty-two to sixty-two, the work was subdivided, and the investigation of the cases was separated from the giving of relief.

In the year 1843, a still more important change was made, the poor funds being raised by taxation instead of from voluntary gifts.

The sufferings of the poor at this time were aggravated by a failure of crops, depression of trade and want of work, and an epidemic of cholera, and their numbers increased beyond the power of the arrangements then in existence to cope with, so that it became impossible to secure volunteers to perform such arduous duties as fell to the almoners. Now the town council took a backward step.

It was considered that the substitution of a poor rate for voluntary charity had killed benevolence on one hand, and self-respect and gratitude on the other; and in 1850 the religious bodies were asked to again undertake the relief of the poor.

This however, failed, and in 1853 the present system was introduced, by which the investigation and relief of the poor is committed to a body of volunteers sufficiently large to ensure that the duties can be thoroughly carried out without undue burden, and the whole administration is brought into a system by which the best results are sought for and attained.

It is said that the plan was introduced by Daniel von der Heydt after a study of Jethro's advice to Moses, and it is possible that, as on that occasion, the principal object in view was the subdivision of the work, so as to secure efficiency, but the results reached much further than this, for it was the means of bringing the poor and helpless classes into direct contact with those with larger experience and better training for the duties of life. It secured a body of intelligent, sympathetic and well-trained men, eager to give assistance to their poorer brethren struggling in poverty, and sufficiently numerous to be capable of meeting any manifestation of distress on a large scale that might arise.

Before examining the system in detail, it may be well to say that the general Poor Law, like our own, requires that all Germans in need of relief shall be granted absolute necessities in the place in which they fall into distress, the charge being ultimately borne by their place of settlement, or, if without a settlement, by the district poor union. There is, however, no central controlling body similar to our Local Government Board. It is left to each town or district to provide for its own poor under regulations decided upon by the local authority charged with that duty.

Under the law of 1870 relating to relief domicile, which enables every German to freely move about from town to town, he gains his settlement and becomes chargeable for relief after two years continuous and independent residence but he cannot claim assistance as a right.

In conformity with the general law, the municipality of Elberfeld have formulated a body of regulations for the relief of their poor, from which we abstract the following:—

ELBERFELD POOR LAW REGULATIONS.

General Regulations—Relating to Relief.

"The indigent who are unable to work may receive assistance from the municipal poor fund, provided that others are not found who are lawfully compelled and able to assist, and also that such assistance is not being received from private charity.

"The indigent but able-bodied poor person, upon proving that he has endeavoured honestly, but without success, to obtain work and wages, may be relieved temporarily until he obtains a sufficient income, provided that others are not found who are lawfully compelled and able to assist, or that private charity does not supply his need. He is compelled to execute to the best of his strength and ability any work found for him.

"Single persons and heads of families whose income is sufficient to provide the absolute necessities, are not to be treated as needy.

"The cash grant needed for providing the absolute necessities for food, clothes, rent, and house utensils, can as a rule be measured by the following (the highest scale), viz. :—

	s.	d.
	3	0 for the head of the family.
	2	6 for wife living with her husband.
	3	0 for child over fourteen years of age and upwards that works and earns.
1	2	3 for child over fourteen years of age and upwards not working.
	2	0 for child ten to fourteen years.
	1	7 for child five to ten years.
	1	5 for child one to five years.
	1	0 for child under one year.
16	9	for above-named family.
3	6	for a single person who lives alone.

"The granting of relief to the absolutely destitute poor, or those whose income is insufficient, is carried out either by outdoor relief being given to the poor in their own houses through grants in cash, soup, clothing, bedding, absolutely necessary household utensils, medical relief, medicine, and free burial, or indoor relief by removal to one of the town's poorhouses.

General Regulations—Management.

"For the management of the relief of the poor of the town of Elberfeld, a deputation, which may be designated the municipal Poor Law administration, has been created in accordance with the instructions to the towns in the Rhine province of May, 1856.

"The Poor Law administration consists, apart from the chairman, of four town councillors and four citizens who have a vote, and who are chosen by the town council for a period of three years.

"The chairman is the mayor, or, as his deputy, a councillor or a member of the Poor Law administration, appointed by the town council, with the approval of the mayor.

"One city councillor and one citizen retire annually, and in the third year, two city councillors and two citizens, first by lot, and afterwards in order of service. They are eligible for re-election.

"The Poor Law administration has the responsibility of caring for all such needy poor as have a lawful claim upon the rates of the town. These are cared for by outdoor district overseers and almoners, the number of whom can, as becomes necessary, be altered by the town council. The indoor poor are managed by the respective sub-committees. These are also appointed by the town council.

"The indoor institutions are the poorhouse, orphan house, home for deserted children, hospital and lunatic asylum, infectious hospital, and home for homeless.

"Under the law, service as an overseer or almoner is compulsory.

"The members of the Poor Law administration, the district overseers, the almoners, and the members of the sub-committees for the indoor poor, are all inducted to their offices by the chairman of the Poor Law administration, binding themselves by grasping the hand to faithfully observe their instructions.

"The district overseers are chosen for a term of three years, and the deputy district overseer, chosen from the almoners for one year, on the nomination of the Poor Law administration, which requires the confirmation of the town council. They retire by rotation, and are eligible for re-election.

"Each almoner has charge of a section consisting of a certain number of houses, and each overseer has the oversight of fourteen sections.

"The almoners of every district meet regularly, at least every fortnight, in committee, under the chairmanship of the overseer or his deputy.

"Every application for relief from the town fund must be made to the almoner of the section in which the applicant resides.

"The almoner has then at once, through careful personal examination, to obtain knowledge of the position of the applicant. Should he become convinced that the case is one of lawful claim on poor relief, and should he find further that the need is so pressing that immediate assistance cannot be deferred, he has the power to give assistance at once at his own discretion.

"Such relief, however, can be granted in exceptional cases only, and in very small allowances. In all other cases the almoner must report the case to the district committee, and make his recommendation. The same applies also to the urgent cases in which temporary relief has been given.

"The district committee decides, by vote, applications for relief as mentioned in the foregoing paragraph, and the almoners must carry out their decision. The chairman has a vote and a casting vote. He has also the power to defer the decisions of the district committees, and bring them under the judgment of the administration.

APPENDIX III (J.)—continued.Handed in by Mr. W. Grisewood, Liverpool. (Q. 37105 (26))

"The ground upon which poor relief rests, and the extent to which it may be granted, are settled in instructions drawn up by the Poor Law administration, and sanctioned by the town council.

"The Poor Law administration keep themselves informed of the work in hand from the district committee books, which are sent to them immediately after every meeting. They have power to cancel or reverse any decision if they have ascertained that the circumstances of the case are otherwise than represented, or the decision is contrary to the regulations. The whole of the district overseers are invited to the regular meetings of the Poor Law administration. At these meetings the district overseers give short reports of the condition of the poor in their respective districts. They also submit the decisions of the district committees for approval. They submit applications which have reached them, but which do not come under the district committee's prerogative.

"The cash grants required for the district committees are paid to the overseers at the fortnightly meetings of the Poor Law administration. Relief in kind, clothing, or other articles are supplied, and given out from the town poorhouse. The district overseer pays over to each almoner at the district meeting such cash and orders as have been granted for the poor of his respective section, and the almoner has to account to his overseer for the proper disposal of the money and orders entrusted to him. The overseer in turn is responsible for these to the Poor Law administration."

We have thought it well to give these instructions in detail, as being the results of half a century of practical experience. It would often save us from stumbling if we were content to accept the guidance of those who have travelled the way before us.

While the almoners perform all the ordinary relief work, there is a small official staff at the head office which undertakes the purely routine business matter.

In every case, on receiving an application, the almoner, in addition to making his own enquiries, sends the applicant to the head office, where a complete account is taken down including the names of relatives who are legally bound to support the applicant, the place of his settlement, and particulars of all his children. The result of this investigation is communicated in writing to the district overseer.

The central administrative body has, amongst other duties, the following :—To inquire into the position of the poorer classes of the population, and to ascertain the cause of their pauperism ; to take steps to avoid such pauperism by serviceable arrangements, or to bring such matters under the notice of the municipality ; to make up the annual budget for the whole of the Poor Law department, and to present it for sanction to the municipal Council ; to see that the poor relief, as per budget, is properly spent, and that any resolutions of the council are properly carried out ; to examine the annual statement of accounts, receipts, and payments, and prepare annual report at the close of each year. The meetings are held fortnightly, and my late colleague, Mr. A. F. Hanewinkel, and I had the privilege of attending one of these meetings. In addition to the administrative body, there were present thirty-two out of the thirty-seven district overseers, and of the five absentees two sent deputies. The business commenced by the president reading out the amounts given in relief in each district during the past fortnight, the vice-president adding, from the reports supplied to him beforehand, particulars of all the grants and other assistance given over and above the ordinary relief as per scale. There was, for instance, a case in which a blanket and sheet had been granted ; another in which a water bed costing 30s. was granted to a sick man, who, the overseer rose and explained, was "a brave man, who had suffered long illness." In several cases patients had been sent to the city hospitals, the eye and ear infirmary, the orphan institution, and so on.* They then passed on to consider the reports of the orphan council and the ladies' association. The latter undertakes certain duties referred to later on. This business disposed of, each of the overseers present was paid the amount estimated to be required for relief in his district for the next fortnight. The whole of this business was completed in twenty minutes. The overseers then retired.

The administrative body next went into the special cases referred for their consideration, with the help of the special reports that had been supplied to them in each case. Reports of the orphan house, the poorhouse and the number of cases sent to hospital followed. After applications for the appointment of a paid official had been discussed, they considered applications and recommendations for grants from various funds or charitable foundations under their control, but forming no part of the Poor Law funds proper. In one or two cases the payment of one-third arrears of rent was sanctioned in consideration of the landlords foregoing the other two-thirds. A grant of £3 was made to enable a man nearly blind to learn chair-seating ; 30s. was given to pay debt incurred through long sickness ; help was given to enable a man to leave Elberfeld, he having got work elsewhere—it was stated that he had never received charity before ; 20s. to 25s. was granted to pay rent in consequence of a man having been ill, and gone out of his mind ; and a grant was made to replace tools which had been sold. Considerable discussion took place over a recommendation by a district committee to supply a knitting machine at a cost of £17 10s. to a respectable, industrious woman, whose husband was an idle fellow who entirely neglected his family. It was reported that there was a machine in stock which could be put into condition for £2 10s., and it was decided to have this repaired, and to let her have it on loan.

Subsequently a district overseer was appointed from the almoners of the district, and applications were considered from three gentlemen to fill the vacancy in the staff of visitors thus caused : one, whose father had formerly served in connection with the Poor Law, being appointed. The entire meeting, from beginning to end, took one hour and five minutes.

In addition to the ordinary meetings of the administrative body, they meet fortnightly each of the district committees in turn, for the purpose of considering with them all the cases in hand in the district at that time. At this meeting there are present, in addition to the administrative body, the almoners of the district under revision, and the overseers of all the other districts. Reports of all the cases in hand are sent to the central office some days before the revision meeting is held. This periodical revision of each district serves two important purposes : (1) the central administrative body is enabled to judge of the way in which the work is being carried out ; and (2) uniformity of action is secured throughout the city.

What impressed us most, both from our own observation at the meeting we attended, and inquiries made from the various officials, was the thoroughness with which the work is done in every detail. As mentioned, each almoner is required to make full enquiry into all cases arising in his section, and embody the result in a written report ; another independent report is prepared from the applicant's statement at the central office, in which the question of settlement, relatives legally bound to contribute, and other legal points, are gone into. There is therefore every security that the full truth is elicited. The almoner, further, at least once a fortnight, in preparation for the meeting of his district committee, has to carefully revise his report, noting any change in the family's income or circumstances, and taking into consideration any grant or sick club, and invalid and old-age pension payment, and making sure that no bedding, furniture, clothing, etc., supplied by him have been parted with.

In order to enable the almoner to ascertain the earnings of a family, every recipient of relief receives a wages book, in which all employers have to enter daily the full amount of earnings, and are requested to notify in the remarks column any want of diligence or bad conduct, etc.

* It may be explained that the hospital which formerly belonged to the Poor Law authorities has been given up, and patients are now sent to the city hospitals, and paid for at the rate of 1s. 6d. per week for an adult, and 1s. 2½d. for a child. Private patients are received at the same hospitals at 3s. to 6s. per week. Every patient entering the hospitals must be paid for from some source.

APPENDIX III (J.)—continued.Handed in by Mr. W. Grisewood, Liverpool. (Q. 37105 (26).)

In cases of sickness a doctor's certificate on a prescribed form, stating whether the man's illness is likely to be temporary or prolonged, and the cause, and whether he can do any or light work, must be procured, and countersigned by the almoner.

The overseer, who, in the printed instructions is termed the "connecting link" between the administrative body and the almoners, has his duties clearly stated. In addition to presiding fortnightly at the district meeting, he is called upon to visit the applicants for assistance, alone or accompanied by the almoner, as often as it appears necessary, so as to acquaint himself personally with the cases in hand and to form an independent judgment of the circumstances.

The instructions say "the offices of overseer and almoner belong to the most important honorary positions a citizen can hold. The worthy fulfilment of the various duties demands a large measure of active neighbourly love, and an earnest sense of justice; love to listen with benevolent heart and friendliness to the requests of the poor, and earnestness to refuse improper demands, so that by careful examination the measure of necessary help may be found, and the granting of assistance may not have the effect of inducing idleness and bad habits."

It is this particular care and attention to detail, or, as we have said, the thoroughness with which the work is done, that appears to us to be the sheet anchor of the system, and makes it possible to render help in cases which otherwise would have to be passed over.

It has been mentioned that notice is taken of relatives legally bound to contribute, and application is made to them for help according to a certain scale. This obligation is enforced to such an extent that in a year where the total expenditure was £26,366, the amount received from relatives and recipients themselves was £3,354, or nearly 13 per cent. In three English towns, Bradford, Blackburn, and Nottingham, the proportion of amount recovered to total expenditure varies from 3½ to 8 per cent.

From what has been said above it will be evident that in some cases relief may be given in supplementation of wages, a practice which we deprecate in England as likely to lead to depression of the rate of wages, and also as taking away the inducement to recipients to exert themselves to obtain work. We questioned the secretary of the administrative body closely on these points, but he assured us that, in his experience of over fifty years, he had seen no cause to think that the action of the Poor Law had produced any depression of wages, and, in reference to the latter point, the almoner followed the case up closely and especially made it his business to see that recipients of relief and their families earned as much as possible towards their own support. It must, however, be borne in mind that in Elberfeld they have, as a rule, no excess of labourers over the demand such as we frequently have in Liverpool.

It appeared that at the time of our visit there were but few able-bodied people unemployed in Elberfeld, so that the question of the treatment of such was not before them. We learned, however, that in past times, when it has been necessary to deal with a number of able-bodied men, they have given relief by way of work, employing them at road-making, etc. They also make use of workshops established by a clergyman in the neighbouring town of Barmen, originally for the purpose of giving a helping hand to discharged prisoners, but at present there seems little need for making use of that agency.

Under the Prussian Penal Law, imprisonment for six weeks or upwards may be awarded to persons who receive outdoor relief and refuse to execute, to the best of their ability, any work provided for them.

The duties of an almoner are very far reaching, including not only the investigation of applications for material assistance, but extending also to the protection and proper up-bringing of children, and even to the interests of orphan children, or of those whose parents re-marry, and where there is a danger of the family suffering financially in consequence.

It might be supposed that duties so onerous would not be willingly undertaken, and indeed the office, though unpaid, can be imposed by law, each eligible citizen being obliged under penalty to accept the office for three years if nominated, but the Poor Law system of Elberfeld has attained such a position, and is so highly esteemed, not only in Germany, but in other countries, that it is deemed an honour to be connected with it, and, as we have mentioned, in the case of filling up a vacancy in one of the districts there were three candidates offering themselves for the office.

In the president's office there hangs an "honour board," on which the names of those who have served continuously for twenty-five years are recorded. These now number 120.

* * * * *

It would be difficult in a small compass to make a satisfactory comparison of the expenditure on relief in Germany and England. An exact comparison is indeed almost impossible, owing to the fact that while on the one hand the Poor Law Administration in Elberfeld is credited with interest on endowments, profits from official newspapers, and police fines, which go to reduce the poor's rate, on the other hand it bears the cost of a great deal in the way of aid to the poor which in England is borne by voluntary charity, such as the payment of rent, the purchase of tools or sewing machines, the payment of premiums for apprentices, and various preventive forms of relief, which the English Poor Law cannot touch. Keeping in view these differences, we find that in the year 1903 the poor's rate per head of the population in Elberfeld was 3s. 6d.—the average for the previous ten years being 3s. 3d. Taking three large towns in England, each over 220,000 population, we have a poor's rate of 3s. 7d. in Blackburn, 5s. in Bradford, and 6s. 6d. in Nottingham, per head of the population. Begging also is all but suppressed in Germany, while in our own country it entails a great waste of money, which appears in no audited account.

The principal gain, however, is in the better condition of the people, and the greater knowledge and control the community has of its dependent classes. Such demonstrations as those which have taken place in London and other large cities, where organised processions of the unemployed have paraded the street gathering alms, would be impossible under the German system. Those taking part would at once be referred to the Poor Law almoners, and by them would be dealt with individually, quietly, and thoroughly.

The chairman of the Altona Poor Law Administration, Herr J. D. Schutt, when asked if he thought the poor rates had been reduced through the Elberfeld system, replied as follows:—"Relief which is granted under minute consideration of the circumstances of each individual case, and in the most suitable form, must naturally always be the cheapest, and in this respect such a discriminating Poor Law system can work more than any other preventive system in the way of reducing the causes of poverty, provided that those citizens who are called upon to discharge their honourable function perform their duties loyally and conscientiously."

Although ladies have no part in the direct work of the Poor Law in Elberfeld, they perform important service in connection with that work. A ladies' association exists to enable the work of the almoners to be carried out more effectively in certain directions, each of the thirty-nine district committees having lady visitors, usually two in number, associated with it. The ladies manage nurseries for young children, prepare special food for the sick, send sick and weakly children to the country, inspect all children under four years of age who are placed out to nurse, and, what is still more striking, deal in certain cases with destitute wayfarers and tramps. The poorhouse is practically an asylum for the old and infirm, such of these, however, as are able to perform light work being expected to do so, the men being engaged in street sweeping, the women in winding yarn and other simple work.

The Elberfeld system has been introduced into other towns in Germany, with modifications suitable to local conditions and requirements. In Berlin the unpaid almoners are assisted by "town sergeants"; in Hamburg by "messengers"; in Bremen by "district superintendents," all salaried officers. This seems to indicate that in these towns at all events it was found difficult to raise the work of the unpaid almoner to the required efficiency.

APPENDIX III (J.)—continued.Handed in by Mr. W. Grisewood, Liverpool. (Q. 37105 (26).)

There are other special features of Poor Law or charitable work in different towns, of which we may mention the following:—

In Berlin, all charitable institutions are required by law to furnish any information required to the municipal authority. In this city, too, every person requiring extended relief from the poor funds is required to hand over to the authority his rights of succession to any property. Tramps are dealt with in a refuge for the homeless, and a vagrant shed. They are required to undertake to find work and home for themselves and their families within five days. If they fail in this, and cannot satisfy the authority that they have made every effort possible, they may be sent to prison or the house of correction, which is a modified prison. There is also in Berlin a large charity, the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism, with an extensive system of voluntary visitors.

Hamburg, as a rich city, is afflicted with over 400 charitable foundations, one of which has property valued at £200,000. Systematic Poor Law work has been greatly delayed there, but reform is, we understand, in progress.

Altona has the advantage, or otherwise, of a workhouse which is used as a test of destitution in the time-honoured English way.

Bremen has a workshop to enable men out of work to earn something towards their support, and to test those whose disposition to work is doubtful, and to place upon such some pressure to seek work outside.

The question is frequently asked how the drunken, idle and neglectful classes are dealt with, and on this point the late Elberfeld chairman, Mr. Ernst, may be quoted:—

“The Elberfeld Poor Law Organisation recognises two distinct classes of poor, viz.: those unable to work, and able-bodied poor; and for each class there are special regulations.

“I.—He who is from any cause unable to work receives Poor Law relief if he or someone on his behalf applies. They are those whom we have in our midst at all times, viz.: the bodily and mentally suffering, the aged, the weak, orphans, etc. They receive their alms as a sacred right.

“II.—The indigent but able-bodied poor, if he or someone on his behalf applies, may be relieved temporarily until he draws a sufficient income. He is compelled to execute any work found for him to the best of his ability. The latter class require a careful and thoughtful treatment. The granting of relief is certainly in many cases justifiable and unavoidable, but if nothing else is done it may lead the applicant to moral and social ruin. The only real, reliable, and practical relief is the provision of work, which is the old tried maxim always kept in view in the Elberfeld system. Not that we should leave the man ‘out of work’ inactive, and take upon ourselves all his troubles and the efforts needed to look up work and wages; it is only after he has clearly proved that he has himself made honestly every effort to obtain work, but without success, that the visitors step in, and then, as quickly as possible, endeavour to direct him to work. In ordinary times, when there is no scarcity of work, this object, as a rule, is soon reached. The visitor may be an employer himself, or some of his friends may be in a position to offer work. In any case the visitor must carefully watch that the applicant does not lose his anxiety to obtain work, or in other words, must not lose the impulse to improve his position by his own work.”

Answering an enquiry as to unsatisfactory able-bodied men, he said:—

“If we think that a man can find work and will not, we give him just the minimum of relief, so that he shall not starve. We trust that his wife and children will force him to look for work.”

Of course it must never be over-looked that the police assist greatly in the administration of the Poor Law in Germany. In fact, what we would call in England the most unsatisfactory characters are almost exclusively dealt with by that body.

Paragraph 361 of the Prussian Penal Law awards imprisonment of six weeks and upwards to such persons as (a) play, drink, or live in idleness, and so abandon themselves that they get into a condition to require assistance from other sources for themselves, or such as they are lawfully compelled to provide for; (b) receive outdoor relief, and refuse to execute to the best of their ability any work procured or provided for them; (c) have become houseless, and do not procure within a given time, fixed by the local police authority, another place of abode, or prove that they have done their utmost to procure same.

It is interesting to note the great care that is taken in the bringing up of children, the laws relating to neglected children being very strictly enforced. Such persons as are of bad character, and neglect to provide for their children are termed “morally dead,” and are considered unfit to have the care of their children. Such parents are sent to a house of correction, and the children, termed “deserted children,” are placed under guardians. There is a special law which provides that “Every destitute and neglected child must be under the care of the Poor Law,” this department of its work being overlooked by a body of gentlemen specially appointed, called the Orphan Council. The Poor Law administration may, when they find it necessary, apply to a court of justice, who will make an order for them to receive a child if it is shown that it stands in need of a guardian on the ground of parents’ neglect. If the court makes an order for the child to be handed to the custody of the Poor Law, the parents lose entire control. The Poor Law authority is, in such case, responsible for the education of the child, and has to look after any property that may fall to it up to the age of twenty-one years.

An account of the German relief systems would be incomplete without a reference to the relief stations, travellers’ homes and labour colonies now scattered over the country. The homes, 466 in number, with about 20,000 beds in all, are a philanthropic undertaking to secure decent lodging and fare for respectable workmen passing from place to place. Those who can pay do so, those who cannot pay perform in return a certain task of work at the relief stations. Of these stations there were 1,287, in 1896, supported by the public authorities. They enable the German workman who is travelling in search of work to obtain, in return for work, board and lodging in any town at which he may call, the authorities also giving him information of any work to be had in the neighbourhood. The labour colonies, supported partly by public funds, and partly by charitable contributions, are intended for the reception of men who have tramped about without being able to find work. They provide work principally in agriculture and allied industries. We have on two occasions visited the earliest and largest of these colonies, founded at Wilhelmsdorf in 1882, by Pastor von Bodelschwingh. There, men of various classes are received and provided with work. They include both those who have been merely unfortunate, and those who have lost work and character through intemperance and other causes, besides a considerable proportion who have been in prison for minor or serious offences. The spirit that pervades the management is an earnest desire to influence the men for good. The regime of the colony is strict, the hours of work long, but the fare is sufficient, and the colony must be a veritable harbour of refuge to most of these unfortunate men.

The system of labour registries has also developed extensively in Germany in various forms, including private registries, and those carried on by trades unions and employers, as well as various forms of public registries, latterly taking the form of municipal bureaux. In many instances, to ensure impartiality, the public registries are managed by a joint committee of employers and work-people. Arrangements are now being made to link up these registries into a national federation.

The question may now be considered in what way the Elberfeld system may be applied in this country.

It must be admitted that the conditions in Germany are favourable for attaining good results: the people are, as a whole, sober and thrifty, they readily respond to authority, and the payments under the laws relating to sick, accident, and old-age insurance greatly mitigate the suffering from these causes. At the same time human nature is much the same everywhere, and the Elberfeld administration encounters a fair amount of its peculiarities and its weaknesses in their clients, so that the problem of pauperism there is not essentially different from what it is in this country.

In the first place the system may be applied to the Poor Law. The English Poor Law has many good points, and is far from being necessarily the instrument of demoralisation it is painted. It provides that in the last resort every person in a state of destitution shall be provided with food and shelter. In this it expresses the general christian sentiment, and one would be sorry to see a departure from this. The guardians may give relief outdoor or in the house, and this provides a ready means of classification. It requires that the able-bodied male poor shall, if relieved out of the workhouse, be set to work, and gives the guardians power, if considered desirable, to take land for the purpose. It gives power to guardians to expend money for the emigration of suitable persons. These are all useful provisions, though the latter are evidently only suitable for exceptional times.

Though many of the provisions of the English Poor Law are thus admirable, it fails in its operation to produce any uplifting effect on the poor, and the cause of this appears to be that, with a limited staff of relieving officers it is impossible to keep sufficient oversight of the persons receiving relief, and to direct the help given so as to be productive of permanent good. For the same reason, that is, the inadequacy of the staff, it is impossible to give the relief privately in the homes of the poor, and, consequently, they are assembled weekly at the pay table. It is here that a system of voluntary almoners, working under the instructions of the guardians, and in co-operation with the relieving officers, would be useful. Their function would be restricted to such matters as they could properly undertake in the relief of destitution and the removal of its causes, leaving the more technical questions of settlement and the removal of the insane, for instance, to the official staff.

* * * * *

So much, then, with regard to the application of the system to the Poor Law. It may also be applied to the work of charity organisation and allied relief societies.

HISTORY OF SPECIMEN CASES DEALT WITH AT MANCHESTER AND SALFORD MISSION.

(1) MEN.

E. L. came to us in delirium tremens, and we took him in. He ceased to drink. He was a daily paper reporter, but could not get any work because his character was gone. He worked at anything he could find. Finally he obtained a situation in a Manchester paper mill, and is doing good work. Three years' record.

B. C. was a drunkard when he came to us, and had lost everything. He was the son of a schoolmaster. We obtained a situation for him at 15s. a week, and he saved out of that £7 10s. in his first year, which he deposited in the Post Office Savings Bank. When the first Christmas came he took his widowed mother, who lived at Sheffield, a £5 note for a Christmas box. He is in the same situation at a higher salary to-day. Ten years' record.

F. B. came to us in a dilapidated condition, a drunkard whom no one would employ. He reformed while with us, and we found him a position as porter in a Manchester home trade house. He is there still. Three years' record.

J. W. was a drunkard. Came to us as a casual five years ago. He pulled himself together sufficiently to obtain and keep a good situation. Five years' record.

C. H., a drunken man who had left his wife and home. Came to us often as a casual. He has become sober, and earns a living as a reporter. Five years' record.

T. C. came to us as a casual, and worked a long time with us as such. He was separated from a good wife and children by drunkenness. After a long time he improved so much that we recommended him to outside work. He has been in the same situation twelve years, has again set up a home, and his wife and daughters are living happily together with him. Fifteen years' record.

W. L., a New Zealander by birth. Came to London from Canada with a considerable sum of money which he spent in drink and fast living. When quite destitute he stayed a few nights in a Salvation Army shelter, and then walked to Manchester. He had been two days and nights without food when he came to us. He was with us for twelve months, and rose in our esteem by his exemplary conduct. At the end of that time we sent him to Canada through the kindness of several friends, and the report we get of him from a lumber camp in the Far West is most encouraging. Two and a half years' record.

G. R. was a well-educated and capable young fellow, about 24 years of age. We observed this on his first application for relief and help. He had been a child of fortune after his parents' death, and on coming of age he handled a big sum of money. He had never worked, and his money slipped away in prodigal expenditure. He came to us destitute. He began work as though he liked it, and by persistent endeavour has risen to a good position, is held in high esteem, and has a good wife and happy home. Five years' record.

L. M. was a great drunkard, very often being in delirium tremens. We were very much tried with his breakings-out, and in despair several times suspended him from residence with us. His drunkenness brought him to prison. He eventually reformed, and returned to his business life as a mining surveyor. Twelve years' record.

P. F. was one of a family of four children whom we took away from a drunken and dissolute mother. They have grown up, and gone out into life as useful young people. This youth also turned out well, is now married, and a useful workman in a furniture repository. Fifteen years' record.

J. T. came to us as a casual, and worked at our labour bureau for a while. He was a drinker, but became sober, married, and began a business on his own account. Five years' record.

J. W. (second) came from Whitehaven. Unfortunate domestic life. After a long time he found work. Seeking reconciliation with his wife and children, they came to him here. The wife died. He married again, and has become a happy man, useful in the Church, a good citizen and workman. Eighteen years' record.

R. L. was a confirmed tramp, and given to much drink. He came to us at intervals for a number of years, and had tried almost every tramp ward in the country. He was a most capable man. He gave up the drink, and settled down to the little he could get in the way of work. Seven years' record.

W. J. was a drunkard when he came to us more than two years ago. He gave up the drink, we recommended him to a hospital as nightman, and he is still holding that situation. Two years' record.

F. V. came to us as a casual. Showed himself smart and industrious at our lowest kind of work, and developed into a capable and reliable man. He married, and is in a comfortable position as engineer. Three years' record.

R. H. was in a low condition when he came to us—not a drunkard, but a gambler. It was a long time before we could appear to benefit him. After about four years he procured a situation in a solicitor's office, and is still there. Ten years' record.

F. S. had been an officer's orderly, and had served five years in Parkhurst Prison for misdemeanour. When he came out he turned towards Manchester, and in destitution came to us. We found him temporary work at which he did well. After a time we used our influence to send him to Canada, where he is doing well. Two years' record.

T. C., a chemist with diplomas. Unfortunately he took to drink. His first start with us was in the chip yard. After that a travelling berth with a small salary and commission was found for him. He plodded on for some time, and became a thoroughly reformed man. Owing to his former life consumption has set in and his health is completely broken. Five years' record.

W. D., a south country man. Owing to bad habits left his wife and home in disgrace. He began with us at the lowest grade; to-day he is an industrious, sober man. Fourteen months' record.

F. C., an electrician. Came over from the States, but played the fool. Had spent all his savings, and was fast becoming a wreck when he got into our hands. After a period, during which time he did all sorts of jobs, he obtained a position in a firm of electricians which he has retained. Three years' record.

E. E. made application one morning to be allowed to come in and chop wood. His life had not been a model life by any means. There was sad need of reformation. He signed the pledge, became quite a reformed character, and got a situation as traveller, which he has since kept. Four years' record.

F. H. came to us from prison. Had been an hotel clerk, but through drinking habits he had got wrong. He made a great effort to reform, and at last a situation was found for him in his own particular line, which he has retained. Three years' record.

R. D. came to us a young fellow addicted to drink and out of work. We stood by him and found him a little casual work. He proved himself worthy of help, and has been in his present situation eighteen months. Eighteen months' record.

W. P., a grocer's assistant. Came to us three and a half years ago. He was penniless, and without a friend in the city. Drink and boon companions had been his downfall. He chopped chips in the chip yard for a time, and we got him a little work on one of the railways. Since then we have obtained him a permanent position in the kitchen of a city restaurant. Three years' record.

Handed in by the Rev. S. F. Collier, Manchester. (Q. 37540.)

G. B., a man of loose habits. Seemed at first to have very little desire to reform, but under our Home influence he came to a better state. We obtained a position for him in a city club. Six years' record.

S. B. came to us after two nights on the streets of Manchester. An unmarried man, he lived at home with brothers and sisters, but through dissolute habits came away from home. He is to-day a reformed character, and acts in the capacity of agent in advance. Four years' record.

W. B. first made our Home his place of lodgment for one night, and then applied to be taken in hand as a casual. He came from a good home, but looked a most disreputable, forlorn man. Drink and gambling had played havoc with his life. After some months we obtained him a situation which he has since held. Five years' record.

A. H., a grocer. Had been in business for himself, and had owned five shops. Owing to drink and neglecting his customers he lost all, and came to us in dire need. We gave him a helping hand, and he gave up the drink. A situation was found for him, and he has since proved himself a credit to his employers. Two years' record.

W. H. came to us with a bad character from Warwick Gaol. He had suffered twelve terms of imprisonment. He has proved worthy of help, and has worked nobly and well for four years. Four years' record.

A. I. was the scapegrace of the family, and was in a deplorable condition when he came and asked for our help. For a long time we gave him casual work, but at one of our meetings he made resolves to reform, which he carried out. A situation was found for him as inspector to a firm of advertisers. He has done justice to his position. Three years' record.

E. B., the son of a Birkenhead man. Left home entirely on account of his habit of drinking. He came to us on and off for about two years, looking, if possible, more abject each time. At last a desire for reform took hold of him. We helped him. A situation was found for him, and for twelve months he has proved worthy of our confidence. Twelve months' record.

H. S. was a drunkard and gambler of the worst type. He signed the pledge against both drink and gambling, and at last we were able to recommend him to a situation. For thirteen months he has done well.

D. M. came to us three years ago. Was a very discouraging case to deal with. Drink seemed to have such a fascination for him, but after a time the power of the habit was broken, and now for two years he has held a situation and kept his pledge. Two years' record.

H. M. came to us four and a half years ago as a casual. He faced the work given him to do. His wife had gone to an early grave, largely through his neglect of her. He was an inveterate gambler, and almost as often drunk as sober. It was hard at first to do anything with him, but he gradually softened towards us, and after many a struggle he overcame the craving for drink and lost the desire to gamble. He has been filling a situation in a solicitor's office as clerk with every satisfaction to his employers for the last two years. Two years' record.

E. W., a fitter by trade. Came to us four years ago. He had lost his position through drink, and had to commence at the bottom. He soon pulled himself round, and to-day he fills the same situation he formerly lost through drink. Three and a half years' record.

W. N., a clerk. Got dismissed from his situation for inattention to his work as the result of drinking. After a course of discipline a place of work was found for him. He is now doing well. Twelve months' record.

J. O. came to seek the shelter of our Home. He had been several nights without a bed. We took him, and then found drink had cursed his life. He did willingly any work we gave him, and there seemed an ardent desire to do better. We helped him, and got him a situation in a restaurant as kitchen porter. This he has filled for twelve months.

H. S., a young fellow who had been chef on one of the Atlantic liners. He had missed his ship, was completely stranded, and then had got into bad company and formed loose habits. We helped him to regain his self-respect and self-control. After a period of nine months a situation was offered him in Montreal, which he has been filling now for twelve months. Twelve months' record.

J. S., sold up his home again and again. Disgraced his children after his wife's death, and finally forsook them. He was hiding in Manchester. An anonymous letter came to us and we found him. From the time of his entrance into our Home he gave up the drink, and became a thoughtful, God-fearing man. He now keeps in touch with his children, and in every way lives a consistent life. Four years' record.

W. B., abandoned his home, his wife and children, but for what cause we did not learn. He was reticent about his past career, and was content to do the most menial service. Almost without hope he laboured to improve himself in respectability and in character. We recommended him to a furniture merchant, and he stayed long enough to establish his character, to regain the confidence of his wife and children, and to rebuild his home. He afterwards left to start in business for himself, in which he is succeeding well. Nine years' record.

E. W. came to the Home from prison. He had fallen from a high position through fraudulency. He was friendless, but not hopeless, for he had made up his mind to regain his character, beginning with the most menial service. We recommended him to an employer, who year by year made his position financially better. In three years, by dint of industry in study in leisure hours, he passed exams. in languages and theory of music, and left us to become a language correspondent. Four years' record.

W. H. came to us six years ago. He was then only in his teens, and had given way to drink. He signed the pledge and pulled himself together. He secured a situation as waggon examiner on the Great Central line, and remains a trusted servant. Six years' record.

C. R. was out of work, destitute and friendless. After months of waiting and working as a casual we recommended him as storekeeper. He secured the situation, and by industry gained the good opinion of all. He married, and is now a good citizen. Fifteen years' record.

J. C. came to us from the lowest depths of need, and soon showed a disposition to rise. We helped him into casual work in our Home, and through industry and honesty he became a foreman among our men. He married, settled down, and has a very good position under his firm. Sixteen years' record.

C. S. gave way to drink, and had lost by intemperance and inattention two hotels of which he was owner. For a long time after he came to us he was not quite steady, but he is now a total abstainer and a true Christian. Five years' record.

W. H. N. came under our care at the request of his brother-in-law, a minister. He was separated from his wife through abandoned drunkenness. He has been steady for four years, and is reconciled to his wife and children, to whom he writes and regularly sends half his wages. Four years' record.

C. S. was a careless, reckless, helpless young fellow when he came in at our "Open Door." He had come from the States in a cattle boat, and his story of flight from his grandfather because he wanted him to be a Christian was very interesting. We got him kitchen work in a club. He became a Christian, and after nearly three years returned to his grandfather in the States.

From there he writes us occasionally letters of gratitude and thanks for our help and training. Four years' record.

A. T. was quite destitute when he came to us. He had left the Army at the time of the Mutiny of the Guards, had spent his bounty money in search for work, and last of all tried Manchester. He began to work in our labour department, and we recommended him to other employment. He married and settled down to active business life, and is now a useful citizen and member of the Presbyterian Church. Fifteen years' record.

J. W., a Stock Exchange assistant. He had given way to drink. His home was broken up, and his wife and daughter in apartments in Liverpool. He drifted to Manchester and entered our Refuge. After two years of rising and falling he became a sober, godly man and procured a permanent situation in another town. His wife joined him there. Fifteen years' record.

T. D. came to us friendless and hopeless, loose in morals and careless of life and character. He became sober, industrious and honest, and is a trusted officer in a Manchester workhouse. Ten years' record.

G. F. had not a friend in the world when he came to our Shelter. He was a man of fine build, and not vicious; hopeless about himself. After a prolonged stay with us his hope revived, he became a trusted officer in the workhouse, and ultimately married a nurse. They hold the positions of porter and porters. Ten years' record.

G. B. was fond of drink, and loose in his habits when he came to us. He was in and out in a casual way for two years, and then he gave up the drink and we found him a situation which he still holds. Twelve years' record.

T. S. came to us from the lowest depths as a very heavy drinker, and under our care became sober. We found him work, and he still remains in the same situation. Twelve years' record.

H. L., a confirmed drunkard. A schoolmaster by profession, he worked in our labour home for a while and became a sober man. He was sent to work at a Manchester club, and still remains there. Two years' record.

(2) WOMEN.

S. T. entered the Refuge over twelve months ago; a married woman; husband a drunkard; left her four years after they were married. Has two sons aged 17 and 15. They live with their uncle near Carlisle. S. had been a great drunkard for over fifteen years. Being a clever cook has had good situations, but could not keep them through drink. When she came to us was a most dejected-looking woman. After being in the Home some time (having given herself to God) she went back to a former mistress, and begged her to give her another trial. She has not touched drink for nearly twelve months. Has joined the Church, and is in every way proving herself a good Christian. Her mistress, an Anglican, says in future she will be greatly in sympathy with our work.

K. Q. was sent to us from Rotherham by a police court missionary. Had been drinking for some time and also on the streets. Got into the hands of the police. Was a low woman. Stayed in the Home for several months. We got her a situation, and she has been there over two years. Her mistress says she is one of the best servants she has ever had.

L. S. came to us four years ago. Was brought up in a very respectable home in Staffordshire. Got a situation in Manchester. A few months after some gay girls got hold of her; went from bad to worse. A lady interested in her induced her to come to us. When she left us we got her a situation and she kept it two and a half years and then left to be married.

L. C. came to us nearly five years ago. She was a staunch Catholic. Her mother died when she was quite a child. Her father put her and her sister into a convent school. When she was 1½ she left, got work in a warehouse and worked there some few years. Was mixed up with a young man who got her into trouble. Her relatives cast her off altogether, and would do nothing for her. Her landlady sent her to us and begged us to help her. She has only had three situations since she left us. Each mistress has given her a splendid character. She is connected with the Church and is a good Christian girl.

G. F. came to us five years ago—then a girl of 15. Sent from a night shelter in Liverpool. Her mother died in New York. There was only her stepfather left. He came to England with her. Evidently wanted to get rid of her; put her in the waiting-room at Lime Street and never returned. The police took her to the shelter, and a few days after she was passed on to us. Nothing has been heard of the stepfather. She has done splendidly in her situations, and is working well in the mission.

J. L., aged 18. Was sent to us by the police court missionary from Huddersfield. Was a mill girl and had got mixed up with a bad set of people. With others got into the hands of the police. She came to us in shawl and clogs. Is now a servant, and has done well for over three years.

A. T., a girl of 20, came to us one Sunday morning five years ago. Had been living a loose life for nearly three years. Had been out all night. The snow lay very thick. She knelt in the snow and asked God to direct her to some place where she could go for help, and have the chance of starting life afresh. Soon after she met a policeman, and he brought her to us. When she was fit for it we got her a situation. In time she wrote to an uncle in Canada and told him she was a different girl. He sent her fare and she went out to him. Her record is still good.

L. A. came to the Home four years ago. She had left friends in Liverpool and got into bad company. Was in the Home nine months and did well. Went out to a situation. After remaining eighteen months she went out to Canada and is now happily married. Before leaving England was reconciled to her people.

M. B. came to us from the prison gate. Had served fourteen days for hawking without a licence. Had been living with a man for eight years though she was not married to him. Their lives cursed by drink. Got a few things and started hawking. A policeman brought her to us. She stayed in the shelter four months, then some friends in a distant town got her a situation. Record good.

S. T. came to us from the workhouse. She had given birth to a child, but it died before she left. Had neither friends nor clothing with which to go to a situation. She stayed in the Home for a time; a situation was found and she has been there over two years.

M. S. was sent to us by a police court missionary from Wakefield. Had been pilfering. Her mother asked the magistrates to have her sent away to a home for a time. Was with us twelve months, and then returned home. Has done well for twelve months.

F. M., aged 18, came to us two and a half years ago. Had been doing day work for some time. Could not earn sufficient to pay lodgings, and without friends to help. She stayed with us a few months, and is now in a situation we secured for her. Good record.

M. J. was in the refuge over four years ago. Had been drinking for many years, and could not keep a situation. After being with us for a time we found her a situation. She has kept it for three years.

G. P. came to us three and a half years ago from Withington Union Hospital. She had run away from her home in Stoke-on-Trent six years before, and had never let them know where she was. When she had been with us a few months we persuaded her to write home. The mother came to Manchester to see her the day she received the letter. She was in a situation after leaving us, and was married a short time ago. Good record.

S. B. came to the Home nearly four years ago. Had been drinking and living a strange life for several years. Came to us of her own accord. Walked 6 miles to get here, and asked us to keep her for twelve months or more as she wished to be a different woman. Had worked in a mill nearly all her life, but desired to go into service when fit. Has done splendidly since she left the Home nearly two and a half years ago.

L. W. was sent to us by the police court missionary from Huddersfield; a young married woman of quite a notorious character. Was before the magistrates for being drunk and disorderly. Stayed in the Home a few months and then returned to her husband. The missionary said eight months after she was doing well, and had quite a comfortable home.

F. T. came from Bolton; had worked in a mill for several years. Her parents were dead; she and her sister were brought up by a grandmother. Kept straight until nineteen years of age. Ruined by the dancing saloon; caused her friends a great deal of trouble. Was persuaded to come to us and get right away from her associates. We had her in the Home some time, and she has since been in situations. Was at one place two years, and has done well.

B. P. came to Manchester from Bradford to seek work and get away from her husband. Both of them had been drinking heavily and lived a miserable life. Her husband went off with another woman. She stayed in the Home six months. Has been out in service eight months and has not touched the drink.

B. R. came to Manchester to a registry office. They got her a situation at a very low public house. She ran away late one night. A policeman sent her to us. She was without money and had no friends nearer than Wolverhampton. Was in two situations after she left us, and then went back home. We have had most encouraging letters from her.

M. J. came to us from Salford Union. Had given birth to a child, but it had died. Was utterly destitute—felt she had lost her character—dared not write to her only friend, an aunt, who had looked after her for many years. Her parents died when she was a girl. Someone directed her to us. She stayed in the Home for a time, and then we found her a situation. Finally her aunt sent for her to go to Carlisle to a situation near her. Good record.

L. P., aged 16. Was sent to us by a minister. Was constantly running away from home and staying out at night; considered unmanageable. After being with us for a time she took a situation and kept it for two and a half years. Left to be married.

M. K., an orphan. Has two sisters, but they would do nothing for her. When nineteen gave birth to a child in the workhouse. It died while she was there. Came to us quite destitute. We kept her for a time, and then found her a situation which she retained for three years. She is now an assistant in a coffee tavern. Good record.

M. S. was a great drunkard. Had situations in very good families, but lost them through drink. Had been in a home before, but would not stop. Came to us nearly two years ago. Has been in her situation eight months. Is keeping steady, and doing well.

E. H. came to us five years ago. Was nineteen years of age. She was the daughter of a farmer on the outskirts of Leicester. They were in a good position. She ran away from home three times and each time was found in an immoral house. Was despised by all her people. She was sent to us, and for some time was almost unmanageable. We kept her for twelve months and then got her a situation. Three years after she married. Calls to see us whenever she is in Manchester. Good record.

M. H. was brought to us by a policeman five years ago off the street. Her stepmother and father were very cruel to her. She worked in a café kitchen when she was fifteen years old, then had to go home and do the work. Often up to midnight. Her mother was kicking her when the policeman saw her. Is now in a situation and doing well.

L. O., 29 years of age. Admitted into our Refuge in April, 1897. Had been a constant source of trouble to her widowed mother. Had given birth to two illegitimate children, both of whom died. Was continually giving way to fits of hysteria. The mother in despair sought our help. L. was taken into the Refuge for a few months. Has been in three situations, for nine months, four years, and four years respectively, and is still in the last named. She has never given any further trouble. Nine years' record.

M. H., 24 years of age. Was sent by some friends from Oldham, and taken into our Maternity Home, where she stayed three months, and then returned to her former situation. Entered April, 1905, and left in July, 1905. We hear regularly good accounts of her. Two years' record.

R. E., 35 years of age. Came to us from a low lodging-house in Angel Meadow, April, 1899. Stayed in the Refuge some time. Was then sent to a situation. Has remained in the same place, and comes to see us from time to time. Seven years' record.

M. F., aged 21. Sent by a lady from Yorkshire. Entered our Maternity Hospital April, 1905. Stayed for three months, and was sent back to her old situation. Is doing well, and writes to us regularly. Two years' record.

A. J., aged 49. Came from one of the unions in North Wales. Entered the Refuge July, 1897. Remained with us a few months; was sent to a situation as children's nurse, and is still in the same family doing well. She had been in the habit of giving way to drink, but has not touched it for the last nine years. Nine years' record.

J. D., aged 15. Entered the Training Home, February 3rd, 1895. Remained with us for four years, and was then sent to a situation which she has kept ever since, and is doing well. J. was wilful, disobedient, and unruly when she came to the Home, but is now a good Christian woman. Eight years' record.

H. H., aged 17. Came to us from relations in Manchester. Her mother had recently died, and her father was in the workhouse hospital incurable. She had been working in a mill, but was both lazy, dirty, and slightly dishonest. She entered our Training Home in October, 1900; remained with us nearly four years, and was sent to a situation in which she is doing well. Three years' record.

B. C., aged 25. Came to Manchester from Dewsbury August, 1904, in trouble. Was directed to the hall, taken into the Refuge, and passed on to the Maternity Hospital. She afterwards returned to her former situation, where she had been for nearly five years. The child was adopted by friends. Two and a half years' record.

M. D., aged 18. Came from a situation near Manchester in May, 1904. Was taken into the Refuge and passed on to the Maternity Hospital, where she stayed nearly three months. A home was found for her child, and M. went back to her former mistress. She is still with her, and comes in from time to time. Two and a half years' record.

M. B., aged 32. Came to the Refuge in January, 1896. Parted from her husband through drink. After she had been in the Home a short time she was arrested for theft and sentenced to prison for six weeks. After her release she returned to the Refuge. Was under our care over twelve months. She then took a situation for a few months. During this time we found her husband. At first he was very hard and refused to have anything to do with his wife, but finally he relented and took her back again. They have lived happily together for the past nine years, and M. is now a sober, respectable woman. Nine years' record.

J. J., aged 29. Deserted by her husband in London. She came to Manchester to seek for one of her sisters, and found her too poor to give the help she needed. We took her into our Maternity Hospital in September, 1904. She stayed five weeks, and we afterwards found her a situation, the child being put out to nurse. She has supported herself and child entirely out of her earnings, and is to-day doing well. Two and a half years' record.

R. S., received into the Training Home at the age of 14. No parents or relations living. Was lazy, disobedient, and untruthful, and for a long time showed no signs of improvement. She was very slow to learn, and we were not able to send her to a situation until she was 18. Has been in service for nearly four years, and is doing nicely. Four years' record.

B. K., aged 18. Came to Manchester from Belfast in March, 1899, quite destitute. We received her into our Refuge, and after a short time sent her to a situation. She remained there twelve months, and has kept steady and respectable. Seven years' record.

A. S., aged 15. Orphan. Had lived with a married brother previous to entering our Training Home. Being quite unmanageable at home her brother brought her to us in July, 1900. We kept her for two years, and since leaving us she has been in service. She had a hard struggle, but is now doing well. Five years' record.

C. H., 24 years of age. Slept in the casual ward the night before she came to our Refuge, October, 1897. She was an orphan and quite destitute. We kept her for five months, and then found her a situation a few miles out of Manchester. She remained in the same family for a number of years, and the last time she called told us of her approaching marriage. Her mistress gave her an excellent character. Nine years' record.

N. R., aged 18. An orphan. Brought to our Training Home by her grandfather in February, 1899. She had been untruthful and dishonest. We kept her for two and a half years, and she then returned to her friends. She has not given any further trouble, and is at present doing well. Six years' record.

L. N., aged 19. An orphan. Had been working in the mills. Entered our Maternity Hospital November, 1904. She afterwards returned to the mill and has led a steady, respectable life up to the present. Two and a half years' record.

F. R., 18 years of age. Was brought to the Refuge from Blackburn in December, 1904. She had been living in Scotland for a year, where she got into trouble through a young man to whom she was engaged to be married. She was passed on to our Maternity Hospital, and afterwards placed in a situation. She remained for a few months and then returned to Scotland. Now married to her child's father. Three years' record.

E. D., aged 19. Came to the Refuge in 1901 from her parents in Shropshire. She had been unable to keep a situation owing to untruthfulness, and was subject to fits of hysteria. Our matron had considerable difficulty in managing her, but after a few months she was sent to a situation, and through keeping in constant touch with her she has become a steady, reliable young woman. Five years' record.

B. L., aged 20. No parents. Was sent by relatives to our Maternity Hospital, April, 1904, and was afterwards received into our Refuge for a few months. She was very slow and dull, but after six months' training she improved, and we found her a situation with a mistress who took an interest in her. She remained for nearly two years and then left to take a place where she could obtain better wages. She is still doing well. Two and a half years' record.

F. P., aged 14. An orphan. Entered our Training Home in 1899 with a character for untruthfulness and indolence. We kept her for two years, and then found her a situation. She has been in three different situations, and has done well. Six years' record.

M. B., aged 19. Was sent from Bristol. Had got into bad company, and was obliged to leave her employment. Was very deceitful. She entered our Refuge in July, 1900; stayed a few months, and then took a situation in a restaurant. She stayed nearly two years, and then joined a respectable young woman in a small house. Together they went to office cleaning. Has kept steady for over six years. Six years' record.

E. R., aged 32. Separated from her husband through no fault of her own. She went back to service, and for five years had led a respectable life, but became acquainted with a man who led her astray. She entered our Maternity Hospital in December, 1904, and afterwards returned to the situation where she had lived for two years. She is still in the same house, and is trying to live a respectable life. Two years' record.

L. T., aged 15. Her mother had been in the Refuge in 1900. Drink had made the mother a complete wreck and she begged that we would save her daughter from the same fate. L. was one of five illegitimate children, and had never known what it was to have proper food or a decent home. We cared for her, and then sent her to a friend of the Mission to be trained in household duties. She remained for nearly four years, and then left to take a better situation. She is now happily married to a steady young man. Seven years' record.

G. S., young woman sent from Stockton-on-Tees. Dissolute. Fallen. Received into the women's Refuge. Remained in the Home afterwards for some months. Reformed. Married. Has a good home. Five years' good record.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MANCHESTER.

I.

Public Health Office,
Town Hall, Manchester,
May, 1906.

Midwives Act, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR,—I am instructed by the Midwives Supervising Committee of Manchester to send you a supply of forms to be filled up and forwarded to me in cases where you are called in at the instance of a midwife to attend a case of emergency under Rule E., 17 B. and C.1 (Sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5), of the Central Midwives Board, and where you are unable to obtain payment from the patient for such attendance.

Temporary arrangements have been made by the corporation of Manchester for the payment of medical fees under the following terms and conditions :—A fee of £1 ls. to be paid for all contingencies provided for in Section 17 B. of Rule E.; for cases of puerperal fever, and for cases of secondary post-partum hemorrhage, Section 17 C.1 (3). Under Section 17 C.1 or Rule E. a fee of 5s. to be paid for attendance on the advice of a midwife in consequence of each or all of the occurrences 1, 2, 4, and 5, unless the case should be diagnosed as puerperal fever, when a total fee of £1 ls. will be paid.

These payments will be made contingent on a report being furnished by the medical attendant to the Midwives Supervising Committee of facts within the knowledge of the medical practitioner which may appear to the authority necessary to the elucidation of the case. They will also be contingent on the carrying out by the medical practitioner at the earliest possible moment, of any procedures arising out of the visit, for which the sum of £1 ls. will be considered an inclusive charge. All cases, in fact, to be treated as cases of emergency by the medical practitioner called in.

Also, these payments will only be made in all the foregoing circumstances where the income of the family does not exceed the following rate :— per week.

Parent or parents and 1 child	- - - - -	- 1 3 0

The following definition of puerperal fever has been suggested with a view to the inclusion of the slighter forms of sepsis, which are liable to be regarded with less apprehension than the more severe forms, and so lead to extension of the disease :—“For the purpose of the Notification Acts, 1889 and 1899, the term ‘puerperal fever’ shall include all cases in which within seven days after the birth of a child, alive or still-born, the mother shall have a rise of temperature exceeding 100·4°F. with quick pulse, maintained for a period exceeding twenty-four hours, without any ascertainable cause other than the puerperal state. It shall also include all cases in which, within seven days after the birth of a child, there has been the occurrence of rigor (with attendant illness) without any ascertainable cause other than the puerperal state.”

The sanitary authority requests medical practitioners to notify all cases coming within the above definition.

I am, my dear Sir,

Yours very faithfully,

JAMES NIVEN,
Medical Officer of Health.

Public Health Office,
Town Hall, Manchester,
August 9th, 1906.

Midwives Act, 1902.

DEAR SIR,—You will, no doubt, have received from this office a book of application forms for fee for attendance on a patient declaring herself unable to pay. You will see from the letter printed on the front page of the book that payment will be made for those cases of emergency mentioned in Rule E. 17 B. and C. 1 (Sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5) which are as follows :—

RULE E. 17 (B).—In the case of a woman in labour :—

(1) In all presentations other than the uncomplicated vertex or breech; in all cases of breech presentation in primiparæ; in all cases of flooding and convulsions; and also whenever there appears to be insufficient room for the child to pass, or when a tumour is felt in any part of the mother's passages.

(2) If the midwife, when the cervix has become dilated, is unable to make out the presentation.

(3) If there is loss of blood in excess of what is natural, at whatever time of the labour it may occur.

(4) If an hour after the birth of the child the placenta has not been expelled, and cannot be expressed (i.e., pressed out) even if no bleeding has occurred.

(5) In cases of rupture of the perinæum, or other serious injury of the soft parts.

RULE E. 17 (C). 1.—The mother :—

(1) Abdominal swelling, and signs of insufficient contraction of the uterus.

(2) Foul-smelling discharges.

(3) Secondary post-partum hemorrhage.

(4) Rigor.

(5) Rise of temperature above 100·4° F., with quickening of the pulse for more than twenty-four hours.

A fee of £1 ls. will be paid for each of the contingencies provided for in Rule E. 17 (B.), and also for secondary post-partum hemorrhage (Rule E. 17 (C). 1 (3)), whilst for the contingencies mentioned in Rule E. 17 (C). 1 (1, 2, 4, 5), a fee of 5s. will be paid, unless the case should be diagnosed puerperal fever, when a total fee of £1 ls. will be paid. (For conditions of payment, see paragraphs 3 and 4 of letter.)

I beg to send you the above extract in the event of your not being in possession of the rules.

The Midwives Supervising Committee will be grateful to medical practitioners for any information they can give with regard to the case to which they are called by a midwife, such information to be put on the application form.

If you have no use for the forms, I shall be much obliged if you will return them.

Yours faithfully,

JAMES NIVEN,
Medical Officer of Health.

APPENDIX No. VI. (G).

Handed in by Dr. Niven, Medical Officer of Health, Manchester. (Q. 38455.)

In the lecture alluded to the results indicated may be stated thus. Taking the Atwater dietary and the current prices at which poor persons can purchase articles of food in Manchester, a good and varied dietary may be obtained at the rate of 8d. a day for a man. At 6d. the choice of foods is restricted. It is possible to furnish a sufficiency of food for 3½d., but there is then no variation of the diet. Much might be effected in lowering the price of food by the teaching of cookery in schools directed especially to varying and rendering palatable common articles of diet.

In the following table, relating to sixty-two families (in which there is a consumptive person) selected as being likely from the known facts to be short of means, is shown what would be necessary to maintain nutrition on the Atwater scale of diet, and assuming the applicability of Mr. Rowntree's scale of household sundries. The diet of a man is taken as costing 6d. per day. These sixty-two cases are representative of 180 out of 1,400 notified in one year, these 180 being taken as probably very poor.

Average, 62 families : 6s. 10d.

The total number of consumptive cases may be estimated at 3,000.

The results of the table may be thus stated. If these sixty-two families were getting no aid to their incomes, but were expending the calculated amounts on food and sundries, they would require an additional sum of 6s. 10d. on the average. If, however, the aid which is being received were included in their incomes, each would require on the average 5s. 10d. and 3d. additional.

There are, however, only forty-five families actually in need of assistance, out of the sixty-two. If the average is calculated on these, including household sundries in the needs, but also including aid received in the income the average shortage of family income, where there is actual need of assistance, is about 8s. per week per family.

If we exclude sundries, and consider only what is needed for nutrition, there are thirty-two families which are short, taking into account the aid which they are at present receiving. The average shortage in food alone for these thirty-two amounts to 5s. 2·25d. a week.

The actual number of families in need of assistance would, on the above basis, be somewhere about 300 out of a total supposed number of cases of phthisis of 3,000, and the additional yearly sum required would be $8s. \times 300 \times 52 = £6,240$.

LEEDS NON-POLITICAL WOMEN GUARDIANS' ASSOCIATION.

[Reprinted from The Yorkshire Post, December 15th, 1906.]

To the Editor of The Yorkshire Post :—

SIR,—The approaching triennial election of guardians of the Leeds Union renders it necessary that we should appeal for support in our effort to secure the election as guardians of some suitable women, who are free from party restrictions.

When it is remembered that amongst their other duties the guardians of Leeds have to take the charge, often from babyhood, of about 400 children, and to see that these are properly fed, clothed, and educated, and when old enough placed out in suitable situations, and thereafter given such assistance as a public authority can supply, it seems unnecessary to seek for further reasons for the election of a strong leaven of women on the board. We need do no more than note in passing that the same board has about 500 women of various ages under its care, and has moreover to act as dispenser of the first necessities of life to all families in the city who are reduced to poverty and distress by sickness, error, or misfortune. This is emphatically women's work, and non-political work, and it would not be amiss if a large section of the guardians were specially elected with a view to fulfilling these duties.

Without, however, pleading for this, we think we are justified in urging that a small number should be so elected, and in pointing out that even a small number may be of inestimable value in directing the policy of the board. It is often stated that when once elected, though elected by a particular party, a guardian is left free to act according to his individual judgment, and that when the door of the board-room closes behind him, it cuts him off from political considerations. But surely this statement carries its own denial, for why should a political party put its whole machinery in motion, and run to considerable expense to ensure the election of a candidate whose political opinion is of no importance when once he is on the board? In nine cases out of ten, happily, the guardians are left to themselves. In the dull routine work, the supervision of officials, housekeeping, sanitation, the up-bringing of children, the political parties are not interested, but in the choosing of a chairman, the co-option of a member, the appointment of an official, the expenditure of any large sum of money, the party whip goes round.

We do not allege that the money is necessarily spent badly, or that the choice is always wrong; but we do allege that guardians, whose lives are spent on the work, who know, as even an unbiassed outsider cannot know, the exact qualifications required in the officer, the essential characteristics needed in the building, have also to consider the effect which their votes on these questions may have on the destinies of the parties to which they happen to belong. If anything can safeguard us against the evils of this system it is the presence of a minority of representatives who are untrammelled by political pledges, and who are free to vote on every subject on their view of the merits alone. In mentioning the two candidates for whom our association is seeking support, we feel sure that the Leeds public will recognise their eminent suitability.

Miss Margaret Baines needs no introduction; she has worked for twelve years on the board, and her fellow guardians can testify to her industry, fairness, and devotion.

Miss Beatrice Kitson is a new candidate, but we confidently believe that she is eminently fitted for such a post. She has worked for the workhouse inmates through the Brabazon Society for eleven years, so she would not come ignorant to her task.

Miss Margaret Baines will stand for Headingley. Miss Beatrice Kitson for Chapeltown.

If among your readers there are any who are willing to join our association, we hope they will send their names to the hon. secretary. We have no form of election; any one who shares our aim is welcome to become a member. If any do not care to be formally enrolled as members and yet would help the election of either of our candidates, we hope they will let the secretary know whether they will canvass in Headingley (including Burley and Kirkstall) or Chapeltown, or will help with our secretarial work, which is all voluntary.—Yours, &c.,

Cottage Homes,
Northfield, near Birmingham.

March 22nd, 1907.

REVEREND AND DEAR SIR,—I should have communicated with you earlier, but I have waited for an answer to a letter I have written to Grimsby, which I am sorry to say has not yet arrived.

Fishing Service.

We have sent ten boys to the Grimsby fishing service, and of those, as far as I know at present, one is a skipper, two are third hands and five are still apprentices. The other two left the Homes in 1894 and I have not heard from them for some time. When last heard of they were going on all right. I understand a good skipper can make as much as £1 a day when at sea. One of the boys soon after he had completed his apprenticeship stated in a letter : “ My weekly wage is 30s. besides my share of the liver money, and I do not think that is bad for a start. I have comfortable lodgings and am getting on beautifully.” Another who has not yet completed his first year's apprenticeship informs me that, in addition to everything being found on land as well as at sea, he is already making an average of 8s. per week.

Only one boy has been reported to us for giving trouble, and the last time I was in Grimsby I was told he had settled down and was going on nicely.

Although a rough life the boys seem to like it when once they have got used to it.

Royal Navy.

Our boys are not sent to training ships preparatory to entering the Royal Navy, but are entered direct through the local recruiting office. Up to the present seventeen have entered. I am unable to give an account of advancements to the different ratings, but judging from conversations I have had with the boys when they have visited the Homes, and their general conduct, I should say the majority have done well and have been a credit to themselves and the Homes.

As I have often said, it seems a great pity that good intelligent boys, physically fit, should be rejected because they fall a little short of the standard in height, and boys intellectually inferior accepted because they happen to come up to the standard. In short, height is considered of more importance than brains.

Trusting the information I have given will meet your requirements,—I remain,

Yours respectfully,

CHAS. T. DAVIS.

Superintendent of the Homes.

PARISH OF BIRMINGHAM.

STATISTICS AS TO NUMBER OF INDOOR AND OUTDOOR POOR, AND COST OF RELIEF AT VARIOUS PERIODS FROM 1883 TO 1906.

The following Return has been prepared by the superintendent of out-relief. It was submitted by him to the various relief committees, and they were agreed in advising that it should be printed and circulated amongst the members of the Board. This met with the approval of the Central Outdoor Relief Committee.

Number of indoor and outdoor poor during the following years :—

Year.	Population.	Number of Paupers chargeable on the 1st January in each year.		Total.	Cost of Out-Relief for the Year ended Christmas.
		Indoor.	Outdoor.
1883	246,352	2,524	4,864	7,388	£ 15,522
1888		3,147	2,406	5,553	6,807
1893		3,017	778	3,795	2,236
1898		2,868	952	3,820	3,968
1900	245,522	3,158	1,086	4,244	4,927
1901		3,160	1,242	4,402	5,781
1902		3,251	1,375	4,626	5,890
1903		3,343	1,465	4,808	5,993
1904		3,522	1,458	4,980	6,193
1905		3,738	1,683	5,421	6,325
1906		3,658	1,638	5,296	6,331
1907		3,528	1,494	5,022

The infirmary was opened as a separate institution in February, 1889. The method of election, and the qualification of guardians of the poor were altered in 1894, and guardians from that date are elected for the various wards of the parish. The next table shows the increased cost of relief and number of paupers in each relief district comparing 1901 with 1906.

District.	Average weekly number of Outdoor Poor for the Year ending Lady-Day.		Increase per Cent.	Cost of Out-Relief during the Year ended Lady-Day.
	1901.	1906.		1901.	1906.
2	435	465	6·8	2,129	2,111
3	200	287	43·5	907	1,228
4	227	407	79·3	1,085	1,550

There has been a gradual increase in both indoor and outdoor poor since 1894.

The relief committees have been charged recently with giving orders for the workhouse to persons applying for outdoor relief, thereby contributing to the overcrowded state of that Institution. There has been a continuous diminution of such orders since 1883. The following table shows that there is no foundation whatever for such a statement.

Year.	Orders for the Workhouse made by the Relief Committees.	For Number of Persons.	Number of those Orders used.	For Number of Persons.
1888	99	217	33	59
1905	8	15	4	11

Of the eleven persons to whom orders were given in 1905, four were subsequently removed to another parish. The remainder had on several occasions been cautioned for neglecting their homes and children. The general surroundings in each case were very unsatisfactory, and the committees felt that out-relief should not be continued under such circumstances. The recipients had every assistance given them of improving their condition, but no alteration took place, and orders for the workhouse were therefore given.

SENIOR FOTHERGILL, Superintendent.

STATEMENT BY THE CLERK.

The Clerk desires to explain to those guardians who were not members of the board in the year 1883, the cause for the reduction in the number of persons receiving out-relief at the close of the year 1893, and the decrease in the amount of relief for the same period, as compared with the number and cost at the close of 1883, Early in the year 1883 the attention of the board was drawn to the somewhat alarming condition of out-relief in the parish, and a special committee was appointed to consider the subject. This committee, with the sanction of the board, framed a series of regulations for adoption by the various relief committees, and by adhering to them it helped to a great extent in bringing about uniformity of treatment by the relief committees. About this time the Local Government Board Inspector for the district (Mr. J. J. Henley) was impressing upon the board the absolute necessity for improving their nursing arrangements at the workhouse, and urging them to provide, as soon as possible, a separate institution for the treatment of sick poor. Pending the board coming to a decision respecting the provision of a separate infirmary, he advised the guardians to send a deputation to the workhouse at Brownlow Hill, Liverpool, for the purpose of ascertaining the facts associated with the system of the engaging of visiting physicians and surgeons to assist in the treatment of the indoor sick poor. In the course of making investigations as to the administration of both in and out-relief in Liverpool, the deputation were much impressed with the valuable information given them respecting the employment of a superintendent and a cross-visitor in the out-relief department. The deputation's report in favour of the engaging of visiting physicians and a surgeon were adopted by the board, and the special committee were next empowered to consider the question of appointing a superintendent to take sole charge of the out-relief work of the parish. The relieving officers at this time, with one exception, were well advanced in years. It was generally known by the guardians that, owing to this fact, and the number of cases on the relief lists being exceptionally large, the relieving officers were quite unable to make the necessary investigations to enable them to report the whole facts to the relief committees. After some amount of discussion it was decided by a large majority of the board to appoint a superintendent of out-relief, and also a cross-visitor to assist in a careful investigation being made of all the cases then on the relief-books. As the older relieving officers retired younger men were appointed as their successors, and these new officers, together with the superintendent, began to devote particular attention to persons receiving relief, and to make thorough investigations respecting all fresh applicants. The result of this is shown in the foregoing tabulated statement. The out-relief staff consisted in 1883 of five medical officers (partially employed), five relieving officers, an assistant relieving officer, and two pay-clerks. The superintendent recommended soon after his appointment that another relieving officer should be engaged. This proposal was approved by the board. In the course of time the number of persons in receipt of relief had so greatly declined that the staff was rearranged upon several occasions, and now consists in addition to the superintendent, of two medical officers, four relieving officers, an assistant relieving officer and one pay-clerk who also acts as cross-visitor.

CHARLES FLETCHER,
Clerk.

- (a) Is patient fit for work ;
- (b) Is he fit for removal to Workhouse considering that fact as to whether he suffers from an infectious disease ;

the examinations were not made so carefully as if I intended to treat the disease.

DESCRIPTION OF TERMS USED.

Single and Back to back are synonymous as to character of house. A single house has a wall at back with no windows or doors in it, a back to back another house. Double house is a house two rooms thick with a back door and through ventilation.

Squalid.—Where furniture consists of a table, two chairs or so, and a wooden couch, and bedroom contains only beds and, perhaps, a box.

Poor.—Where furniture is more extensive, dressing table upstairs, a couch, chest of drawers, pictures, etc.

Comfortable.—Where little luxuries come in, e.g., carpet on bedroom floor, etc.

Where character of street is given, I do not remember what house was like.

In describing diseases plain English terms were used when possible.

⚠ This child had been turned away the day before from the Eye Department of a Hospital because only a fixed number of new cases (already too large a number) could be satisfactorily seen a day. She had two large and active corneal ulcers, causing great pain and requiring treatment urgently. The mother thought it was "blight" only. We gave first aid; gave introduction by special letter to the Eye Surgeon for next day but one. He received the case and treated it drastically.

This case illustrates the need of "Close-at-hand Dispensary" and inter-communication of medical authorities.

Similar treatment all winter, 1903-4, but attendance irregular. Annotations as to bronchitis, rheumatism, mitral disease and enfeebled, irregular heart. Coal granted once, but too far away to fetch regularly. Turned up again November, 1905, and was after one month lost sight of. Came March, 1st 1907, very ill, heart, lungs, kidneys, and stated in her own words, arranged for reading :—"I sent three times for parish doctor, to the parish. Because I had 'no one belonging to me' to send, he would not come till a heavy responsibility was laid on him." (This rule occasionally leads to cruel and serious neglect, even the appeal of kindly neighbour [vice a neglectful relative or one to whom the illness or death would be an advantage] being rudely rebuffed. In this way, and many similar ones, medical out-relief can be kept well under control, and trouble and expense spared.) "Then I had no one to send for medicine, more than half-an hour's walk."

The case paper was endorsed medically, urine to be brought next time ; 1s. given for trams and food, absolute rest enjoined and "get doctor if worse." The woman would never have been suspected of being in such dire need ; and was too respectable and kindly to be subjected to unyielding rules, enforced without sympathy. Her death was shortly after reported ; I never saw her again.—H.B.W.

SUPPLEMENTARY STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. H. BAGSTER WILSON, M.R.C.S., WITH SUGGESTIONS AS TO "HEALTH DISTRICTS," "DISTRICT DISPENSARIES," AND SUGGESTIONS FROM PAPER TO "ECONOMIC READING CIRCLE."

1. (a) Illness from Non-controllable Conditions.
(i) Housing.—Confining myself to the "Floodgate Street Area," I do not regard the bad housing as the chief element in the vicious circle which produces the illness of the poor person. In itself a disgrace to our social system, its worst features would vanish in the majority of cases were there sufficient, and sufficiently authoritative, actual medical inspection by experienced doctors, and were the houses used in accordance with the elemental rules of health. Further, were the habits of the people less selfish and more temperate, the houses would either stand empty, or would be so materially, and frequently, overhauled, that each one would become a tiny workmen's palace with its class adornments and traditions, rather than a lair, with cooking accommodation, for an ill-regulated and soon to be disintegrated group of human beings misnamed a "family."
I have unlearned my initial view as to the inevitable evils of the court system. For crowded populations there is a great deal to be said for it. It provides a healthy publicity; if bad examples are contagious, so are good ones, as I have frequently seen. The amount of our filtered sunlight which does reach the ground itself, is far greater when the little yards are thrown into one common space; this applies also to the access of air, and the possibility of the poor, especially children, whose eyes are being unconsciously trained, having access to views of sky and objects at a distance. Nor am I at all sure that it is safe for the morals of women, nor for the safety of the often necessarily left to themselves children, that the slum home should be modelled on the enclosed lines of a suburban middle-class dwelling. How would an efficient wash-house be provided for our householders with the space at our command were it not common to several houses?

I do not wish to be understood as minimising the vital importance of good housing. Fortunately the Birmingham Housing Committee is effecting great improvements, and I am thankful that the Housing and Health Committees are integral parts of the same ultimate authority, and that their members meet on common ground in other matters than those to which they give such close and special attention. I wish similar co-operation were practicable throughout the administrations working in any particular civic area.

(ii) Employment.—I must leave this answer mainly to experts on public health. I regret that I cannot regard the system of factory inspection as of great value in stemming the tide of ill-health from dirty and therefore unhealthy trades, insanitary workplaces, and the vilely immoral atmosphere which makes devils of our young people in so many cases, if they had not become that already by the street trading which is tolerated—if not fostered—in Birmingham. Street trading ought to be abolished in the case of the young; it is a retrograde institution relatively to the social advance of the times, and every lover of the "Average Slum Child" detests it, and all its baneful fruits.

Excessive Hours.—These tell on men; relatively, they are a more serious cause of ill-health in the female. The spurt which takes place at puberty, such as it is, soon evanesces under the ordinary conditions of girl labour; the vain struggles nature makes are pathetic in the extreme, and constitute a vast mass of dumb misery which few realise. In many cases health and heart are ground out of the girls, habits bred of unconscious despair and of a pervading impurity taking their place, if so one may speak.

Casual Work and Meagre Earnings.—I have specified poverty as one of the chief causes, if not of illness (but where shall we begin?) at least of the sheer impossibility of the sick person receiving sufficient medical attention, or the corollaries of that in the shape of nursing essentials, invalid food, extra fire, etc., etc.

(b) Illness from Bad Habits.

(i) Ignorance.—This is a most pertinent suggestion. It is to the certainty I have, after ten years' unintermitted experience, that a definite and by no means negligible percentage of the average slum-dwellers will respond to the suggestions of a medical man whom they trust, that I base my hopes of far-reaching reform and consequent improvement of the health of the people, if small areas are allocated to the same doctor (not "officer"), he being charged with practically supreme executive powers while himself under friendly, trained, and sympathetic medical supervision. I believe that we are carelessly, and therefore criminally, throwing away an immense amount of undeveloped medical interest in the poor, simply because we do not utilise the doctors in such a way that they have any hope of seeing satisfactory results from their labours and suggestions. Every step taken in removing ignorance has also the collateral advantage of further classifying "the poor" into the want-to-do-rights and the don't-want-to-do-rights, a classification urgently wanted throughout poor areas. We are, at present, making it the easiest road to efficient help to go downhill; and, in the terrible state of physical decay—whether progressive or not, we need not waste time in enquiring—which actually stares us in the face as a nation, the State is neglecting one of its chief duties in not placing at the disposal of even its poorest members the concrete results of the toil and skill of the nation's health corps, I mean the medical profession, whose potential value appears to be as little appreciated as that of the professional educationalist.

The good which could be done by the joint action and mutual help of the doctor and teacher is simply incalculable in removing ignorance; but if these friends of the poor are not going to have powers which will enable them to deal swiftly with the multitudinous exigencies which crop up almost from hour to hour, and if they are to be overwhelmed with hours and hours a week in their scant leisure (I presume they are enthusiastic workers) in copying out detailed reports, it is idle to plan paper schemes for removing ignorance. Whatever is told the poor to do, and it must be told kindly, not brutally, must be, after time has been given for the instruction to be understood, carried out to the letter, and I reiterate my belief that the poor are not hopelessly recalcitrant, if led firmly and disinterestedly by those whose authority would be discovered in a very short time. Think of the marvels of management effected by our civil servants in India, with the minimum of officialism. But I understand they are supported up to the hilt.

(ii) Lack of Self-control, etc.—We cannot directly attack all that your question involves by the scheme I am about to advocate; but every measure of effected control helps forward every other, just as parents prepare their children not to become hysterical by exercising their will power in earliest years. Our young people are hustled into life, not initiated. If they have been even a little better fed, more regularly fed; if they have had more sleep, more fresh air; if they have been all their school days cleanly enough for a teacher or doctor to approach without having his stomach upset for the day; if concurrently with this, open spaces are provided, towns better planned, street noises sternly suppressed, streets cleaned when they are dirty and not according to rote, and if men are not allowed to draw weekly wages and at the same time send their children to school in filthy rags, we shall have more self-control in the next generation. Adults defy us all to-day; the children defy them, the laws of society, and us. We want powerful "officials" (I dislike the term) in the heart of the population.

2. Health Visitors and Nurses under the Medical Officer of Health.

May I take this with Question 5?

I have worked with, and am constantly receiving cases from, health visitors, school attendance officers, etc.; though the State, whose rates are thereby saved, does not lift a finger to bear our financial burdens or the personal and extra burden on time and health which this work involves. Our committee, or at least some of its members, have thought that the State was exploiting the willingness of our slender staff to assist it. But let this pass. The agents referred to are all doing their best, and are accomplishing, amid almost superhuman difficulties, not a little for the health of the community.

I would, however, call your earnest attention to some such scheme as the following, which I present to the Commission as coming from one speaking "from the abyss," and to those who necessarily have a wider outlook.

We are not ripe for voluntary health visitors just yet. Let such helpers put their backs into the City of Birmingham Aid Society; we will give them quite enough to do in a lay capacity, plus a training in the ground principles of what Mr. Mackay calls "public charity." The more they know of hygiene, cooking, sewing, house-order, care of children, the better; but let them be responsible in the first instance to the district committee of the Aid Society. They will have more than enough to do in acting as the "Helferinnen" of the poor. Do not confuse state and citizen influence. While our machinery is developing too, the medical officer of health would be worried to death by supervising the assistance of voluntary workers, and so would the ward doctor I am about to speak of.

But Question 5 contains a key word or rather phrase "qualified medical staff" which leads me to what I have long been trying to think out, and which would make "practicable"—that is the point of Question 2—your Section (a) to (f).

We are cursed with a multiplicity of agencies in any particular area; yet each agency, as a whole, is overburdened and very largely ineffective. We imperatively need far better ground plans, such as every Army organiser has in reserve. We want far fewer independent officials, public and charitable (each is the pan and the kettle in more ways than one), each official representing some far off authority, of which he is the faint echo. (The poor look upon all state officials, many not of superior education and practical ability to some of themselves, as their natural enemies, and they circumvent them right and left every day.) We want to take a map of every large city and carefully mark it out into health districts, the more congested districts being the smaller and having the best men at their head. Each area should be considered as a little imperium, whose welfare lies on the heart of someone as truly as if that someone were the health officer of a small town. The smallest district we should dare to plan would in any case be far more populous than many a small town amply provided with a fully trained medical officer of health.

If these premises are admitted, I venture to propose the following :—

(i) The Medical Officer of Health as the supreme executive guardian of the health of the city in all and every matter concerning the prevention and treatment of disease. Further, he should be, more than ever, the adviser of the Education Department, the Housing Department, and so on. This involves—even under the present ad hoc constitution of the Poor Law—a matter beyond me to pronounce dogmatically on—the extension of his authority to the whole range of Poor Law medical relief, concerning which, as an outdoor system, the less said the better. It is a will o' the wisp, with all the evil consequences of that phantom guide.

An end must be put, in my opinion, to the poor feeling themselves touched by several authorities, at any rate in health matters. What we seem to gain in extensive working and when great arrays of figures are presented is worthless compared to the intensive working of unchallengeable, because undivided, authority, firmly but not inhumanly exercised within the compass of a manageable health district. "I will report it," the new district medical officer would say, "to the medical officer of health," better still, "to Dr. A . . ." Such reference to a supreme officer would be understood, and would be far more effective than a page of printed matter on a form, though even forms have their value.

(ii) The Medical Officer of Health still supreme as an executive officer—and responsible of course to his city council as a whole—would be supported by an advisory staff of the most experienced consultants, medical and surgical, of the city, the best representatives of the main branches of our profession, men who would deem it an honour to meet as a full committee, or in sections as called together by him. Such a staff, if not too unwieldy, would be of great moral help to the medical officer of health. (I wish to state that these views have not been discussed with anyone, and that I purposely refrained from obtaining the expert advice of the local medical officer of health.) Such a staff, or council, could enormously facilitate co-operation and co-ordination of adequate medical relief, and could elaborate locally the national scheme of medical insurance already so belated. This council would advise the medical officer of health as to the superintending doctors for large divisions and as to the appointments of district doctors. (I have omitted to say that picked representatives of the general practitioner arm of medical service should also be invited to serve.)

(iii) The Medical Officer of Health would nominate District Medical Officers of Health for each health district, either ad hoc officials, or as medical men sufficiently subsidised for the work required of them. These men would carry his (the municipal) authority to every corner of the district in every particular. Provided that they satisfied their chief, they would, as a matter of routine, be autocratic each in his district. Each district officer would make it his business not to treat the occurrence of disease as a nuisance lessening his time and income, but as an opportunity for putting into practice the latest curative and preventive ideas, and for utilising the increasingly amply provision of State institutions and benevolent foundations. He would strive to make his district a model; and the more he succeeded the more would his recommendations be listened to by his official superiors and in the district.

As representing the supreme medical officer of health, and always under him, he would have direct control of health visitors, nuisance inspectors, et hoc genus omne ;

I am assured by most competent headmasters that he would be a persona grata in the council schools; he would be welcomed at the guardian's meetings and courteously listened to between them; he would, of course, be more than welcome at the fortnightly meeting of the City Aid Society for his district; in short, need I elaborate further, he would be utilised from first to last to "see through" all that is now hanging fire.

As to actual medical treatment. The amount of it, and the desirability of his giving it, will be treated as I now consider your Questions 3, 4, and 6.

3. Medical Insurance, Free Aid, Utilisation of Voluntary Hospitals, etc.

My printed evidence having been considered, much of Questions 3 and 6 is thereby answered. I further suggest :—

(i) Concurrently with the planning of the health district system under the supreme executive control of the chief medical officer of health the United Kingdom and Ireland (why not the Empire, for there is a constant interchange of inhabitants of its different parts?) should, as a matter of extreme urgency, organise a system of medical insurance. I have not yet quite come to the conclusion that it should be compulsory, for our nation has its peculiar genius; but organised it should be without delay. It is a task worthy of the highest constructive genius, and should not have a tinge of party taint. I have made it my business, since the Chairman of the Commission honoured me with his invitation, to ask working men of every section, skilled and labouring, besides curates, clerks, people of small means generally, whether they would grudge a small weekly or monthly sum to ensure medical treatment from the initial consultation to the most costly essential treatment. I cannot obtain a refusal from any quarter. Such a system would be a boon beyond words to millions, nor need it interfere with any reputable friendly society willing to co-operate, and I believe that in the end more doctors, properly paid, would be employed. If the system were not compulsory, it would have to be widely advertised, and every facility afforded to the humblest to take advantage of it.

(ii) The above compels a co-ordination of all existing agencies, or most of them, for medical relief; and a wide extension of the close-at-hand dispensary in some form or other. It would be the business of these medical relief agencies to qualify themselves for the careful and efficient treatment of all insured cases, including those whose insurance with a friendly society was recognised as equivalent to the State insurance. There would also be money for special institutions, e.g., for consumptives; and enormous amounts of time would be saved to the sick and to their friends, to say nothing of the economy of national health.

The great bulk of medical consultation, and even a large quantity of minor surgery of trifling surgical interest, but large in total amount, should be cleared off in simple, plainly built and easily cleansed State dispensaries, or buildings utilised for the purpose. Where such dispensaries exist, they might be paid for each insurance case, but they would to that extent have to submit to the oversight of the medical officer of health or his deputies.

These dispensaries would be the clearing houses of our congested medical system; and, as they become appreciated, I am sure that more medical men would be absorbed in their service and would therein be able to do sterling work. The State system would provide arrangements for ready transfer of consultative cases to the hospitals, now free to do their proper work to the satisfaction of their staffs. They too would be duly subsidised in proportion to the insured cases treated, plus the willingness of friends to pay extra, not for better treatment, but for a little more luxury and privacy. The home visiting would arise naturally from the dispensary decisions, or the first appeal of the friends. Whoever undertook it, for State insured cases, or their equivalent, would ipso facto be connected with the jurisdiction, and have the support of, the medical officer of health. (I am supposing here that the services of an existing dispensary staff, or of a general practitioner, are being utilised.)

(iii) Free Medical Aid.—In itself this is urgently required, but I have sought to grasp, theoretically and practically, the drawbacks to it. To begin with, there is an immense amount of it at present, to the deterioration of private and hospital practice, to the waste of home time which ought to be spent in cooking, washing, caring for children or invalids, and with no proportionate return. It would be a revelation to the Commission to hear the muttered expressions of dissatisfaction which proceed from the poor as to all our arrangements even after the generous gifts of hospital patrons, and the exhausting toil of staffs. Moreover, we are strangling the general practitioner while not providing him with another berth. He loses much of his hard-earned money, or must appear to play the part of a usurer. I am told that the hospital system imposes an almost intolerable and long-continued burden on some of the most brilliant and painstaking younger men, who do not come—if ever—to their own till the finest working years of life, after a prolonged course of study too, are passed.

If the State will arrange an insurance scheme, national if not imperial, and if it will empower the creation of a sort of medical treatment “ladder,” to use a familiar though not sufficiently comprehensive phrase, the population of the country will be divided into three classes as to medical relief:—

(a) Those who can continue to afford a family practitioner, with specialists, nurses, etc., per separate illness.

(b) Those who have insured directly with the State, or in some agency conforming to State regulations.

(c) Those who have not seen as yet the benefits of insurance, who have run out, or who could never have afforded it.

I take it that however much the opportunities the State arranges for (I prefer not to say provides) may ultimately benefit Class (a), the Commission is not directly concerned with that class.

As to Class (b). This class should be the very backbone of our social system, and is much more extensive than is realised. It is still the few who are really rich enough to pay for all the help required in sickness, just when it is most wanted, and for convalescence ensuing thereon. This class is too very ignorant, in the light of present knowledge. I think therefore that the arrangements for the treatment of this class, utilising the State insurance, should be in the hands of the medical officer of health and his council (staff). How far the district medical officer (on the new lines), and the State dispensary and allied organisations, should solely treat such cases, and how far the services of competent general practitioners and existing institutions should be utilised, is not beyond the wit of man to plan. But in any case the medical officer of health must be the supreme referee, and his district representative must be treated as his deputy throughout; the medical officer of health's staff helping to clear up ethical and other difficulties should such arise.

As to Class (c), which would, I hope, prove a steadily diminishing class, I am at present of opinion that it is highly desirable for the new district medical officer, backed up by his group of nurses, sanitary inspectors, school nurses, health visitors, etc., to treat them. He would thus keep his hand in, medically and to a limited extent surgically, he would acquire a first-hand knowledge that cannot be bought by lectures or private study, he would hold the very strong position of “the (kind) doctor” towards the very cases which most need strong dealing with; as we have decreed that medical relief does not pauperise, his treatment of Class (c) would prove to the public that this is not a sham concession nullified very harshly in practice; he would come across the worst children at the school, in the consulting room and, through his scouts, in the homes, whence, if need be, they would be referred direct to him; and his case papers, properly kept up, card-indexed and annotated, would be a mine of information for the co-operating charities, and for the Poor Law.

At the same time the State doctor would do his utmost—while treating the cases as fully as they require, destitution being no test of illness—to make it clear that no one in work should be treated free, and that everyone should insure. Without any injustice, I feel certain that arrangements—which the poor quickly discover the reason for—could be made to give special hours, or other advantages, to the insured cases, e.g., a separate entrance and waiting room would do much to encourage insurance. At any rate an experiment on these lines could but be made; why should not plenary powers be given to the new district medical officer of typical slum districts in a few cities before the system was universalised?

My case-papers have a “relief column”: this principle could be carried out in the State system. The doctor would recommend what he deemed needful; but the relieving officer, or his equivalent, would advise the doctor where this would be a mistake. The district being, on our whole supposition, comparatively small, there is no reason why the relieving officer should not call early each afternoon, or before the patients have left the dispensary, to initial each medical relief order, and visit any doubtful case, with power to carry out the doctor's recommendation if it were likely to help the sound treatment of the whole situation. There should be a dispensary milkman; and, personally, I think that oatmeal and other groceries are much better handed out at the dispensary. We have contracts for institutions; why should not the poor get the benefit of them when recognised as State out-patients? More can be given for the same money; and the temptation to sell the order, or buy what was not meant, is notably reduced by such system. There is a real difficulty about coal; but at least coal tickets are rarely misused. The coal dealer, under a State system, should give good value, even though the sales were, individually, small.

To sum up:—

The medical officer of health would be the supreme authority as to the health of the community from highest to lowest, and with the widest possible range of function. Departmental officialism should help him in every possible way, i.e., even civic departmentalism not his own.

The medical officer of health should be responsible for arrangements to secure the adequate treatment of all insured persons and their families. The medical treatment “ladder” should be open to his criticism, and every rung tested by him or his deputy. It must be efficient and complete.

The health districts should be under the immediate authority of a district medical officer with plenary powers for routine work.

The district medical officer would treat all uninsured persons claiming medical relief, and treat them adequately. At the same time his surveillance would be very strict: all neglect reported by him would involve police or other proceedings, at present the mockery of the poor; and, while avoiding the present hardships of the Poor Law out-relief system, the treatment, or rather the conditions of treatment of the insured should be made distinctly more eligible than those of the still uninsured.

We should do our utmost to maintain the home, despite all its defects. As far as I can see, we shall not weaken the medical profession. Who would be a slum doctor if he could help it? Nor are there nearly enough of them for adequate treatment under the present system. And we are increasingly undermining their position almost from day to day. Let us utilise them, not as club doctors with miserable resources, but as either State doctors for the insured, or as State subsidised practitioners, responsible to that extent to the State chiefly, and freed a little more from the crushing burdens of their present lot. We are not yet ripe for the wholesale supplanting of skilled medical aid, and a little knowledge may and does often prove a dangerous thing.

ASSUMPTIONS.

1. That in spite of all efforts to the contrary, there is a serious amount of preventable ill-health and under-health in all great cities, with direct and indirect loss and expense to the community.

2. That medical charities are overcrowded with trivial work, done at a distance from the home; the hospital authorities, staffs, patients, and public, being profoundly dissatisfied for various reasons. No efficient and kindly cure is yet to hand.

3. That Poor Law medical outdoor relief is highly unpopular, is practically a pauper agency, is very poorly equipped, and is worked in a roundabout way, involving great hardships at the very time that such should be avoided.

4. That the whole organisation of public health is divorced from any practical treatment of disease, even by its outside officers, with consequent grave marring of its authority, which should extend from before the birth of the future citizen to his interment within decent limits of time. (Authority not necessarily treatment.) That there are too many petty officials in any given area, none under the immediate control of a medical man on the spot, and intimately acquainted with such (defined) area.

5. That in view of the forthcoming medical inspection of children, and what will arise therefrom, no time should be lost in co-ordinating:—

(a) State medical relief of all kinds, present and prospective.

(b) Provident and charitable medical relief, on statesmanlike and far-reaching lines.

6. That there must necessarily be an inevitable and crippling cost of unco-ordinated medical, or semi-medical State systems.

7. That competent general practitioners should be protected and encouraged, their valuable work being essential to the health of the community.

SUGGESTIONS.

(a) State Medical Relief.

1. Supremacy of City Health Committee, however sectionized for sanitary, registration, poor relief, and educational purposes.

2. Formation of "Health Districts" each under a responsible "district doctor," the immediate superior of sanitary and health minor officials, nurses, etc. Such "district doctor" to perform, or at least superintend, all State work, including medical inspection of children; and to be, at the same time, a link between citizen medical relief, as soon as co-ordinated, and the general practitioner. He will be in immediate touch with all State hospitals and asylums.

3. Establishment of plainly built, but sanitary, "District Dispensaries" (where existing ones cannot be arranged with) in the heart of each health district, and easily accessible from each sub-district.

Such Close-at-hand Dispensary could be made to serve the purpose of:—

(i.) Local office of district doctor (representative of medical officer of health).

(ii.) Place of call of sanitary inspectors, health visitors, nurses, etc.

(iii.) Registry office of births, deaths, and marriages, a great improvement on the present arrangement.

(iv.) Local office and consulting room (for special cases) of school doctor (if a separate official) for the sub-districts.

(v.) Medical relief at present under the Poor Law, and consulting room for its medical officer. (Relieving officers to attend at stated hours and save long journeys of those nursing the sick poor, when such apply for medical orders.

(b) Citizen Medical Relief.

1. Formation of a local "Medical Council" with medical and lay representatives from all medical charities, and representatives from the body of general practitioners.

2. Such medical council to promote co-ordination of medical charity and of provident medical relief, and to confer as a coherent and representative body, with the health committee, on matters affecting the health of the community. Also, to facilitate reference of special cases to highly equipped institutions.

3. District dispensaries (existing or to be formed) to be adapted so as to serve as hospital out-stations and medical clearing houses for routine work, admission at special hours, or special entrances, being by provident or charity notes. (The value of the district dispensary to each institution connected with it, to be decided by the health committee and medical council pro rata.) This suggestion is made, to meet hospital overcrowding on the one hand, and to save waiting and promote efficient treatment on the other. District dispensaries to be in close touch with all medical institutions more highly equipped.

4. District dispensaries to be utilised by voluntary "health societies" interested in infant consultations, etc., and for milk depots.

5. District dispensaries to provide branch offices (at allotted cost) of City of Birmingham Aid Society, and to contain the district charity register in connection therewith of all reported charitable help given in the district by all agencies co-operating with the City Aid.

In these several ways the district doctors and district dispensaries would be efficiently supported at a minimum of expense to each agency utilising them; and the whole system, to adapt Mr. Phelps's words in questioning me, would be a "moral mission" to the district, "raising the standard of life." There would be more chance then of dealing with the homes, when rivalry and confusion of authority died a natural death, and district, as distinct from vaguely municipal, authority was strongly installed in the heart of each congested city area.

MEMORANDUM RE 75 PER CENT. OF THE WORKING

I very much regret that I cannot find the authority from which I obtained the view that 75 per cent. of the working classes die before reaching sixty-five years of age. I have searched for several days in the hope of finding some definite data to substantiate the assertion. I have failed to verify that any such calculation has been made, and the only explanation I can offer is that either I fail to find my authority, or that my reading and enquiries forced me irresistibly to that conclusion. I shall still further continue my investigations. My present enquiries, however, more than confirm my previous opinion, and while I have no exact data, I think the following goes a long way to prove my statement.

(a) Insurance Mortality Tables.—When it is borne in mind that these deal with only healthy lives, and leave out altogether the most precarious and unhealthy.

(b) The Sick Experience of Friendly Societies.—Here also the most risky proportion of the community are not included.

(c) In 1900, only 3 per cent. of the total membership

CLASSES DYING BEFORE SIXTY-FIVE YEARS OF AGE.

(viz., about 8,000,000) of all the friendly societies were over sixty-five years of age.

(d) In the Appendix of the Old-age Pension Committee was a calculation, dated November 28th, 1896, stating that the male population was 15,000,000, while of that number, 656,000 were sixty-five years of age and upwards. While of the female population of 16,000,000, 829,000 were sixty-five years of age, and upwards. Seeing that the middle and upper classes would show a larger percentage over sixty-five years than the working classes, I think the percentage of the working classes above sixty-five years would be well within 25 per cent. of the whole.

(e) The annual death rate and the annual duration of life.

Although I cannot offer a precise and definite percentage, and give an authority for the conclusion I came to, I am fully convinced that 75 per cent. of the working classes die before reaching sixty-five years of age is not too large a figure, and that it is in my judgment well within the actual realisation.

Conditions.

Members in the other classes may avail themselves of the same privilege by the payment of a proportionate amount. A member may withdraw his balance of the fund from either Tables 2 or 3 without deduction at any time by giving one week's notice of his desire to do so. A member availing himself of Table 2 after thirty-one years of age thereby reduces his contribution to 2s. 4d. per lunar month. On withdrawal from the fund the member shall be immediately placed under the ordinary Table I., Rule 7.

Members transfer from Appropriation Fund to Table I.
9. To enable members to avail themselves of Rule 8, all members above thirty years of age shall be at liberty to transfer from their appropriation account such a sum as will be required to enable them to adopt Table 2, on condition that the amount so transferred shall not be withdrawable, except on the same conditions as the member's appropriation.

Increasing or Decreasing Subscriptions.

13. A member may at any time, with the consent of the Divisional Committee, and subject to Rule 10, change from one class to another, so as to increase or diminish his subscriptions, but the share in the surplus fund to be allotted to him as hereinafter provided in respect of the year current when the change takes place during the first three months next after such change, and any sick pay to which he may be entitled during six calendar months next after such change, shall both be calculated in respect to the lowest of the classes which he may occupy before or after the change.

Handed in by Mr. F. W. Daniels, Birmingham. (Q. 44919.)

CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH MEMBERS MAY BECOME ENTITLED TO BENEFITS.

When Benefits begin.

whom he may be allotted, including medicine, immediately after becoming a member. But any candidate being accepted as a member may become, with the consent of the Divisional Committee, entitled to immediate full sick and funeral benefit upon payment of an additional entrance fee—to be paid at the same time as the ordinary entrance fee—according to the following scale :—

Conditions of Receiving Sick Pay.

15. Any member (subject as hereinafter mentioned) who shall be afflicted with illness lasting for more than two consecutive days, disabling him from following his calling, and not resulting from old age, or from any disease, complaint or weakness, which was not concealed at the time of his admission to the society, shall be entitled to the benefits hereinafter mentioned and called sick pay, and if he has subscribed for medical attendance he shall be entitled to have the free attendance of the surgeon to whom he has been allotted.

Scale of Sick Pay.

18. Any member claiming and entitled to sick pay shall receive a sum in accordance with the following table :

19. If a member who has declared on the funds shall continue ill, and require sick pay for a period longer than six months, he shall, after the expiration of that period, receive half only of the foregoing sick pay per week for the remainder of his illness.

Blindness.

24. Any member who shall be afflicted with blindness or temporary loss of sight to such a degree as to prevent his following his employment, shall be entitled to receive the full sick pay for a period of not more than the first six calendar months of such affliction, but after such period, should he no longer require medical treatment for the restoration of his sight, his allowance shall be reduced to the scale appended hereto so long as the affliction may last, provided the affliction has wholly come upon him during his membership, and does not arise from any affliction previous to his membership, he shall be allowed to follow any employment within his power to assist him in procuring a livelihood.

Loss of Limb, etc.

25. Any member who shall be disabled from following his employment by loss of limb, paralysis, or by any disease requiring medical treatment, shall, subject to

Rule 19, receive full sick pay so long as he shall require medical treatment, or be totally disabled from following any employment, but where the surgeon attending him certifies (after receiving six months' full pay) that such member is recovered as far as medical treatment can avail, he shall receive, so long as such affliction may last, an allowance in accordance with the reduced scale mentioned in Rule 24, and shall be allowed to follow any employment to assist him in procuring a livelihood.

Chronic Disease.

26. Any member who shall be disabled from following his employment in consequence of permanent disability resulting from chronic disease, shall receive sick allowance in accordance with the reduced scale mentioned in Rule 24, so long as he continues a member of the society.

Non-disabling Ailments.

27. When a member is afflicted with any disease that does not prevent him following his usual employment, he shall not be entitled to any sick allowance, but if he has subscribed for medical attendance he shall be entitled to be attended by the surgeon to whom he has been allotted so long as the same will, in the opinion of the surgeon attending him, tend to benefit the disease.

Where Special Benefits are to be Charged.

28. The claims of members under Rules 24, 25, and 26, shall only affect the current income of the society, and shall not be a charge on the accumulated fund.

Premature Old Age.

29. No sick pay shall be allowed on account of infirmity arising from old age, but a member afflicted thereby may, with the consent of the Executive Committee, act upon the superannuation Rule 35, before attaining the age of sixty-five years.

Insanity.

30. Any member being afflicted with mental disease lasting twelve months shall receive full sick pay during six months, and half-pay for a like period, but if at the expiration of that time there is no abatement of the affliction, he shall then be paid out all the monies standing to his credit in the society, and his membership shall cease.

Pregnancy and Child-birth.

34. On the birth of a child, a female member may withdraw from her own surplus capital a sum not exceeding one pound ten shillings, provided that after such sum has been withdrawn there remains in the society an amount equal to two years' surplus or upwards, in such member's own right. But in case of the member's death, should the remaining balance be less than the £5 or £10 to which the member is entitled, the amount so withdrawn shall be calculated as though it still stood to the credit of the member. The lying-in month is not considered sickness, nor any illness arising from pregnancy under the rules of the society, and members are not entitled to sick pay for such times, nor to medical attendance.

Handed in by Mr. F. W. Daniels, Birmingham. (Q. 44919.

SUPERANNUATION OR DEATH OF MEMBERS.

Retiring.—Annuity.

35. At the age of sixty-five years each member shall cease to contribute to or receive any sick pay from the society, and his membership shall cease; but he shall have the option of receiving the whole amount which shall be then standing to his credit in the books of the society without any forfeit or deduction whatever, or of surrendering that amount to the society in exchange for an annuity to continue during the residue of his life, at such rate for every pound of the amount so surrendered as may be agreed upon between the executive committee and the member, and certified by a qualified actuary, or the general secretary will, if preferred, without charge to the member, do all necessary things to invest the sum to which the member is entitled, in the purchase of a Government annuity.

Old Age.

36. If any member shall be afflicted with any infirmity resulting from old age before he shall actually have attained the age of sixty-five years, he may, with the consent of the executive committee, be permitted to discontinue his membership and avail himself of Rule 35.

Payment at Death.

38. Upon the death of a member, there shall be paid to the person or persons entitled thereto through such member, the entire sum standing to his credit in the books of the society at the last annual appropriation.

Levy for Death of Member.

39. In the event of the death of a member who, if in Classes I. and II., has less than £5, or if in any other class has less than £10 standing to his credit, a levy shall be made upon the members of such a sum as may be necessary to bring the amount payable up to £5 or £10 as the case may be, or as near as the number of members will allow.

Levy on Death of Wife or Husband.

40. Should the wife or husband of any member die, a levy shall be made upon the members of such a sum as may be necessary to raise the sum of £5, which shall be paid to the member for the funeral expenses of his wife or her husband. Such levy shall be made for one wife or husband only of the same member.

For the purposes of Rules 39 and 40, a general levy shall be made upon the whole society, sufficient to produce such an amount as will be required to meet the liabilities under these rules.

LIFE ASSURANCE.

42. To give members an option of providing for their families in case of early decease the following tables have been compiled in accordance with the Carlisle rate of mortality, rate of interest 2½ per cent.

WHOLE LIFE ASSURANCES.

43. Single, annual, and lunar monthly premiums (including 10 per cent. to the management fund) for an assurance of £100* at death.

* Note.—Assurances may be effected for other amounts from £25 up to, but not exceeding £200, at proportionate rates of contribution.

Under this table the policy holder may discontinue paying premiums at any time after five years, and secure a paid-up policy for a sum proportionate to the number of ordinary premiums paid, if applied for within the thirty days of grace. If, however, the thirty days of grace have expired, the member is entitled to the surrender value, if applied for within twelve calendar months of the premiums becoming due.

The surrender value of the policies under Table 7 is not less than half the subscriptions paid, excluding the first two years' payments.

45. Days of Grace.—Thirty days are allowed for the payment of premiums under all the assurance tables. In the event of death occurring within the days of grace, the claim will be paid, less the premiums due, unless the same be previously paid by the representatives of the deceased.

If the premiums are not paid within thirty days, the policies will lapse.

Members.

46. Such regulations as may be deemed necessary for the examination and admission of members in this section are left to the discretion of the executive.

Medical Attendance.

72. Each member of the society who shall be desirous of having medical attendance during illness shall, in addition to all other payments required by these rules, pay one penny per week, or such sum as the executive committee shall prescribe, to provide for the remuneration of the surgeon under the foregoing rule, and the expenses of the society in making arrangements for medical attendance.

PROVISION FOR EXPENSES OF MANAGEMENT.

Sums set aside for Management.

74. An account shall be opened in the books of the society to be called "The Management Fund," to which shall be carried not more than ten per cent. of all the subscriptions received from the members in accordance with Rules 7, 8, and 42, and also all fines and fees mentioned in these rules, together with the sum of one penny per week payable under these rules by members in respect of medical attendance, and all moneys received from the sale of pay-cards and rules.

Divisional Expenses.

75. Should the management expenses of a division, including the expenses of the districts, exceed the sum of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of all the subscriptions received, the excess shall be made up by a levy upon all the members of such division, proportionately, accordingly to the class to which the member contributes.

Object of Management Fund.

76. The necessary expenses of management shall be defrayed out of the management fund, and no part of the net subscriptions of the members others than as aforesaid shall be applicable for such expenses.

Deficiency in Management Fund.

77. In the event of the expenses of management at any time exceeding the amount of the fund hereby created the deficiency shall be made up by contribution of an equal sum per head to be levied upon all the members of the society not in receipt of sick pay.]

APPENDIX No. XIX. (B).—continued.Handed in by Mr. F. W. Daniels, Birmingham. H.Q. 44919.Surplus Funds.

78. The executive committee may, at the close of any year, if they think fit, and if the amount of the management fund be greater than what has been required to meet the necessary expenses, either carry the balance over to the fund for the next year, or may carry it to a reserve fund, or may add the balance or surplus to the general funds of the society, and in this event such general funds shall not afterwards be liable to recoup the amount so transferred to them.

INVESTMENT OF FUNDS, HOLDING OF LAND, ETC.

Scope of Investments.

96. So much of the funds of the society as may not be wanted for immediate use or to meet the usual accruing liabilities shall, with the consent of the executive committee, be invested by the trustees in such of the following ways as such executive committee shall direct, namely: in any savings bank certified under the Act of 1863, or Post Office Savings bank; in any of the public stocks, funds, or Government securities of the United Kingdom, or upon freehold, copyhold, or leasehold securities, in England or Wales (the leaseholds having not less than fifty years unexpired at the date of investment), or in or upon the stock funds or other securities of any municipal corporation in the United Kingdom, or in the purchase of land, with or without building thereon, or in the erection or alteration of buildings thereon, as after mentioned.

Selling and Buying Powers.

97. The trustees with the consent of the executive committee may purchase or take on lease any land, and may sell, exchange, mortgage, lease, or build upon the same (with power to alter or pull down buildings and again rebuild), and no purchaser, assignee, mortgagee, or tenant shall be bound to inquire as to the authority for any sale, exchange, mortgage, or lease by the trustees, and the receipt of the trustees shall be a discharge for all moneys arising from or in connection with such sale, exchange, mortgage, or lease.

Mortgage Receipts.

98. Mortgages or other assurances for securing money to the society may be vacated by a receipt endorsed, signed by the trustees, and countersigned by the general secretary, in the form contained in the Schedule to the Act.

Division of Surplus Funds.

106. The surplus contributions received from the members during the past year, together with the interest arising from investments, after providing for all claims thereon under these rules, and also for interest on surplus funds, and for a reserve fund if the executive committee shall so determine, shall be accumulated at interest for the use of the members, and shall be placed to the credit of the members in the books of the society in proportion to the weekly amounts of sick pay for which members are severally assured, and interest at £5 per cent. per annum from January 1st in the year in which the appointment takes place (or such lesser rate of interest as the total investments of the society may have yielded for that year) shall be calculated and allowed upon the amount standing to the credit of each member before the division of surplus profit for that year is made.

Division of Profits for portion of Year.

107. Members who have subscribed for a part only of the year for which the division takes place, shall be entitled to a proportionate part of the amount to which they would have been entitled if they had subscribed for the whole year; except that no member shall be entitled to any appropriation for the first three months of his membership.

Object of the Division of Surplus Funds.

108. The apportionment of surplus funds under these rules shall only be made for the purpose of ascertaining the share of the surplus funds to which a member shall be entitled upon ceasing to belong to the society.

MORTGAGES TO THE SOCIETY.

Mortgages.

109. In investing the funds of the society upon mortgages, applications for advances made by persons who are members of the society shall have a prior claim for the consideration of the executive committee, and in the event of there being applications for loans from persons who are members to an amount exceeding the funds available for investment, and the securities offered being equally eligible, the applications shall be dealt with according to priority of application. Members who have received advances may pay off the whole or any part thereof in sums of not less than £5, and shall be charged interest only on the balance due on the mortgage. So long as any money is due from a member to the society on a mortgage, or on any other account whatsoever, the society shall have a first and permanent lien upon all sums of money which may be in or come to the hands of the society or the trustees, for the account of the member or any person claiming through or in trust for him.

TERMINATION OF MEMBERSHIP BY NOTICE.

Resignation of Membership.

110. In the event of any member wishing to discontinue his subscription to the society, and giving notice of his desire to the general or divisional secretary, and paying all arrears, fines, and levies due from him up to the time of giving such notice, he shall cease to be entitled to any benefit from the society, except that at the expiration of the year during which such notice has been given, the amount standing to the credit of the member in the books of the society before the last two appropriations shall be paid to him; but should a member desire to leave the society and still continue his payments to the end of the year, he shall give not less than three months' notice of such intention to the general or divisional secretary, and in this case there shall be paid to him the amount that stood to his credit in the books of the society before the appropriation of the last preceding year. Paying out a member in either case terminates membership.

Expulsion of Members.

111. If any member shall be expelled from the society under any of these rules, he shall be considered as standing in the position of a member who, on the date of such expulsion, gives notice under this rule of his desire to withdraw.

Immorality.

112. Any member guilty of flagrant immorality shall be expelled, and shall not be permitted to re-enter the society for a period of two years, when he may be allowed to apply in accordance with the terms for the admission of new members. The members thus expelled shall be dealt with in other respects under the foregoing rules relating to termination of membership.

MISCELLANEOUS RULES.

Balancing Clause.

123. In the event of the income of the society from all sources being insufficient in any year to meet the demands for annuities and sick pay in consequence of the prevalence of any epidemic, or from any other cause, the proportion of the surplus funds placed to the credit of the then members under Rule 106 shall be liable to make good the deficiency by contributing in proportion to the weekly amounts of sick pay for which members are severally assured.

APPENDIX No. XX. (A).

(Handed in by Miss Helen Newill, King's Norton Union. (Q. 44920 (3).)

SCHEME FOR PROPOSED NEW HOME IN CONNECTION WITH THE WORKHOUSE MAGDALEN CHARITY, WORKING WITHIN THE AREAS OF THE BIRMINGHAM, ASTON, AND KING'S NORTON BOARDS OF GUARDIANS.

October, 1906.

1. That a home be established within (or near to) the City of Birmingham where young unmarried women about to become mothers may be received; that cases admitted before confinement be discharged for the lying-in, either to the proper workhouse, some lying-in hospital, or some other suitable place, and re-admitted to the home as early as practicable.

2. The young women will be expected to stay in the home for a period of not less than four months, during which they will be trained in moral and industrious habits; brought under moral influence and fitted for domestic or other employment, such as laundry work, if desirable.

3. That premises suitable for the purpose and capable of accommodating twelve to fifteen young women, their babies, and the requisite staff, be hired on lease or purchased if sufficient funds be available.

4. That the Birmingham, Aston, and King's Norton Boards of Guardians be asked to agree that in the event of the home being established they will increase their annual subscriptions towards the funds of the charity from 7 guineas each per annum to 25 guineas per annum.

In consideration of their doing so that cases on the application of those boards be charged at the reduced rate of 5s. weekly with an addition of 1s. for each baby maintained.

5. That the Birmingham, Aston, and King's Norton Boards each have the right to nominate a representative upon the executive committee of the charity.

6. That cases from boards of guardians other than those named be admitted upon a payment of an entrance fee of £2, and 7s. weekly, with an addition of 1s. weekly for each baby maintained.

7. That private cases be admitted upon such terms and conditions as the committee of the home may decide.

8. Such a home as is contemplated would need a staff of:—

- (1) Lady superintendent: voluntary, if possible.
- (2) Nurse: not more than £20 per annum.
- (3) Cook-general: not more than £18 per annum
- (4) Laundress: if laundry be found necessary.

9. That an appeal be made to the charitable public for (a) donations towards the establishment of the home, and (b) annual subscriptions towards its maintenance and the general work of the Magdalen Charity.

3. An annual meeting of the members of the society shall be held to receive reports and balance sheet. This meeting, or an extraordinary meeting of the members of the society to be called by the executive council, shall have power to alter the constitution or rules, due notice of such alterations having been given.

The business of the finance committee shall be to raise a fund for carrying out the objects of the association, and to exercise control over the expenditure of such fund, subject to the direction of the executive council.

(4) It shall be the duty of the executive council to exercise control over all operations of the society, to receive periodical reports from the branches, and to frame such special regulations as may from time to time be necessary for the efficient working of the society.

(5) It shall also be the duty of the executive council to discuss from time to time questions of general interest having reference to the causes of poverty and distress, the administration of relief, and proposed remedies for existing circumstances.

(6) The executive council shall have power to appoint sub-committees and to delegate to them such powers as they may deem desirable.

6. The Branch Committee:—

(1) There shall be seven branch committees, the boundaries of whose several areas shall be defined by the executive council.

(2) Each branch shall have within its own area an office which shall serve as a meeting place of the various district committees.

(3) The branch chairman shall be appointed by the executive council. He shall preside at the meetings of the branch committee, and prepare reports for the executive as to the condition of the area covered by the branch. It shall also be his duty to satisfy himself, by periodical visits or otherwise, that the work of the district committees comprised in his branch is carried out efficiently, and in accordance with the rules of the society. All disputes arising within a district committee shall be referred to him for settlement, with a final right of appeal to the executive council.

(4) The hon. treasurer of the branch shall be appointed by the executive council. His duties shall be to supervise the expenditure of the district committees, to receive monthly, or more often if necessary, all accounts for relief and other expenditure, to submit them for approval to the finance committee and pay the accounts.

(5) The hon. secretary of the branch shall be appointed by the executive council. His duties shall be to register all cases dealt with by the district committees of his branch, and to assist the chairman in his work of supervision.

(6) The branch committee shall consist of the above-mentioned officers, together with the chairmen and hon. secretaries of the district committees of the branch, and two representatives elected by each district helpers' committee. It shall also include the city councillors, the guardians and the lady health visitor of the area, and a representative from each provided and non-provided school in the area. It shall meet quarterly at least, and shall discuss matters affecting the work of the branch with a view to the report of the chairman to the executive council.

Meetings may be called at other than the stated times, at the request of any district committee, with the approval of the chairman of the branch.

7. The District Committee:—

(1) The district helpers shall form the district committee.

(2) Persons willing to become district helpers shall be appointed by the committee of the district in which they are willing to work, and shall include representatives of the religious bodies at work within the district, if they are willing to serve. The helpers may be persons of either sex. The names of all district helpers shall be submitted to and their appointment confirmed, annually and from time to time as occasion requires, by the executive council.

(3) The district chairman shall be elected by the helpers of his district. His duties shall be to preside at the committee meetings at which cases are discussed and relief allotted, to assign to various helpers the cases that are brought to his notice, to advise the helpers concerning the best way of dealing with individual cases, and generally to supervise the administration of relief in his district.

(4) The hon. district secretary shall be elected by the district committee. His duties shall be to file and register all case papers for his own committee, and also to supply to the branch secretary the information necessary for the general register of the branch. He shall also obtain from other branches all information that may be requisite concerning any given case.

The district secretaries of any branch shall have access to the general register of the branch and also to one another's case files.

Each helper shall have a moderate group of houses assigned to him for general visitation, in order that he may make himself acquainted with the general circumstances of the people.

He shall also be entrusted by the district chairman with the special care of a small number of families in distressed circumstances, not necessarily residing in his group of houses, and shall visit every such family at least once a week, in order to administer the relief and to watch the case. He shall attend the district committee meetings in order to assist by his advice, even if he himself has no case in hand at the moment.

Except in cases of immediate necessity no helper shall give relief unless it has been sanctioned by his committee. All relief orders must be countersigned by the chairman of the district committee.

Every effort must be made by helpers and by the chairman to call the attention of relatives to the circumstances of applicants for relief, with a view to enlisting their sympathy and help. The district helper should also press upon the attention of those whom he visits the desirability of making provision for illness by joining benefit societies, and should endeavour by personal influence to cultivate in the homes visited the qualities which make for good citizenship, cleanliness, industry, and brain-power. The district helpers shall meet at least once a fortnight.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM AID SOCIETY.

REGULATIONS FOR DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

Terms used :—Chairman = District Chairman ; Hon. Secretary = Honorary District Secretary ; Committee = District Committee ; Office = Branch Office ; Agent = Paid Official.)

(1) Application and Enquiry.

1. The branch office shall be open every week-day at stated hours. The district committees shall meet there on specified nights.

2. As a rule all applications shall be made at the office, and particulars entered on a case paper. The agent shall forthwith send an account of the case to the helper for the district in which the applicant resides, and the helper shall visit within twenty-four hours, and forward a report without delay to the office, where the case shall be prepared for the committee.

3. But when a helper meets with a case of need in his own district he shall enter all particulars in his note book, and forward them to the office at once to be entered on a case paper and prepared for the committee.

4. If the helper considers that the case requires relief before the next meeting of committee, he shall in the first instance report all particulars at the office and ascertain whether, or not, it has been previously on the books. He shall then bring the case to the notice of the chairman, or the hon. secretary in his absence, who shall visit and make a searching investigation into all the circumstances. The chairman and helper may then give assistance pending the meeting of the committee, if they are fully satisfied of the worthiness of the applicant and the urgency of the need ; but the greatest care must be taken by the chairman to prevent the giving of assistance from degenerating into casual almsgiving and the encouragement of impostors. All help so given must be reported to the committee at its next meeting to be confirmed by it.

5. The agent shall make enquiries on the proper forms of employers and references, and medical men in cases of sickness, and enter the answers on the case papers.

6. The helper who has reported on the case will not necessarily continue to deal with it, but it may be handed over to any other helper whom the chairman may select at his discretion, and who must not be a relative of the applicant, nor must he have any interest in the case beyond the philanthropic interest common to all helpers. Officers and members of the committee shall not be asked to supply goods to the applicants.

7. The name of the agent and the address of the office shall be supplied to all ministers of religion and municipal visitors working in the area covered by the branch.

(2) Assistance.

1. The helper to whom the case is entrusted by the chairman must visit at least once a week and administer the relief voted by the committee. He must note any change in the circumstances and must report any indications of intemperance, waste, mendicancy, dirt or idleness ; and he shall not give all the relief voted, if, on his second visit, the case is found to be manifestly unsatisfactory. The administration of relief is the smaller part of the work entrusted to a helper. As a representative of the City Aid Society, the helper should use the authority he represents, and should regard his own personal influence as of more importance than the dispensation of alms. The office requires a large measure of faithfulness to duty along with kindheartedness and a sense of justice which will not shrink from straightforward speaking. He should not allow himself to be discouraged on account of abuses on the part of persons seeking help, but on the contrary should administer his charge with neighbourly love, a sense of citizenship, and with patience and prudence.

2. The district chairman shall specially visit from time to time any doubtful case, and also every case of long duration at least once a quarter.

3. Mendicancy must be discouraged by the withdrawal of the society's help.

4. In considering an application the essential points to be noticed are :—Whether there is any chance of the family becoming self-supporting or whether the case is one of chronic poverty ; if the applicant has made any effort to provide for emergencies ; how long a case of illness is likely to last and what are the chances of complete recovery. In fact, the committee should look ahead as far as possible on each case and not only relieve present necessity.

5. All cases are to be decided by the vote of the committee, and the amount and sort of relief specified and entered on the case paper by the chairman, with date and initials.

Handed in by Sir Hallelwell Rogers, Birmingham. (Q. 45294 (3).)

6. Single men, unless living with and supporting aged parents or in the case of illness, shall be deemed ineligible.

7. Books of relief orders with duplicates shall be kept at the office and signed by the acting chairman and secretary for all cases of relief.

8. Relief orders may be used to obtain provisions, etc., from any tradesmen on a list approved by the committee. All accounts must be sent in to the hon. secretary monthly to be checked by him for payment by the branch treasurer.

9. The hon. district secretary shall lay all cases before the committee, shall file the case papers after they have been used by the committee and shall make out the necessary orders for food, etc., that the committee may have voted. He shall also assist the chairman in visiting special cases of long standing.

10. As a general rule it is better that assistance should be given in the form of orders for food and fuel, but when under very exceptional circumstances it seems desirable to pay rent in order to prevent the applicant from falling further into debt, this shall not be done without the consent of the district committee at an ordinary, or special, meeting.

APPENDIX No. XXII. (A).

Handed in by Mr. T. O. Williams, Birmingham. (Q. 45607.)

OBSERVATIONS UPON THE NEED OF DECREASE IN WORKHOUSE BOOK-KEEPING AND SCHEME THEREFOR ARISING OUT OF QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS, Nos. 45603 to 45607 INCLUSIVE, BY T. O. WILLIAMS, CHARTERED ACCOUNTANT, CHAIRMAN OF THE ASTON BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

In May, 1901, the President of the Local Government Board (Mr. Walter H. Long) appointed a Committee to inquire and report upon :—

(a) Any difficulties in the keeping of workhouse accounts.

(b) Any modifications in the Regulations as to the form of account which appeared desirable with a view to the necessary records being made as simple as practicable.

In June, 1902, a report was published, and many practical and useful suggestions were made, but it would appear that no orders have resulted therefrom, and those of 1867 and the new forms prescribed by the Dietaries Order of 1900 are still in force.

The last three paragraphs of the notes upon the History of Workhouse Accounts (p. vi.) state :—

(a) That the witnesses examined were absolutely unanimous in their expressions of opinion that the forms of account were needlessly elaborate and entailed much useless labour upon workhouse masters, and, where not assisted by paid clerks, the masters were often unable to pay sufficient attention to their other duties.

(b) The addition of the new forms of dietaries and accounts (Order 1900) had thrown additional work on the masters, but had been followed by much uncertainty as to the way in which such accounts ought to be kept. Further, that such accounts kept in the way they usually are, are not an adequate check on the consumption of stores.

(c) That although it was not possible to reduce the number of books to any considerable extent, still, under the system suggested by the Committee, the number of entries would be largely decreased, and more effective for controlling expenditure.

I have carefully perused the report of the Departmental Committee and considered the suggested alterations in the forms of the workhouse books, and, generally speaking, I consider them to be a great improvement upon those now in existence.

It would be an invidious task on my part to attempt a detailed criticism of the Departmental Committee's recommendations, and the few observations which I presume to make should be regarded in the spirit of practical suggestions, and to bring before the Royal Commission the great importance of the Departmental Report, which has so far been a dead letter.

The books of account should in every respect record facts both as to value and quantity.

The suggested new Form (12) of Day-Book, in Appendix No. 14, is admirable in form, and gives all the essential detail necessary, but the clerks should, in my judgment, be required to keep a ledger in which should be recorded the transaction with every contractor or tradesman, and they should supply a monthly or quarterly statement of account for payment by the Finance Committee, so that they may readily compare such account with previous payments and keep an eye on the increases (if any) of any particular person's account. There is also the advantage in having a statement of account direct from the contractor or tradesman instead of the summary which is usually supplied by the clerk for payment.

Form No. 15 suggests the Necessities Account being kept in weeks. This is an improvement on the present system. I should, however, prefer to see a sub-division of this form, so that such items as Bath bricks, blacking, matches, and sundries of this kind are reduced to a quarterly accounting, and a percentage agreed upon for division as between paupers and officers. Comparison of this expenditure, quarter by quarter, would check any undue waste or extravagance.

Form No. 10 for half-yearly return of expenditure is a good suggestion, but its usefulness is much lessened by the note, that the cost of provisions, etc., expended during the period must exclude the value of any stock remaining in stores at the end of the half-year.

If the actual cost of maintenance is to be ascertained, the value of stock at the commencement of the period and at the end must be brought into account or shown by way of memoranda.

It may be here observed that the official half-years should be altered so as to comprise twenty-six weeks in each half-year, by taking the usual quarter-days, March 25th and September 29th.

Finally, I beg to draw special attention to the conclusion XIX., of the Departmental Committee, and urge the Royal Commission to recommend the suggestions contained in the Report, subject to the modifications before-mentioned.

Handed in by Mr. A. Kemp, Leicester. (Q. 46906.)

Eleven men were sent at various times between October 16th, 1905, and January, 1906, and of these only four retained their work. I advanced the money for their fares, which was to be repaid 1s. per week. Thirty-two shillings of this was never repaid, in addition to which three of them left their lodgings owing 16s. 6d. between them, to the people with whom they had lodged.

The rate of pay was to be 6d. per hour, or 28s. per week of fifty-six hours.

2. In April and May, 1906, work was provided by the Water Committee of the Leicester Corporation for twenty men who were on the labour test (at 6d. per hour) laying a new main some miles out of the town. The men were taken out by brake each morning and brought back each evening. These were all picked men, many of them general labourers. Two of them refused the work immediately and six were paid off because they were not satisfactory.

At the same time seventeen men were taken on from those who had registered their names at the labour bureau without applying to the guardians, and only two of them proved unsatisfactory.

3. On October 9th, 1905, some twelve unemployed were sent by the Distress Committee to the contractor who was engaged laying a main from Loughborough in connection with the Derwent Water Works. One was insolent on his arrival and was at once discharged, ten of the others only worked for one day, being dissatisfied with the pay, and one remained at work for three weeks. Most of the men were of the "general labourer" class. The rate of pay as promised by the contractor was 5d. per hour. The men through some mistake thought they would get 4½d. only, and so refused the work without making proper enquiries. The one who remained three weeks was paid at the rate of 5d. per hour.

LEICESTER CORPORATION.

PROVISION OF WORK FOR UNEMPLOYED.

On January 3rd, 1905, the Unemployed Committee of the Town Council of Leicester submitted a Report to the town council in which they suggested that, with a view to providing further work for the unemployed, it was desirable to arrange for the spade cultivation of certain land, of about 19½ acres, on the Gilroes Estate, and that, if the operations were successful, certain other land of about 16½ acres in extent should be used for the same purpose. The town council adopted the suggestion and appointed a special committee to supervise the carrying out of the work.

The special committee consulted an expert as to the best method of dealing with the land and the means whereby the largest possible number of men could be engaged in the work.

The expert reported that he did not consider the land suitable for a market garden, and that the employment of women and children would lessen the cost of cultivation. He also submitted estimates of the probable expenses and income for each of three years. These estimates are as follows :—

ROYAL VICTORIA DISPENSARY, NORTHAMPTON.

RULES.

Object.

1. The object of this institution is to enable the working classes to insure for themselves and their families efficient medical advice and medicine during illness, by their own small periodical payments, with the assistance of contributions from the more opulent.

Members.

2. The funds of the institution shall be derived from two sources: the subscriptions and donations of the honorary members and the payments of the free members. All donors of £5 and upwards, at one time, shall be governors for life, and annual subscribers of 10s. shall be governors during the continuance of their subscription. The subscriptions of honorary members shall be due January 1st in each year.

Funds.

3. The funds shall be kept in two distinct accounts, to be called the "Free Members' Fund" and the "Honorary Fund." The honorary fund, derived from the subscriptions and donations of the honorary members, shall bear a share of the general expenses of the institution. The free members' fund, consisting of the ordinary subscriptions of free members, shall defray the cost of drugs and all ordinary medical appliances, and such other expenses of management as shall from time to time be decided by the Committee, with the consent in writing of the majority of the medical officers; and the remainder of this fund shall be divided at the end of each year by the committee among the medical officers in ordinary according to the number of families and paying members who may enter under them respectively each year. The payments by free members for fine and cards will be carried to the free members' fund. The midwifery fee shall be paid to the respective medical officers who shall have attended the cases.

Management.—Annual and Special General Meetings.

4. The government of the institution, the control of all property belonging to it, the power of making and repealing laws, and of electing and removing medical officers is vested in a president, vice-president, and governors, who will meet annually, on or about the third Friday in February, to receive from the committee a report of the accounts and proceedings of the institution during the year, and to elect the president, vice-presidents, treasurer, auditors, honorary secretary, and the committee for the year ensuing. Twelve governors or the committee shall have the power of calling, at any time, through the honorary secretary, a special general meeting of the governors, five of whom shall be a quorum. The secretary will give two clear days' notice of every general meeting, by sending circular to each governor, stating the particular business to be transacted.

Voting.

5. All questions at the general meeting shall be determined by ballot, if required by three governors present, otherwise by show of hands. A donor shall have a vote for every donation of £5, and an annual subscriber for each 10s. subscribed. No person shall be entitled to vote on any occasion who has not been a governor for three months previously, or whose subscription is in arrear. Ladies may vote by proxy at elections, provided such proxy be given in writing, and presented by a governor. The chairman shall have a vote and casting vote. That any public company being donors or subscribers to the Institution shall have the same privileges in voting as ordinary donors or subscribers, and that their vote be recorded by their chairman for the time being. That any private firm being donors or subscribers shall have the same privileges, their vote being recorded by any member of the firm.

Committee.

6. The committee shall consist of eighteen governors, and the president, vice-presidents, treasurer, two auditors, honorary secretary, and medical officers shall be ex officio members of the committee. The committee shall be entrusted with the general management of the institution and the superintendence and arrangement of its financial affairs, and the appointment and removal of subordinate officials. They shall keep accurate minutes of their transactions and of all their receipts and payments, which, with a yearly report of their proceedings, and of the accounts of the institution, shall be laid before the governors at the annual meeting. All the acts of the committee shall be subject to the control and direction of the governors at any general meeting. The committee shall meet once in every week.

Trustees.

7. The property of the institution shall be vested in five trustees, to be appointed at a general meeting. The trustees from time to time appointed shall engage to resign their trust, and transfer the property to other trustees, to be appointed in their stead, upon receiving a written requisition to do so, signed by the honorary secretary, in pursuance of a resolution passed at a general meeting; and when the trustees shall be reduced to two in number by death, resignation, or otherwise, other governors shall be appointed in the stead of those who shall have died, resigned, refused, or become incapable to act.

accounts accurately, and generally superintend the office work. He shall furnish the honorary secretary weekly with a summary of the amounts received and collected, and shall also make such returns as to the progress of the institution as shall be required by the honorary secretary or the committee. He shall make out the balance sheet annually, and attend the audit thereof. He shall provide such security as the committee shall from time to time think necessary or desirable.

Assistant Collector.

15. The assistant collector shall be appointed, suspended, or removed by the committee; but no such appointment or removal shall take place except at a special meeting to be called for the purpose. He shall perform such duties as may be required of him by the committee or collector.

16. The following shall be the rules for free members:—

(1) The free members shall consist of working persons and servants, their wives and children, not receiving parish relief, and being unable to pay for medical advice in the usual manner.

(2) Any person wishing to become a free member shall leave particulars as to his or her name, age, residence, and occupation, at the dispensary and also the names and ages of all members of the family who desire to be admitted, and at the same time deposit 2d. for the card and also one month's subscription—this money will be returned if the depositor be not admitted a member.

(3) Every free member, above fourteen years of age, shall pay 1½d., and under that age 1d. a week; but 3d. a week will be considered sufficient for a man, his wife, and all his children under fourteen years of age. Servants who may be judged eligible by the committee shall pay 5s. a year, and in not less than half-yearly payments.

(4) The payments of the free members shall be paid in advance. No one in arrear will be entitled to the benefits of the institution; and each family or member shall pay a fine of 1d. for the arrear of every week.

(5) No one actually labouring under sickness can be admitted a free member, unless he pay an entrance fee of 5s., in addition to the usual weekly subscription, and all his family enter at the same time. No one suffering from chronic disease shall be eligible for membership.

(6) If any person should desire to be re-admitted there being at the time no sickness in the family, he shall pay the monthly subscription and 2d. for the card, and also a re-admission fee of 2s. If any person or member of a family desiring re-admission be sick, then a sick fee of 7s. 6d., with the re-admission fee of 2s., must be deposited with the ordinary monthly subscription, and the payment for the card at the time of application; the sums deposited in accordance with this rule will be dealt with at the discretion of the committee, as provided by Rule 7.

(7) The committee shall have power to require any persons seeking to be re-admitted to pay up the whole of the arrears and fines due from them, or such part thereof as the committee may think fit. If the committee reject the application, they may retain the whole or such part of the sums deposited as they consider fair. The committee shall also have power under special circumstances to remit or to return the whole or any part of the arrears, fines, or re-admission fees, whether the application be accepted or rejected. The fines and re-admission fees to be carried to the credit of the free members fund.

(8) If any free member shall, through improved circumstances or otherwise, be in the opinion of the committee no longer eligible to the benefits of the institution, his or her name shall be erased from the books.

(9) Every free member shall have the choice of which ever medical officer he may prefer; but he shall not change his medical attendant during his illness without the sanction of the committee.

(10) Those patients who are able must attend at the dispensary at half-past nine o'clock in the morning, bringing their admission tickets. Those who are too ill to attend at the dispensary must send their tickets before nine o'clock in the morning, to the medical officer by whom they wish to be attended, and he will visit them at their own homes. In case of accident or sudden illness, they can have the attendance of any of the medical officers, on sending their admission ticket to his residence. No free member will be entitled to be visited by any medical officer at his own residence unless it be within the limit of the parliamentary borough or within such other limit as the committee may from time to time by special resolution direct. Any such resolution to be subject to the proviso set out in Rules 18 and 19.

(11) Any married woman, being a free member, and having together with her husband subscribed 3d. weekly for at least six months before the period of her application, may have during her confinement the attendance of any one of the medical officers, or any of the midwives attached to this institution, as she may prefer. On making the application she must give three months' notice at the dispensary, and must then deposit 10s. if she desire to be attended by one of the medical officers, or 5s. if she desires the service of a midwife; the fee to be placed to the credit of the medical officer or the midwife who may attend the case. Provided that in the case of members who were admitted or re-admitted before 1879 the committee have power to reduce the amount to be deposited if they should think fit.

(12) The midwives, previously to their appointment, must satisfy the medical officers as to their being able to discharge their duties in a thoroughly efficient manner. They are most strictly cautioned that in every case of protracted labour, or where any difficulty or danger seems likely to occur; or whenever a wish to that effect is expressed by the patient, they must immediately send for one of the medical officers. No further fee will be payable by the patient for the attendance of the medical officer in such case.

(13) Patients must find their own bottles.

(14) The children of free members may be vaccinated on any morning, at such hours as may be appointed for the purpose.

(15) The medical officers will attend patients as under at the residence of the medical officers:—

NORTHAMPTON ARTISANS AND LABOURERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

RULES.

In the event of any change in the situation of the registered office, notice of such change shall be sent, within fourteen days thereafter, to the Registrar, in manner and form provided by the Treasury Regulations in that behalf.—Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, Section 24.

Objects of Society.

2. The objects of this society shall be to hire land and re-let the same in small allotments, for spade culture, to artisans and labourers, being members of this society, and resident within one mile of the Parliamentary Borough of Northampton; and to promote thrift, by taking small deposits.

Classes of Members and Conditions of Membership.

3. The society shall consist of two classes of members, viz.:—A person subscribing not less than 5s. annually, or making a donation of not less than two guineas, shall be an honorary member; and every other member shall subscribe 1d. per week to the Provident Fund.

Persons entitled to Admission.

4. No person shall be entitled to be admitted other than as an honorary member of this society unless he or she be a labourer or artisan, domestic servant, or person of that class resident at the time of such admission within one mile of the Parliamentary Borough of Northampton, and who may from time to time be accepted by the committee. Provided that all persons who have been admitted or have been considered members prior to the registry of this amendment of rules shall be deemed to have been properly admitted; and no person shall lose any of the privileges of membership, in consequence of removing out of the borough, or in consequence of ceasing to be of those classes for whose benefit the society has been instituted.

Expulsion of Members.

5. If any member of this society, whether holding land or not, shall wantonly injure or take away any part of the trees or the crops of any other tenant, or injure any of the fences on the land; or if he be convicted by any court of competent jurisdiction, of theft, or of any felony, or of poaching; or if he work upon any allotment on the Lord's Day, or be an habitual drunkard; then and in any such case the committee may cause an entry to be made in the minute book of the fact, and such persons shall be expelled from the society; and if he holds land, his tenancy is forthwith to cease; and the trustees shall be at liberty to re-enter on his land; and a copy of such entry, signed by the secretary, shall be conclusive evidence of the facts stated therein.

Any money due from him to the society for rent, to be deducted from any sums so payable to him. 19. The trustees shall, by their signatures, together with the counter-signature of the secretary, vacate mortgages without re-conveyance or re-surrender, as provided by the 1st Sub-section of the 53rd Section of the Friendly Societies' Act, 1896.

20. The trustee or trustees for the time being shall, at all times when required by the committee so to do, give to the committee full information as to the manner in which the funds of the society are invested, and shall, whenever required by the committee or by an annual or special meeting so to do, call in any moneys so invested, and do all such acts as may be necessary to obtain repayment of any moneys so invested.

Accounts.

21. The committee of management shall cause the accounts of the society to be regularly entered in proper books, and separate and distinct accounts shall be kept of every branch of the society's operations, and of every different fund.

Audit.

22. The committee of management shall once at least in every year submit the accounts, together with a general statement of the same, and all necessary vouchers up to the 31st December then last, for audit, either to one of the public auditors appointed under the Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, Sub-section 1, Section 26, or to two or more persons appointed as auditors by the members at the meeting next before each yearly meeting of the society, and shall lay before every such meeting a balance sheet (which either may or may not be identical with the annual return, but must not be in contradiction to the same), showing the receipts and expenditure, funds, and effects of the society, together with a statement of the affairs of the society since the last ordinary meeting, and of their then condition. Such auditors shall have access to all the books and accounts of the society, and shall examine every balance sheet and annual return of the receipts and expenditure, funds, and effects of the society, and shall verify the same with the accounts and vouchers relating thereto, and shall either sign the same as found by them to be correct, duly vouched, and in accordance with law, or shall specially report to the meeting of the society before which the same is laid in what respects they find it incorrect, unvouched, or not in accordance with law—Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, Section 26.

Annual Return to Registrar of Friendly Societies.

23. Every year, but not later than May 31st, the secretary shall send to the registrar the annual return, in the form prescribed by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, required by the Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, of the receipts and expenditure, funds and effects of the society, and of the number of members of the same, up to December 31st then last inclusively, as audited and laid before a general meeting, showing separately the expenditure in respect of the several objects of the society, together with a copy of the auditors' report, if any. Such return shall state whether the audit has been conducted by a public auditor appointed under the Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, and by whom; and if such audit has been conducted by any persons other than a public auditor, shall state the name, address, and calling or profession of each of such persons, and the manner in which and the authority under which they were respectively appointed.—Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, Section 27.

Copy of last Annual Balance-Sheet with Auditors' Report to be hung up in Society's Office.

24. It shall be the duty of the committee of management to keep a copy of the last annual balance sheet of the society for the time being, together with the report of the auditors, if any, always hung up in a conspicuous place at the registered office of the society.—Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, Section 29.

Copies of Annual Returns to be supplied gratuitously to Members upon Application.

25. It shall be the duty of the committee of management to provide the secretary with a sufficient number of copies of the annual return, or of some balance sheet or other document duly audited, containing the same particulars as in the annual return as to the receipts and expenditure, funds, and effects of the society, for supplying gratuitously every member or person interested in the funds of the society, on his application, with a copy of the last annual return of the society, or of such balance sheet or other document as aforesaid, for the time being; and it shall be the duty of the secretary to supply such gratuitous copies on application accordingly.—Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, Section 39.

Inspection of the Society's Books by Members.

26. Any member of the society, or person having an interest in the funds of the society, may inspect the books at all reasonable hours at the registered office of the society except that the member shall not, unless he is an officer of the society or is specially authorised by a resolution of the society to do so, have the right to inspect the loan account of any other member without the written consent of that member.—Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, Section 40.

Payment of Moneys belonging to Deceased Members.

27. Upon the death of any member, whether before or after attaining the age of sixty, the moneys standing to his credit in the society will be paid to his nominee or representatives, in accordance with Section 56.—Sub-sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896.

Payments under Nomination.

28. A member not being under the age of sixteen years may, by writing under his hand delivered at or sent to the registered office of the society, or made in a book kept at that office for the purpose, nominate a person to whom any sum of money payable by the society on the death of that member not exceeding £100 shall be paid at his decease.—Friendly Societies Act, 1896, Sections 56, 57, 58, 59 and 60.

Settlement of Disputes.

29. In case of any dispute between the society or an officer thereof and any member or past member or person claiming through any such member or under the rules, such dispute shall be settled by three arbitrators, who are neither directly or indirectly interested in the funds of the society, and who may be agreed upon between the society and the other party in dispute. Any honorary member may act as arbitrator. If the parties are unable to agree upon the choice of arbitrators, or if the person making any claim against the society prefers it, then every such dispute shall be referred to His Majesty's justices of the peace for the county borough of Northampton in petty sessions assembled.

Dissolution of Society.

30. This society may be dissolved with the consent, in writing, of three-fourths of the members, testified by their signatures to an instrument of dissolution, in the form prescribed by the Treasury Regulations.—Friendly Societies' Act, 1896, Section 78, Sub-section (b).

Provident Fund.

31. The provident fund of the society shall be conducted in accordance with the following provisions:—

(a).—The sum of 1d. per week, which every member is bound under the third rule to pay, shall be appropriated to the formation of a provident fund for the benefit of such member, but he shall not withdraw the same until after he has attained the age of 16y, when he shall have the option either of withdrawing the whole or part of the amount due to him, or continuing his contributions until he attains the age of sixty, up to which time he will be subject to Section C., Rule 32, as to interest, which shall accumulate on the balance from time to time standing to the credit of such member in this fund, at such rate and manner as the committee may from time to time direct, having regard to the average rate of interest which may be derived from the investments of the society.

(b).—Every member on satisfying the committee that he has attained the age of fifty years, but at no prior time, shall be entitled to draw all monies due to him from this fund, either altogether or by instalments, except such sums as the committee deem necessary to retain as security for rent of his allotment; but so long as any portion of the money remains to his credit, he is to be entitled, until he attains the age of sixty years, to the same rate of interest on the balance as may be allowed to other members having money in this fund.

(c).—If any member neglect to pay his subscription of 1d. to this fund for fifteen weeks, he shall cease to be entitled to hold land, to receive interest, or to take any advantage from the society until all arrears be paid up.

(d).—Notwithstanding the Sub-sections (a) and (b) of this rule, if any member shall prove to the committee that he or she has emigrated or left or is about to emigrate or leave the United Kingdom, then, and in any such case, the committee, if they in their discretion shall think fit, may allow such member to withdraw the whole or any part of the monies standing to his or her credit in the Provident Fund, upon such conditions and in such manner as the committee may deem fit. The decision of the committee in any such matter not to be reviewed or questioned by the general body of members.

Investment Fund.

32. The investment fund shall be conducted according to the following rules, viz.:—

(a).—Every member may, at his option, pay any sum exceeding 1d. per week; but all such additional payments shall be carried to the credit of the person paying the same to a separate fund, called the investment fund. Moneys paid to this fund may be withdrawn in whole or in part, on giving to the secretary one month's notice to withdraw such sums, the committee nevertheless having power to accept a shorter notice. Interest allowed upon deposits in the investment fund to be calculated from the first day of the month immediately following the month in which the deposit is made, and calculated up to the last day of the month immediately preceding the month in which such deposit is withdrawn, at such rate, not exceeding £4 per cent., as the committee may from time to time direct.

(b).—If any member after attaining the age of sixty shall not withdraw the money standing to his or her credit under Sub-section (a) of Rule 32, then the amount of the balance due to him or her on the provident fund shall, as soon as the committee are satisfied that the member has attained sixty, be transferred from the provident fund to the investment fund, and bear interest at the rate fixed from time to time as being payable on that fund as provided by Section (a) of this rule.

Allotment Fund.

33. The allotment fund of the society shall be conducted according to the following rules, viz.:—

(a).—All land held from time to time by the society shall be taken by the trustees as tenants on behalf of the society. The land to be let to the members at such a rate as shall cover the original rent, and all other expenses; and if any surplus arise, the same be carried to the credit of the management fund.

(b).—The land from time to time in the possession of the society shall be let by the trustees to the members; and all members of the society occupying land shall hold the same as tenants to the trustees, but subject nevertheless to such rents, terms and conditions as the committee may from time to time direct and impose; provided nevertheless that the rules for letting land be approved at an annual or special meeting.

(c).—Every tenant, prior to entering upon his allotment, shall be required to sign a memorandum, admitting that he holds the same as tenant; but subject to such regulations and bye-laws, not inconsistent with these rules, as the committee may may from time to time direct.

(d).—In case a tenancy from any cause be determined, the committee have power to award such compensation, if any, for labour, seed, planting, or crops, as they shall think proper.

his rent according to the preceding rule, or by himself, or his family, wantonly injure the fences, the trees, or the crop of any of the other tenants; or if he do not cultivate and manure his allotment to the satisfaction of the committee; or if he work on his allotment on the Lord's Day; or be convicted of theft, or of any felony, or of poaching; or be an habitual drunkard, a minute thereof to be entered on the committee book, and his tenancy to cease from the time of such entry; and the trustees to be at liberty to enter upon and re-let his allotment; and he shall be liable to be proceeded against as a wilful trespasser if he enter upon his allotment after a notice from the secretary; and a copy of such minute, signed by the secretary, shall be conclusive evidence of the facts stated therein.

APPENDIX No. XXVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY REV. J. W. BAKER, CHAIRMAN OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS OF WEST DERBY UNION, LIVERPOOL.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

1. This being one of the largest unions in the kingdom, the experience is comprehensive and varied.

2. In my judgment, combinations will be an advantage both as regards economy and efficiency. One set of cottage homes could be arranged for, say, the whole of Liverpool. The question of dealing with tramps in a given area would be more uniform if dealt with by one authority.

3. By an interchange of inmates in particular cases such as those afflicted with tuberculosis, epilepsy, and imbecility, etc., power should be given to unions for such purposes, and so prevent each union making separate accommodation.

4. This system seems to work well, and should be encouraged, but a most useful addition could be made in the establishment of homes for the children when they are ready to leave, such as in the case of girls where they could be trained for domestic service, and in the case of boys who have partly learned a trade, but are not quite able to support themselves.

5. These homes would prevent many young persons from drifting back again into their old associations and give them a fair start in life. The cost of up-keep in these homes, especially in the case of boys, would be small. The initial expenditure would be the chief item, whilst the possibilities would be enormous.

6. With regard to the cottage homes system, the idea of making provision for the teaching of useful trades might receive more attention. The limit of working hours should be left to the discretion of the guardians both as regards boys and girls. A more liberal allowance might be made from the common funds for boys, and more liberty might be given in the case of girls, so that their labour might be utilised.

7. In the case of girls who go to service a difficulty is often experienced when they are on holiday or are changing their places. Where are they to go? In the case of boys, the difficulty in a large city is that whilst we may get employment for them, where are they to live? It is not always desirable that they should live with those who employ them, and there are few employers who can find suitable accommodation, hence it is that so many boys drift either into the Army or Navy.

8. Homes should be established which could be worked cheaply and be a great help. We are trying the experiment of a girls' home to train them for domestic service, from which we have great hopes.

9. This requires very careful treatment. If persons are worthy of assistance without sending them into the "House" then the relief should be adequate. The practice of some unions of doling out a few pence or shillings to keep body and soul together is in many cases almost useless, as the recipients can never rise above their present helpless condition. It should be made clear that the "Poor Law" is for the help of the deserving poor as well as for those who in many cases have brought poverty upon themselves. In the extension of this principle the question of classification in the "House" might receive some attention, so that all classes and conditions of men should not be compelled to dwell together. We do not suggest that the way to obtain relief, either indoor or outdoor, should be made too easy, but we would plead for exceptional treatment for those who have led decent and respectable lives and who through no fault of their own find it necessary to come upon the rates, and in these cases the relief granted should be sufficient to meet reasonable demands.

10. The Poor Law should be administered in the interests of the decent poor as well as for those who are described as the destitute.

11. We are not in favour of the large unions being absorbed, as we think they would become too unwieldy, of larger but we do think that they might have more power to join mutually together for some of the common purposes.

APPENDIX No. XXVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. WM. BARKER BALE, MEDICAL OFFICER STOCKPORT UNION (No. 1 DISTRICT), STOCKPORT WORKHOUSE, STOCKPORT UNION HOSPITAL, STOCKPORT UNION COTTAGE HOMES, AND PUBLIC VACCINATOR OF No. 1 DISTRICT, STOCKPORT UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

STOCKPORT UNION.

No. 1 DISTRICT.

Population.—55,293.

Type.—Large working class population ; several lodging houses.

I will divide medical relief into two classes :—

1. Midwifery.
2. Ordinary sickness.

1. MIDWIFERY.

1. In my opinion, when a midwifery order is given by the relieving officer, this ought to be delivered to the district medical officer, who should give the patient a card to take to the midwife of his selection to attend the case and whose duty it should be to inform him when the woman is delivered, and of course if necessary, to send for him during the progress of the case.

2. The district medical officer to visit the patient as soon as convenient after delivery and during puerperium.

3. The district medical officer to pay midwife's fee and to receive from guardians a nominal fee of 15s. for responsibility of the case and to cover midwife's fee.

4. My reason for above is that with existing fees (in my case 10s. for normal confinement) it is unreasonable to expect me to attend in person probably with filthiest surroundings, and no conveniences when a midwife can perform the duties under my supervision and responsible to me for the safe conduct of the case.

5. Also that the working class as a rule have only a midwife in normal cases to deliver them, then why should a pauper expect to have a medical man in attendance ? In addition, these women much prefer a midwife, who also attends afterwards and performs the usual duties for the baby, etc.

6. I would only grant an outside midwifery order for unmarried women in exceptional cases, as I find that when at home they are generally confined under the most distressing circumstances, but order them to hospital, especially when there exists, as in this union, a modern maternity block isolated from workhouse and general hospital, where the patient is not likely to be contaminated by pauperism."

2. ORDINARY SICKNESS.

7. In my practice I will divide these cases into :—

- (a) Old and infirm.
- (b) Habitual paupers due to :
 - (1) Improvidence and vicious habits.
 - (2) Hereditary taint.
 - (3) Small and irregular wage earning capacity.
 - (4) Those generally on verge of destitution.
- (c) Incidental or temporary paupers owing to continued sickness, or lack of work, of wage earner of family.
- (d) Medical relief only.

Class A.

8. In this class all I can hope for is alleviation of suffering by medicine, as they are generally so infirm that no cure can be expected.

9. There is some satisfaction to me to be able to do this, but there is no doubt I could help them a great deal more if they were able to get the nourishments, etc., necessary for their complaints, and if their surroundings were more healthy.

10. I consider their relief is totally inadequate when they are sick, and would suggest that when they become bedfast they ought to be compulsorily removed to hospital, unless they can be materially assisted at home, particularly in the case of old men or women who live alone in single tenements, as I often find them in their last days in a condition of abject squalor.

Class B.

11. This class contains most of the cases which ought to be curable, but under existing circumstances, such as insanitary surroundings, filthy social habits, abject poverty combined with totally inadequate out-relief, very little hope of success of medical treatment is left.

12. I believe that a large number of children are lost every year entirely on account of their sordid surroundings, the incapability of their parents to nurse them, and their inability to provide suitable nourishments, etc.

13. I consider that the only satisfactory manner of dealing with such cases is by removing them to hospital, even if under compulsion, which might be done by stopping their relief and the guardians having power to order the affected ones under certificate of district medical officer to hospital.

14. Even if nourishments are ordered by me, it is extremely likely that the patient will only get a small proportion of same unless the strictest supervision is maintained over them by the relieving officer, who in my district could not possibly have the time to exercise it.

Class C.

15. This class generally contains those suffering from some chronic disease, such as rheumatism, bronchitis, phthisis, etc., who have exhausted all their savings, or whose low wages have prohibited them from saving sufficient to maintain them in the hour of need.

16. This again is a class most discouraging to me, as in my experience they never receive relief sufficient to maintain the household, and provide the necessary extras required in case of sickness.

17. For this class, I should, provided that sanitary surroundings and social habits of patient were satisfactory, grant far more liberal outdoor relief under stricter supervision.

18. In the case of children of this class, I should strongly advise removal to hospital.

Class D.

19. This is the only class that gives me any real satisfaction to treat, as the patients generally live under fairly good sanitary conditions. Their social habits are good ; they are as a rule able to obtain necessities, and if I order them milk, etc., I have every confidence in getting it themselves.

20. I consider that under existing circumstances, it is most disheartening and discouraging for me to attempt to treat patients at their homes scientifically and conscientiously with any hope of success, particularly in the case of children and curable cases.

21. I would suggest more liberal out-relief in Classes A. and C., especially the latter, under the strictest supervision and frequent visitation by the relieving officer.

22. In Class B., unless they improved their social habits and surroundings, which is almost impossible, they should be compelled to be removed to hospital under certificate of district medical officer, particularly so in the case of children.

Dispensaries.

23. I consider that in large manufacturing districts like mine, a dispensary adjacent to the relief offices is very necessary, as all classes of dirty and infectious cases are sent on to my private house after seeing the relieving officer, when they could wait for me to attend them at the dispensary after obtaining their medical order. This would in many cases save them a long walk to the medical officer's surgery often when in a totally unfit condition.

24. I have had at my house patients suffering from almost every infectious disease there is, including several small-pox, to say nothing of filthy verminous people, and neglected, foul smelling ulcerated legs.

25. I am pleased to say the guardians are including such a dispensary in their new office block.

26. A district nurse may be of service occasionally, but I consider that in the large majority of my cases, the general surroundings are so sordid, and the patients so utterly devoid of the common necessities of life, such as bedding, towels, etc., that her efforts would be rendered hopeless, all of which, in my opinion, emphasises the fact that it is absolutely essential that these cases should be transferred to hospital, particularly when, as I am proud to say, there exists in this union, an up-to-date hospital replete with every modern appliance and convenience and an efficient nursing staff.

Lodging Houses.

27. All sick cases in lodging-houses and furnished tenements ought, in my opinion, to be removed to hospital under compulsion.

APPENDIX No. XXX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. JAMES BIRCH, MEMBER OF WEST DERBY BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

1. In response to your request, that I should furnish you with my views on the local aspects of Poor Law administration, I have to say that I have been a member of the West Derby Board of Guardians since 1880.

2. I am the elected representative of one of the rural parishes, and my general statement may be taken as representing the opinions of the other members of the rural portion of the union.

3. Since my election I have had the honour of being chairman of the board and a member of most committees, and I have been actively associated with the great progress and improvement that has taken place in this great union.

4. The actual relief required by persons belonging to the rural parishes is certainly very little, but it is felt that the connection with a large union possessing such admittedly fine and well-endowed institutions, and excellent arrangements for medical and other aid, is of great advantage to any cases requiring assistance which may arise.

5. This view is strengthened by the fact that our contributions to the expenses of the union are very little, if anything, in excess of what they would be if we were associated with a purely rural union not possessing the many advantages I have referred to.

6. Having been actively engaged on committees of the guardians appointed to deal with the question of the unemployed, and also being a member of the Liverpool Distress Committee since its formation, I may perhaps be allowed to confine my further statement to this phase of poverty which frequently leads to pauperism.

7. At certain seasons of the year the farmers of this district are in want of extra hands. Efforts have been made to obtain them locally, but, notwithstanding the fact that a great want of employment is reported, there is a great difficulty in obtaining and retaining the help required.

8. I myself have frequently offered to engage (at the current rate of wages for agricultural labourers) town men who state that they are out of employment and are anxious for work.

9. My offers have been refused, and the invariable excuse of the men is that they will not work for less wages than they have been accustomed to, and they plead the trades union rate.

10. If trades unionism, and not laziness on the part of the man, is to blame for this state of affairs, then unionism is the cause of a great deal of poverty in the town which is preventable.

11. It is surely better for these men to accept a healthful occupation, in this case not more than three or four miles from the city, even at less wages than they have been accustomed to, than help to swell the already overcrowded profession of the unemployed.

12. If, on your visit, I can give you any further particulars I shall be very pleased.

13. I can only say that on the general question of poor relief the principle is sound, and as administered in this district I believe it is carried on on safe lines.

APPENDIX No. XXXI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE HANDED IN BY MR. D. S. BLOOMFIELD, CLERK TO THE GUARDIANS OF THE CHORLTON UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

(1) The Combination of Unions under 42 & 43 Victoria, Chapter 54, Section 8.

1. That the combinations of the Unions of Chorlton, Manchester, Prestwich and Salford, for special purposes, was first advocated in 1893, and as between Manchester and Chorlton took effect in 1895, when the unions were combined for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a workhouse to be used as an asylum for the reception of imbecile paupers, and of persons who may be insane or suffering from epilepsy and who might be relieved in the workhouse of such unions, and for the purpose of erecting a central vagrant ward and test house. It was also advocated at that time that combined provision should be made for the establishment of cottage homes and schools for children. The unions did not agree to combine for the last named purpose.

2. From the experience gained as a consequence of the existing combination, limited though it is, I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that a great benefit has accrued to the ratepayers of the district, and also to the classes for whom special provision has been made.

3. I am a firm believer in the benefits which would result from the combination of unions for the establishment of :—

(1) Special homes for the treatment of backward and feeble-minded children.

(2) Provision for the better classification of workhouse inmates.

(3) For the establishment in central districts of working boys' homes and working girls' homes.

(4) General hospitals.

(5) Hospitals for consumptives.

(6) Training ships for boys.

(7) Laundries for the purpose of training girls.

(8) The provision of asylums for sane epileptics, imbeciles and lunatics, who would not in the ordinary course, find their way into the county asylums.

(9) The establishment of cottage homes and schools for children.

(10) Labour colonies for vagrants and able-bodied.

4. In speaking of general hospitals, it may be worthy of consideration if the time has not arrived when the union hospitals in populous districts should become State hospitals and be separated altogether from work-house administration.

5. The Chorlton Union Hospital which is only one of three union hospitals in Manchester, has more beds, probably twice as many, as all the voluntary hospitals in Manchester put together, and I am told, as a matter of fact, that the London Poor Law hospitals have more beds than the voluntary hospitals in the country combined.

6. The Local Government Board should have full power to combine any or all the unions of a county, or even of a larger area, for any one or more of such special purposes. It should not be left to the individual union to make application for combination, as I am afraid in such a case little could be done owing to very mistaken notions of economy which exist in the minds of the guardians of some unions not confined altogether to agricultural unions. Everybody who has had practical experience of boards of guardians knows that there are boards of guardians who are not disposed for any purpose whatever, no matter how beneficial such purposes may be, to incur the slightest expense for fear of an addition to the poor rate. There can be little doubt that the unions of the less populous districts are to-day severely handicapped in dealing with the proper classification of the poor committed to their charge. I strongly advocate combinations of unions for special purposes, and I suggest, with every respect, that the Local Government Board should be empowered to compel combination where they deem it desirable.

(2) The Abolition of the Law of Settlement and Removal.

7. At the North Western Poor Law Conference in September, 1895, a resolution was passed declaring that the time had arrived when, in the opinion of the Conference the law of Settlement and Removal ought to be repealed. I believe that this resolution received the unanimous support of the representatives present. And if provision could be made so as to provide from Imperial funds for the maintenance of lunatics brought from foreign parts to British ports and who have not a settlement in this country, I believe there would be on the part of the guardians of the country generally, an unanimous wish for its abolition. The maintenance of such lunatics should become a national charge. There is to-day no need for this law, which often is a cause of severe hardship and intense suffering to those who unfortunately come within its provisions. I would respectfully refer the members of the Commission to a paper on the "Abolition of the Law of Settlement and Removal" read at the Conference named.

8. The guardians of the Manchester, Chorlton, and Prestwich Unions decided in 1895, to ignore the Law of Settlement and Removal as between themselves, except in the cases of lunatics, and with beneficial results. They have not since seen any reason to change their minds.

(3.) Extensions of the Powers of Guardians.

9. As long as guardians are allowed to exist, they should possess greater powers than they do at present. They should have full power, on lines similar to those followed by the Jewish boards of guardians, to prevent, as far as possible, destitution. To-day guardians are practically compelled to wait until an applicant for relief is destitute before rendering assistance, and the assistance when rendered, only helps to perpetuate the destitution. They ought not to be restricted as they are by the Outdoor Relief Prohibitory Order and the Outdoor Relief Regulation Order.

10. In the course of upwards of 50 years, almost everything in the country, with the possible exception of the restriction placed upon guardians in dealing with the poor, has, to some extent, changed, and yet the guardians, restricted as they are by the Orders of 1844 and 1852, are expected to deal with the poor according to present day requirements. Though the guardians' powers should be extended, every experienced administrator agrees with the Commission of 1834 that "Outdoor relief should be almost indiscriminately hard to get and distasteful when got," and "nothing should be done which would weaken the obligation of the family to assist its aged members, as well as of the individual to provide, so far as may be in his power, for the needs of old age."

11. In times of exceptional distress, guardians have no legal right, for instance, to open soup kitchens, except the soup is given in the way of outdoor relief. They have no power to subscribe to local distress funds. They have no power to board out a child a yard outside their union area, unless there is a boarding-out committee in existence to take charge of such child, although they may have in their service, as the Chorlton Guardians have in theirs, a most competent lady inspector.

12. In their building operations, which are extensive, they are only allowed thirty years to repay their loans, although their neighbour, the education authority, is allowed fifty or sixty years.

(4.) The Curative Treatment of the Poor Law.

13. If it were at all possible to induce the working classes to take an interest in Poor Law administration, as is the case in Germany under the Elberfeld System, the work and responsibility of guardians would be considerably lessened, whilst the sympathetic help given to the distressed would have an encouraging effect in enabling them to again gain their independence.

14. To enable guardians to deal with the poor of the country in a humane and curative manner, it is first necessary that a codification and revision of the Poor Laws should take place.

15. In the early part of last year, the guardians of the Chorlton Union circularised the guardians of the other unions in the country in favour of such codification, and no less than 216 replies were received heartily approving of the proposal.

16. Mr. Sidney W. Clark, in a Paper read by him at the West Midland Conference on Friday, the 4th day of May, 1900, speaking on the Codification of the Poor Law, stated:—"I do not think I am overstepping the mark when I say that the Poor Law guardian of to-day is theoretically supposed to be acquainted with the provisions of something like 350 Acts of Parliament, about 5,000 decisions of the Court, and a large number of General Orders of the Poor Law Commissioners and the Local Government Board, which, have, so far as he is concerned, the force of law," and further quotes in his Paper from the History of English Poor Laws by Sir George Nicholls:—"When this is done" (referring to consolidation) "there will be little occasion for further changes in our English Poor Law which may then be readily consolidated into one clear and comprehensive code, easy of administration and intelligible to all."

APPENDIX No. XXXII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. WILLIAM BRAY, GOVERNOR LIVERPOOL PARISH WORKHOUSE.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

- Workhouse. 1. The workhouse is divided into two parts, viz. : Healthy and hospital.
- Staff. 2. The staff of the house consist of governor, matron, chaplain, Roman Catholic instructor, visiting and resident doctors, wardmasters and wardmistresses, storekeepers and clerks, superintendent nurse, assistant superintendents, night superintendent, nurses and probationers.
- Divisions (male). 3. The general division may be classified as follows :—
Male Healthy.—Men from sixteen to any age.
Male Epileptic.—Epileptic patients and imbeciles.
Male.—Cleansing, stores, dispensary, etc.
Female. Building.—Healthy women sixteen to sixty.
Old Infirm.—Old women not sick.
Basement.—Special women.
Class.—Pregnant women and mothers with babies.
Nursery.—Babies without mothers to two years or until able to make themselves understood.
- Hospital. Male. Surgical, medical, infirm and boys wards.
Women.—Surgical, medical, infirm, children, cleansing, maternity, and isolation wards, operation rooms.
- Occupation. 4. The men are employed as far as possible at their own trades, stables, laundry, kitchen, mattress making, mat making (limited) and general work about the house, painting, etc.
Women.—Laundry, cleaning hospital and house, sewing, etc.
- Classification 5. At the present time we are not able to classify in the strict sense of the word, owing to want of room.
 6. Up to two years back the majority of the able-bodied men and women were sent to the Belmont Road Testhouse, belonging to the West Derby Union. The arrangement ended March, 1905; since then these inmates have been admitted to Brownlow Hill. We have felt no inconvenience with the men, so far as discipline is concerned, but have had more trouble with the women. It is hoped that when the Kirkdale Home is ready to receive its full complement of inmates we shall be able to classify to a better advantage.
 7. A suggestion has been made as to whether it would not be better for one board to take able-bodied and another old people, etc. This might be done with advantage in large centres; another suggestion is to have the separate houses under joint committees; but I do not think this is a good plan, as it gives rise to trouble about expenses, etc. In small unions either of the above would be out of the question, on account of the cost of moving inmates from one place to another when the houses are a long distance from each other, as, for instance, in agricultural counties, such as Lincolnshire, Norfolk, and Suffolk.
- Effect on Mental Condition. 8. I have not found any cases where long or frequent periods of residence has caused mental trouble; they may get into a careless way of looking after themselves outside by such residence.
- Ins and Outs 9. There is a large number of this class; frequently the admissions during the week will amount up to 400 or 500 and the discharged about the same.
 10. This in a large workhouse is unavoidable; the people leave in the morning (and some return the same night) with the idea of getting work—some do, and I am afraid some do not try—but it is simply for a break in their life.
 11. The greatest trouble is with women who have children; where the child is sick we do our best to persuade them to stop until the child is better.
- Discipline. 12. We have not much trouble in this way, probably from the fact that all serious cases are sent before the magistrate; first offenders generally promise better behaviour, and I must say in the majority of cases do behave better; second offenders are dealt with by the magistrate.
 The women are the worst to deal with.
13. This is managed by a committee of ladies and is carried on in the hospital, and I think does good; some of those employed in the house have been able to continue it outside.
14. We have seven branch establishments managed from Brownlow Hill.
15. Kirkdale Home.—This will be capable of holding 1,200 people when completed; old people are sent there. The washing is done at Brownlow Hill. Food sent out and cooked on the spot. Clothing made for them, mending done there.
16. North Sailors' Home.—Two hundred and ninety old men only are sent. Washing, etc., done at Brownlow Hill. Food cooked on the spot.
17. As soon as Kirkdale is ready it is proposed to close this place, which is rented by the Select Vestry.
- Mitford Home.*—This belongs to the Select Vestry, but is not contemplated to be kept on when Kirkdale is ready. It is an old house and is used for old women (seventy-five). Washing, etc., as above.
18. This is a house for epileptic women and imbeciles; Dingle they do their own washing, etc., and some making of Mount clothes.
19. This is rented by the Vestry and is used for epileptic men and imbeciles. The men are employed in the gardens, and it has been found that the epileptic patients benefit very much by such work, they have not so many fits, showing that outdoor work is beneficial. Washing, etc., as above.
20. This is a convalescent home for boys sent out by Maghull. the doctors, tubercular cases; tents are used, and the boys sleep out in all weathers, many preferring the tents to indoors. They do their own washing and mending. Women workers sent from Brownlow Hill.
21. This is a convalescent home for girls who are sent out by the doctors. Washing, etc., as at Maghull.
22. These homes, Maghull and Grove Mount, have undoubtedly proved of great benefit to those sent out.
23. Greater power should be given to boards of guardians to enable them to detain in workhouses or some home, inmates of weak intellect—I mean those not bad enough to be kept under a detention order, especially women, as there is no doubt that many are ruined by unscrupulous men.
24. Want of employment is a great factor; it is frequently said that if a man has grey hair no employer will take him, even if he is not old.
25. Thriftlessness, coupled with drink, old age, inability of children to assist in supporting their parents.
26. Some also think that the great advance that has been made in nursing, etc., in workhouses encourages people to enter.
27. I do not think the fact of a man or woman having been in the hospital encourages them to go back to the house, unless they think there is a chance of reaching the hospital again. Many also try to get into the hospital for very simple causes, that could be very well treated outside; and many no doubt could work, but they say the employers would not have them if they have the slightest thing the matter; this may be so, but there is no doubt that many are working with far more serious complications than some who seek the shelter of the house.
28. The big combinations have also affected the number of workers; naturally a big company will employ fewer men at regular work, than half a dozen single owners, and there is not the same incentive to the combinations to employ old servants as in the days gone by, when a master would keep on an elderly man because he had been in the employ for a long time.
29. I think as far as possible the hospitals should be separate from the workhouses, and that the people who are admitted on account of sickness only should not be deprived of privileges that citizenship may entitle them to.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY JAMES BRASSEY BRIERLEY, M.D., MEDICAL OFFICER FOR THE OLD TRAFFORD DISTRICT, BARTON-ON-IRWELL UNION.

|--|---|---|---|
| Outdoor Relief. | 1. The present system of giving only money to old people simply provides a shelter for them but no food; for example, I have now ten old women receiving half a crown a week from the relieving officer, and each one pays 2s. a week for a room, thus leaving less than a 1d. a day for maintenance and they have to depend upon charity for the bare necessities of life. | women may apply and a minimum fee of one guinea should be paid by the Local Government Board to the medical attendant. | |
| Workhouses. | 2. If continued at all, workhouses should be simply for able-bodied paupers and casuals. | 7. State isolation hospitals should be provided for the use of the state poor as well as the general public. | State Isolation Hospitals. |
| Unmarried Mothers. | 3. Guardians should have the power, and be compelled to find if possible, and prosecute the father of an illegitimate child, and to send him to gaol in default of payment of maintenance, and he should get hard labour. If a father of a second illegitimate child, he should serve a term of imprisonment without option. These cases, I believe, are common; deserted wives should be protected in a similar way. | 8. Lunatics should in no case be allowed abroad, except under the supervision of some licensed person. | Lunatics. |
| Abolition of outdoor relief where father able to work. | 4. Outdoor relief to families where the father is able to work should be abolished. | 9. District nurses should be provided for attendance upon cases of temporary sickness and emergencies. | District Nurses. |
| Medical Relief. | 5. Women cohabiting should have no claim at all, the man should be mulct in cost, and in default imprisoned with hard labour. | 10. Aged people should be kept in one storey buildings in hamlets, as near as possible to, but not in large towns, and no block of buildings should house more than fifty inmates. Men and women should be kept in separate blocks but may meet together at meals. | Housing of the Poor. |
| | 6. As regards midwifery—a list should be kept of all qualified medical practitioners in a district willing to attend pauper women in confinement to whom such | 11. Children should be kept in country cottages and entirely free from grown-ups. | Children. |
| | | 12. Provision for outside surgical help and anaesthetics should be carefully made and a scale of charges constructed. | Outside surgical help and anaesthetics. |
| | | 13. The time has now come for a complete organisation of the system of Poor Law administration, and relieving distress and want is not to be the chief and only object in the administration of state help to the poor. There should be a careful and accurate discrimination between the classes and characters of paupers, in short a complete grading system. Respect for character and regard for humanity must come before cost. | Classification of paupers according to character. |

APPENDIX No. XXXIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. JOHN J. BUCHAN, MEDICAL OFFICER OF HEALTH FOR ST. HELENS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER

Medical Relief of the Poor in St. Helens.

1. St. Helens is a town with a population estimated at 92,100 at the middle of 1906. The population is almost entirely working class, the men being employed largely in the glass trade—glass making and bottle making—and to a less extent in the alkali works and in the coal mines. A large number of the workers are unskilled, and the average wage of these unskilled labourers is not above £1 per week.
2. The birth rate of St. Helens is one of the highest in England and Wales, and has averaged 37·5 per 1,000 of the population during the past ten years. The families are therefore large, the average number of persons per house being 5·58 at the census of 1901, but among the labouring class a fair average would seem to be at least four children in each family, or a family of six.
3. St. Helens forms part of the area included under the jurisdiction of the Prescot Board of Guardians, who have appointed three district medical officers for the area of the borough. There are in all twenty-three medical practitioners practising medicine in St. Helens, or one to every 4,000 of the population.
4. There are two hospitals in the borough—the St. Helens Hospital, with 100 beds, and the Providence Free Hospital, with forty beds—but into neither of these hospitals can a person be admitted without being certified by a medical practitioner, and when admitted he must provide, even in the free hospital, his own medical attendants at his own expense. There are no free public dispensaries in the town. So that in St. Helens, a town approaching 100,000 inhabitants, there is no provision whatever for free medical attendance on the non-parochial poor, unless they are able to appeal to the generosity of the individual medical practitioner. There is a small ladies' charity in the town, for providing for women in childbed, which does good work, but it is not large. The distance of St. Helens from other towns quite prevents the people from taking advantage of any of the medical charities there.
5. There are some family sick clubs for medical aid, but the works medical clubs usually deal with illness in the workmen only, or with accident cases alone. It thus happens that when sickness occurs in a family of the labouring class, medical aid is only obtained for them from the private medical practitioner, at the rate charged to private patients, and although these rates are by no means high, the majority of the labouring class are not able to afford it. Indeed, the majority of them have considerable bills owing to the medical practitioner, and will probably never pay them. It also logically follows that many cases of illness in this class are unattended by medical men, and this has caused St. Helens to become notorious on account of the high rate of "uncertified deaths," 1 in 18 to 22 persons dying in St. Helens each year without ever having seen a medical man, or afterwards having had an inquest held by the coroner. The Registrar-General in his Report for 1904 draws attention to the uncertified deaths in Gateshead, Warrington, St. Helens and South Shields, and states:—"Why these places should as a rule find themselves so situated is a matter to which attention should be directed." I have made special enquiry into the uncertified deaths for 1905, and have tabulated them as follows:—

Totals - - -	34	7	3	6	1	2	6	1	4	3	67

Total number of deaths in Borough, 1,542.

6. Regarding the proportion of uncertified deaths to the whole deaths at various ages in 1905, the following results are interesting:—

Age.	Total number of Deaths.	Deaths uncertified.	Proportion.
Infancy—
Under 1 year -	430	44	10·2
Childhood—
1 to 15 years -	249	7	2·8
Working Life—
15 to 55 years -	390	9	2·3
Old Age—
Over 55 years -	359	7	1·9

7. It would therefore seem that the infants suffer most from want of medical care, and that in old age there are fewest uncertified deaths—possibly because then the services of the Poor Law Medical Officer is available.

8. In my work as medical officer of health and medical officer to the education committee, I am constantly meeting with cases of illness among the poor not on the poor roll, who are unattended by medical men, and who require such medical attendance. Besides the danger to such cases themselves, there is a larger danger to public health, from the possible non-recognition of cases of infectious disease, and in my own experience this danger is frequently a very real one. Measles, for instance, among the poor is never medically attended, and is only seen by a doctor when the case has taken some serious complication. This gives rise to the great difficulty in its control, and to the high death rate it causes. It is not only the erroneous idea of the people that measles is a minor disease, but it is also their poverty that prevents them calling in medical attendance sufficiently early.

9. During the past six months I have had reported to me all the cases of school children whose absence from school has not been certified by medical men. These cases number nearly 2,000, and while many of them are cases of neglect (including dirty and verminous conditions), anumps, ringworm and lesser ailments, yet there have been a notable proportion of cases that urgently require medical treatment. As examples of this may be mentioned cases of pneumonia, bronchitis, phthisis, enteric fever, scarlet fever, epilepsy, chorea, septicæmia, otitis media purulenta, phlyctenular conjunctivitis, and many other similar conditions, and when one tries to find medical treatment for these cases, one is faced with a very serious difficulty which cannot in many cases be adequately met on account of the poverty of the parents. In this work also, I have found many remediable conditions among children, causing them great pain and handicapping them severely in their education, though not preventing their school attendance, and in a large number of these cases the poverty of the parents has prevented them from seeking the necessary medical help. As examples of this class of case are those due to eye defects, such as myopia, hypermetropia, and astigmatism. I had recently brought under my notice, a bright intelligent school boy, who was suffering from myopia, which was causing him great pain, but when I endeavoured to have his eyesight remedied, I found he was one of a family of six, the only support of which was the father, who was earning only 17s. 5d. per week. There are many similar eye cases, while ear defects, morbid conditions of the throat and nose, all continue to exist untreated among the poor.

10. The sanitary authority of St. Helens has for some time past been endeavouring to deal with phthisis, and in this work, isolation and sanatorium treatment forms an essential part. At the same time the Prescot Board of Guardians have been dealing with this disease among the poor, but they have really failed to touch the essential point in the whole question. All that the Board have done has been to provide a home for the late cases of phthisis, who have become so poor as to be willing to enter the workhouse. The guardians have left alone cases, many of which will almost certainly gravitate to the workhouse at a later date, but who, so long as they are able to earn anything at all, will not apply to the relieving officer. The St. Helens Sanitary Authority has attempted to provide isolation for phthisis cases in order that they may be educated in the hygiene of the disease, and in order to prevent the spread of infection from those cases with which the guardians were unable to deal. The objections that have been taken to this work have been largely from the point of view of the overlapping of the work. But my experience of this work has shown me that the guardians, as at present constituted, cannot deal with it effectively. It has been a frequent experience to find cases who had refused to go to the workhouse sanatorium, willing and ready to go to the accommodation

APPENDIX No. XXXV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE HANDED IN BY DR. WILLIAM CARTER, LIVERPOOL.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

1. The opinions that I offer to the Commission and any evidence that I can give, are derived from my experience for many years (a) as Honorary Physician to the Liverpool Royal Southern Hospital; (b) as Honorary Medical Officer for four years (previously to my appointment as Physician to the Southern Hospital) to the North Dispensary, Liverpool; and to my having on many occasions visited the homes of very many of the poor in conjunction with Sir Henry Littlejohn with the view of advising the Corporation as to their (the homes) demolition or alteration on sanitary grounds.

2. The Royal Southern Hospital is situated in a poor neighbourhood, near the Southern Docks. In 1905 there were treated in it 2,628 in—and 11,620 out-patients. It has 207 beds, all of which are generally occupied. Owing to its proximity to the docks and to its being the hospital in connection with the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine it always has a number of sailors, British and foreign, under treatment, many of them suffering from various forms of tropical disease. There were 144 of these tropical cases in 1905.

3. The class of patients received can be told by running the eye down the columns in the registers devoted to "occupation." Labourer, seaman, quarryman, servant, cab-proprietor, steward, grocer's assistant, painter, missionary, quarter-master, fireman, joiner, warehouseman, chemical worker, fitter, plate-layer, carter, pointsman, watchman, lamp-trimmer, bottler, clerk, and the wives and children of such form by far the largest proportion of those admitted, all of them being above the class provided for by the Poor Law, but few if any being able to bear the financial strain of illness at their own homes. The diseases are as various as the occupations, but, unlike what is often found in manufacturing towns, very few indeed are due to any special kinds of employment.

4. The admission is by subscribers' notes, except in cases of very acute disease or of accident, when no such notes are required. There is no organised system of enquiry into the means of those who apply, but if there is a suspicion that they could pay for medical or surgical advice at their own homes, their admission is delayed to enable this enquiry to be undertaken. It might be advantageous perhaps to have an enquiry officer for every hospital, though my belief is from long observation of those received into the Royal Southern Hospital, that there is very little abuse of the charity. The inmates of the tropical diseases' ward (which is supported by a special fund and subscription list of shipowners and merchants) may be of any class. This ward contains twelve beds. A ward containing nine beds is devoted to the treatment of female patients, who can pay two guineas weekly. This charge is inclusive of everything. It is of great advantage to those, who though not poor, could not bear the expense of operation or prolonged medical treatment in their homes. There is a children's ward containing twenty-two beds. Of the remaining beds ninety-five are for male and seventy-six for female patients.

5. Should hospitals be maintained from the rates? I think not, for the following reasons: (1) The stream of benevolence which now flows into them to the great advantage of the givers as well as the recipients would be checked; (2) the healthy emulation at present existing between the different institutions would also be checked, greatly, as I venture to think, to the disadvantage of the city. Moreover, if all existing hospitals were supported from the rates to-day I presume that there would be nothing to prevent private individuals starting others on voluntary aid to-morrow; (3) of late years a great and growing interest has been manifested by working men, whose contributions through the Hospital Saturday Fund have increased from £103 18s. 10d. in 1871 to £9,063 14s. 10d. in 1905 (or nearly £3,000 more than that which was contributed from the Hospital Sunday Fund in the latter year). Each hospital committee has a working man member representing the Hospital Saturday Fund. To stop or diminish the working men's interest in the medical charities would be in every respect unfortunate.

6. Whether it would be advantageous or otherwise to place all hospitals under one central governing body in each large town is perhaps more open to consideration, though I think the balance of evidence is against such central control. There is at present frequent inter-communication between the several committees through the medium of their presidents or superintendents, and I am inclined to think that more benefit is thus obtained than would be gained by any attempt at forced combination.

7. Our expenses are controlled by a special board—termed the Board of Economy—the members of which meet once weekly and scrutinise all accounts and expenditure, which must be submitted to them before being passed.

8. The committee is composed of gentlemen of the highest standing, and all of them remarkable for their wide and accurate business knowledge.

9. Generally speaking the other hospitals and charitable institutions are managed on the same lines as the Royal Southern Hospital.

10. I append a list of these kindly furnished to me by Mr. Grisewood, secretary to the Charity Organisation Society (See Appendix No. XXXV. (A.)).

11. Not a few of the cases admitted are due directly or remotely to the abuse of alcohol; but outside the tropical cases, no other cause of disease than alcohol has special prominence.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. W. CROSFIELD, J.P., VICE-CHAIRMAN, LIVERPOOL BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

Relief.

1. The subject of relief presents many difficulties owing to local circumstances and the geographical position of the parish of Liverpool.
2. The old borough of Liverpool, as it existed prior to the extension of the boundaries in 1834 constitutes the area over which the select vestry exercises authority, but is surrounded on the north and east by the West Derby Union and on the south by Toxteth, while the chief outlet for labour is in the two latter unions, that portion of the population which owing to age is unfit for remunerative employment, still resides in the old parish.
3. It therefore results that the wage earners migrate to the outer districts and leave behind them a rapidly increasing proportion of needy poor while the total population is diminishing as the following figures show.

4. The population in the corresponding years being 238,000, 210,000, 146,000.
5. The small number of children shows that the growing families are not now found in the parish as in former years.

Indoor and Out-Relief.

6. From the foregoing statement it is clear that both "out" and "in" relief are still necessary.

7. The aged need to be admitted to the house because any relatives who might be able to find a home for them are living at a distance nearer their work; those who have suffered from accident or weakness, because they cannot be attended to where they have previously lived, their relatives having moved away also following their work. Again there are unmarried men whose only home is in a lodging house, the deserted residences in the old parish are largely utilised for this purpose.

8. Out-relief must be maintained for the benefit of young widows with children of school age, who can do something for themselves and their families by way of keeping a home together, with assistance.

9. The increased number of "ins" no doubt arises from the reputation which the hospital has for skilled medical attendance and the high character of the nursing. The numbers in the house are swelled by reason of the increased comforts which are given (including tobacco for the men) whereby the inmates can be sure of a "snug harbour," particularly during the winter months.

Heswell Sanatorium.

10. The experiment of the parochial treatment of tuberculosis being untried prior to the erection of the institution at Heswell, it had of necessity to be undertaken by neighbouring boards so that the scale upon which it was carried out would be more likely to lead to satisfactory results.

11. Considering the difficulties which had to be faced, the expectations have to a large extent been realised, notwithstanding the severe criticism by which it was attacked. The superintendence of a joint board of management has removed the opportunity of supervision beyond the reach of the bodies who had to provide the money, except on the annual occasion when the delegated members have to be re-elected; this inevitably led to friction and the hands of the committee of management were needlessly tied.

12. Apart from these drawbacks the work has gone on smoothly, and considering the character and condition of the patients, the results have been encouraging.

Separate Schools for Catholic Children.

13. The chief benefit which results from the boarding-out of the Catholic children is on the ground of improved discipline and the religious training which is more satisfactorily carried out by those who are exclusively of the same faith as the children under their continuous care.

14. On the question of cost it is not easy to make a comparison, as the machinery at the cottage homes is still too new to enable one to say what the cost will be if and when the whole estate is used for the accommodation of children.

Underfed Children—Local Government Board's Order.

15. The Select Vestry has not adopted the Board's Order on this subject as the necessity has not arisen. Where school managers have been called upon to give meals to school children, it has been done only for those in direct need, and then by voluntary effort and organisation through the head teachers—and under these elements of sympathetic treatment it has been found that it was not required for a prolonged period.

* Including 21 children chargeable to Wigan Union, and children chargeable to Stepney Union.

16. The opinion prevails that the introduction of children to a parish system of outdoor relief has always disastrous results, and should at all costs be avoided.

17. Owing to the character of the accommodation in the main workhouse at Brownlow Hill, and the hope, always existing, that the pressure on the wards would in long cease, temporary premises at Luton Street for old men, and at Mitford Street for old women were secured. The building hitherto utilised for the schools having been adapted will shortly be ready for the old men, and Luton Street will be no longer required.

18. Dingle Mount is a large dwelling-house occupied by female epileptics.

19. Maghull—a large country house on an agricultural estate also for epileptic boys.

20. Grove Mount in the country for sickly babies.

21. Highfield—a new set of buildings recently completed—to relieve the male infirmary. Belmont Road was built at the joint cost of Liverpool and West Derby, for use as tramp sheds.

22. In each case the inmates for whom these branches are provided are better and more easily managed than they could be in a large central workhouse.

23. As regards the tramps, owing to the position of the sheds at Belmont Road, they are intercepted before they reach the parish, being thus saved a long tramp, and they are sooner got rid of by having only one shed instead of passing from one to another.

Local Government Board Interference and Oversight.

24. There has always been the feeling on the Select Vestry that the restrictive rules necessary to control rural boards and the smaller urban boards of the country—and also the delays and minute central criticism of the Local Government Board are unnecessary in the case of so large a union as Liverpool composed to such an extent of men of business experience, who are spending the money contributed within a limited area by ratepayers having one similar interest.

"Settlement" by a Central Clearing House.

25. The serious expense which is involved in the removal of paupers and the decision of questions of settlement, particularly when a firm of solicitors act as clerk to the guardians, or when the clerk is paid by fees, suggests that a Department of the Local Government Board should act as an umpire between contesting unions by a system of Clearing House deciding the claims on an equitable basis.

26. The adjoining unions of Liverpool and West Derby have for many years carried on a system of interchange which has given satisfaction to both the contracting parties.

APPENDIX No. XXXVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. JOSEPH DEWSNUP, SUPERINTENDENT RELIEVING OFFICER, MANCHESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

Duties of Superintendent Relieving Officer.

1. My duties are to attend all meetings of the relief committees of the guardians, and enter in the relief order check book, all orders made by the chairman of committee in the application and report books of the relieving officers.

2. To exercise supervision over the relief departments, and see that all legal orders made by the guardians are carried out according to their instructions by the officers.

3. To take proceedings under the direction of the clerk to the guardians, against persons who are of ability, and liable for the maintenance of their relatives chargeable to the rates. And in the same manner to take proceedings under the Vagrant Acts, against defaulting husbands and parents, whose families are chargeable to the township. And to observe and execute all lawful orders of the guardians.

Guardians' Methods of dealing with applications for Relief.

4. For relief purposes, the township is divided into three districts, and the guardians into three portions, each portion being appointed to one of the respective districts, but—with one or two exceptions—the whole of the guardians are competent to act upon any or all of the districts if required.

5. In their administrative functions the committees are guided by a set of Standing Orders, which have been in use for many years, and found to be well adapted for the production of uniformity in the general administration of relief within the township. In regard to the adoption of standing rules for the guidance of relief committees, I am fully assured that such rules are of much service when used with judgment, each case being dealt with upon its own merits and not upon harsh or unalterable lines, but with a disposition on the part of the dispenser of relief to do justice, upon sound lines, not extravagantly, or in haphazard fashion, for to dispense in such a form is injurious to the receiver of Poor Law relief, and unjust to those who have to pay the same.

6. I am therefore confident that a well thought out code of rules on lines similar to those framed by the guardians of the township of Manchester will be of much value to both guardians and their officers, in the discharge of their several duties, and will produce greater uniformity in the general administration of parish relief.

Method of applying Labour Test.

7. Able-bodied men with families are paid according to the labour test in operation at the time of application. See the supplemental regulations relating to the relief of able-bodied men, adopted by the guardians on July 14th, 1887, a copy of which is enclosed. The guardians also issued the following order dated the 24th November, 1904.

Resolved: 1. That until the 31st March next the scale of outdoor relief to able-bodied men, set to test work, and their families shall be as follows, namely—

For a man and his wife 6s. per week.

For each child under sixteen, 1s. per week.

And that in addition thereto the men be provided with dinner daily.

2. That the hours of labour shall be from 10 o'clock a.m. to 4 p.m. daily (with an interval of one hour for dinner), except on Monday, when the hours shall be from 11 o'clock a.m. to 4 p.m., and on Saturday from 10 a.m. to 12 o'clock noon.

8. The same order was re-enacted, November, 1905, and continued until March 31st, 1906. When the original scale and hours were re-adopted and continued in force until the closing of the labour yard.

9. The weekly amount of relief allowed to a man and his wife and four children under the resolution of 1904-5 would be 10s. divided into six daily portions of 8d. in money and 1s. in food, total 1s. 8d. per day, or 10s. per week. The task of work having been performed the applicant received from the relieving officer the portion of money and kind to which he is entitled for that day.

10. In addition to the test work required in the case of able-bodied men the guardians have also a form of test, applied in special cases of able-bodied women, with or without children, and infirm women who are not totally disabled. The test applied is either washing or scrubbing in the workhouse, New Bridge street, or relief department, not more than three days in each week. This test operates beneficially if firmly applied, the applicant being given to understand that idling will not be permitted, and, if persisted in, relief will be withdrawn and the workhouse substituted. Firmness in this matter is all-important, otherwise the test is useless as a deterrent, increasing rather than decreasing the difficulties of the situation.

11. The total number of applications received under this Order from the beginning of November, 1905, to the end of the half year ending March 24, 1906, was 1,165, representing 2,584 alleged underfed school children.

12. The largest number fed by the guardians in any one week, 190, at a cost of £10 9s. 6d. The total cost of feeding during the half year named was £127 10s. 3d.

13. There has not at any time since the preliminaries were settled by the guardians been much difficulty experienced in carrying out the provisions of the Order. And I think that the whole conduct of this matter by the guardians of this township, justifies me in the statement that under this Order or any similar Order, boards of guardians are the proper authorities to dispense such relief, and may be relied upon to do so with economy and efficiency.

14. Drink, improvidence, overcrowding, dirt, and squalor, which lower the moral tone of the people and are of prejudicial to thrift. All other causes outside of these named are but trifling agencies in the accomplishment of the moral, social and physical degradation of the masses of the people.

15. The following to my mind are some of the causes of the increased expenditure on poor relief during the past few years:—

1. The lowering of the rating qualifications for guardians.

2. The stagnation of trade following upon the close of the South African war.

3. The discharge of large numbers of men from the army into civil life.

4. The growing indisposition of Poor Law guardians to enforce the workhouse test, and a disposition to disburse more out-door relief.

16. To these may be added the growth of a sentiment opposed to the strict application of the deterrent side of the Poor Law, and the stringent regulations adopted by many boards of guardians during the last thirty years, in their administration of outdoor relief.

17. There has been little change in the yearly number of applications made during the last four years, the number applying during 1903 was 395; 1904, 412; 1905, 440, and 1906, 439. The number of warrants taken out in the years named were 122, 139, 139 and 112.

18. The apprehensions for the same years were 114, 132, 123, 158, a number of which may be attributed to the reward of £2 offered by the guardians for information leading to the arrest of those for whose apprehension warrants have been issued by the Justices.

19. Settlement and removal are in my opinion responsible for the squandering of a large amount of public moneys in litigation, travelling expenses and other items, without returning any adequate benefit for the moneys spent, and might with advantage to the State be abolished.

20. Ins and outs are a source of much perplexity and annoyance to Poor Law officers, giving a large amount of extra labour to those charged with their care, beside interfering to some extent with the discipline of large workhouses.

ns and outs. 21. I think that this evil might be modified very much if the guardians and masters of workhouses would more fully apply the powers of detention, which they already possess under the provisions of the Pauper Inmates Admission and Discharge Acts, but failing in this, I would increase the power of detention, in special cases to one, two, or even three months.

24. As to whether orders for the maintenance of parents should be obtainable direct from the Justices, apart altogether from any action of the guardians, in my Orders for opinion there are many objections to action being maintenance taken direct by the parents in proceedings before the Justices. The time occupied in obtaining such orders, and the cost of preliminary proceedings, in the case of parents without means, would make such an Act prohibitive and therefore defeat the intentions of those who favour legislation in this direction.

25. I have not perceived that the Workmen's Com- The Work-since been more fully confirmed.

APPENDIX No. XXXVII (A).

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES, MANCHESTER.

Paper handed in by Mr. Joseph Dewson, Superintendent Relieving Officer.

Poor Law Offices,
New Bridge Street.
Manchester,
28th January, 1903.

To the Manchester Board of Guardians.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—I beg to submit for your perusal the following report upon the relation between the demolition of house property and the living conditions of the poorer classes in the township of Manchester.

Demolition of house property on a large scale arises from three main causes, (1) railway extensions, (2) municipal and other improvements carried out under local Acts, and (3) sanitary reforms under the provisions of Parts I. and II. of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890. In each of these cases the Local Government Board, by virtue of Parliamentary powers, insist upon the provision of new housing accommodation to such extent as they deem necessary as a substitute for the working class accommodation destroyed.

In some cases the new housing accommodation has been provided in the vicinity in which the demolition has taken place, but of late the tendency, so far as municipal authorities are concerned, has been to act upon the provisions of the Housing of the Working Classes Amendment Act, 1900, which enables these authorities to acquire land outside of the area of their own jurisdiction for the purpose of erecting working men's dwellings.

Unfortunately, the people who become tenants of the new houses are by no means identical with those housed by the demolitions, the new dwellings provided being generally seized upon by tenants of a superior class to those for whom they were intended.

The poorest classes naturally cling to the central area of our large towns, because they find there their main opportunities of securing a livelihood, scanty and precarious as it may be. Even if this were not so, very many of them have little, if any, capability of appreciating the benefits to be derived from residence in a healthier neighbourhood and in much more convenient dwellings. On account of these conditions, the reductions in the number of dwellings caused by the demolition of cottage property in central urban districts, though apparently met by the erection of suburban dwellings, may cause an increased pressure upon the housing accommodation of the vicinity affected, and overcrowding, with all its demoralising and pauperising influences, becomes more intense, and the amount of pauperism in such districts is certainly not appreciably lessened.

APPENDIX No. XXXVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE ON THE SUBJECT OF MEDICAL ASSISTANCE OF THE POOR, BY JOHN EDWIN GOULD, M.D., LONDON, D.P.H., CANTAB., MEDICAL OFFICER OF HEALTH, AND MEDICAL EXAMINER TO THE EDUCATION COMMITTEE, BOLTON.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

Personal Experience.

1. After qualifying at University College Hospital and obtaining the degree of Doctor of Medicine at London University, I became a resident medical officer at a consumption hospital (Victoria Park) in the East End of London, and afterwards assistant medical superintendent of Whitechapel Infirmary, so that I had over three years experience of Poor Law methods in this district.

2. I have since that been medical superintendent of the Sheffield Fever Hospitals with experience of a small-pox epidemic, medical officer of health of Chesterfield, and for the last ten years medical officer of health of Bolton, and had experience of smallpox epidemics in each of the last two towns. I have thus had eighteen years experience of public health and Poor Law work.

Vaccination Acts and Smallpox.

3. As far back as 1854 the president of the Poor Law Board expressed his doubts in the House of Commons "Whether it was a wise course to place vaccination in connection with the Poor Law in any way." Since that date sanitary authorities have been constituted, in whose hands all matters connected with sanitation and the prevention of disease have been placed.

4. At the present time the sanitary authorities have to control smallpox epidemics, and it seems an extraordinary thing that the means of prevention should not also be under their control. It has often been suggested that it should be transferred and most medical officers of health, would, I feel sure, welcome such an arrangement.

5. I have had experience of three epidemics of smallpox, and anyone who has to bear the burden knows that promptitude of action is of the highest importance. It is impossible to get the officials of any other authority to act as promptly as those under one's own control, and delay is thus occasioned. When smallpox is prevalent or threatened, the medical officer of health or his deputy is always in residence, and it is arranged to send notices of cases to his house when the office is closed, at any time of the day or night, Sundays or weekdays; and he is ready with his assistants to visit at once. As a matter of fact I discovered a good many cases in the common lodging houses here before any medical man was called in, and several were sent direct to my house by the police. However prompt the vaccination officer and public vaccinator may be after receiving notice they seldom care to trouble themselves after official hours, and this is much too tardy for modern sanitary methods. Again the private practitioner, whether public vaccinator or not, is generally very glad to get rid of a smallpox case, so that after notifying a case of "spots on the face"—for few have had experience of smallpox—the rest is left to the medical officer of health.

6. Both here and in Chesterfield I have found it necessary to revaccinate the contacts myself when the private medical attendant could not do it, and found it absolutely necessary in many instances in the common lodging houses where the tramp class abound, otherwise they would have escaped altogether while waiting for the public vaccinator. Moreover, with the law at his back, the medical officer of health has more power of persuasion, and as a proof that this method has been successful during the last epidemic, which lasted nearly two years, the vaccination of contacts was so successful there was not a single secondary case in any private house after notification was received by me.

7. It is well known that this disease is largely spread by tramps, and it will be seen that the more immediately they are brought under the control of the sanitary authority the better. From a sanitary point of view it would be much better if tramp wards were under the control of the police and if they were given some power of detention when necessary.

8. This control of revaccination would be urged even more strongly, I should think, by port sanitary authorities, and several towns have expressed strongly their opinion upon it.

9. Although the matter of primary vaccination may not be so urgent as revaccination at epidemic times, still even this is a purely sanitary measure, of which the medical officer of health should have frequent and complete information even in non-epidemic times. It seems to me an anomaly that the public vaccinators should work under the local supervision of a clerk of the guardians, instead of under a medical officer of health who has had special scientific training and experience in this work, and who has to concern himself with anything that affects or is likely to affect the health of the inhabitants. The work of revaccination, especially in epidemic periods could be done more economically by the sanitary authority.

Ordinary Infectious Diseases and Medical Relief.

10. By Section 131 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the sanitary authority may provide hospitals for the sick and by Section 133 may provide a temporary supply of medicine and medical assistance. This power has been interpreted to mean the provision of hospital accommodation for dangerous infectious disease, in order to prevent the spread of the disease. Very few authorities have ever attempted to charge for this, which they can do by the Act, and pauper patients are now admitted as well as others.

11. It is well known that smallpox is the only disease that it is absolutely necessary to isolate, and that all other diseases can be effectually isolated at home if there is accommodation. The working classes, however, not being able to bear the expense of a nurse, are only too willing to send their children to the hospitals provided by the sanitary authority, and save the expense.

12. In London and other large towns cases of enteric and diphtheria are sometimes admitted to general hospitals and workhouse infirmaries, but in the Lancashire towns both institutions refuse these cases, so that whether pauper or otherwise such cases as need isolation have to be admitted to the hospital provided by the sanitary authority, and no charge is made either to the parents or to the guardians.

13. In Bolton there is compulsory notification of phthisis, and the sanitary authority has recently provided four beds in a sanatorium for consumptives; several of those admitted were in receipt of parish relief. We also provide diphtheria antitoxin for those who cannot afford to pay for it.

14. It will be admitted, therefore, that a considerable amount of medical relief is already provided by the sanitary authority. It is being added to year by year. In my opinion, it is the proper authority to deal with such matters, and I do not know any other authority to which it could be transferred.

Infantile Mortality, etc.

15. Until cowkeepers can be persuaded or compelled to provide pure, clean, and bacteria-free milk to the public, milk depots will be useful places to help in the reduction of high infantile mortality, for at present it is impossible to educate mothers sufficiently to counteract the effects of insanitary conditions.

16. It seems to me that as the sanitary authority has already controlling powers over milk and other foods, cowkeepers and diseased animals, that they are the authority to have any extended powers.

17. Underfed Children are Slum Children in my experience; they are also the defective children, and the dirty children, and the criminal children. The sanitary inspectors and attendance officers who make regular and systematic inspections have special knowledge of these children. Those I refer to are not improperly fed but without sufficient food of any sort. In Bolton a considerable amount of investigation and enquiry has taken place and both teachers and missionaries of philanthropic bodies assure me that there is a considerable number of genuine cases. In one year as many as 122,569 dinners were supplied to necessitous children, the average per annum is about 14,336, and the underfed children about 600.

Poor Law Medical Officers and Medical Relief.

18. Poor Law medical officers and public vaccinators are usually general practitioners in private practice. It can hardly be expected that they can allow their poor patients to have priority over their private patients, especially as the better classes avoid the pauper class as much as possible.

19. I think it would be an advantage and more economical to have medical officers who devote their whole time to these duties which might be combined with others, and seeing how much medical relief is already given by the sanitary authority, it would effect a double improvement if the office of Poor Law medical officer and public vaccinator were combined and they became officials of the sanitary authority.

20. It would act beneficially in the patients in this respect, that those who now seek the advice of cheap doctors, who rarely give proper attention to the patients, would have no hesitation in seeking the advice of the State medical officer when there was no stigma of pauperism attached.

Poor Law Relief, Voluntary Relief and Co-operation.

21. I am frequently brought into contact with the officers and the missionaries of philanthropic bodies, and have consulted the latter again recently before forwarding this memorandum. It is the unanimous opinion that destitute persons will not seek Poor Law relief if they can possibly help it, owing to the stigma that must ever after rest upon them, and the ordeal of questions and exposure of their private affairs. They tell me that the most deserving persons don't apply at all and are relieved by the philanthropic bodies, and they say that the stigma of pauperism is never removed. That certainly has always been my opinion.

22. Cases are often reported to me where destitution arises from the sickness, and where the person refuses to go to the workhouse hospital. Recently letters have appeared in the local papers in which it is said "A pauper is deprived of his citizenship, and is made to feel that he occupies a position less honourable than his fellow men." A hope is expressed that the provision of dinners for necessitous children will not be carried out by the Poor Law authorities. These gentlemen tell me that one of their great aims is to prevent people having to seek parish relief; and they are also of opinion that the more kindly treatment of tramps would be likely to save many from taking a step downwards and becoming a burden on the public.

23. There are various agencies besides those in connection with places of worship now in operation in this borough, and one of their aimed objects is to prevent deserving destitute persons from seeking parish relief. I have interviewed the secretaries and missionaries in each case, and they say at least 60 per cent. will not apply for Poor Law relief, and many of these cases have to be sought out. It is not possible to reform the Poor Law so as to take away the stigma.

24. Money has been left in Bolton to be given out to persons who have never had Poor Law relief. The chief philanthropic societies in Bolton are:—

1. Poor Protection Society.—Relieves 500 families per year and has relieved as many as 1,172.
2. Queen Street Mission.—In connection with which there is a common lodging house, home for girls and women, and labour yard. They provide annually 14,000 dinners and 820 pairs of clogs.
3. Police Court Missioner, who assists and advises.
4. Guild of Help established about one year, who make enquiries and investigations. In their first year they investigated 600 cases.
5. Church Army Home and labour yard.

3. Arrangements with neighbouring unions by which removals as between one district and another are dispensed with; by which all vagrants who would otherwise be relieved by Liverpool are dealt with by the West Derby guardians.

4. The existing system of Poor Law administration is, upon the whole, satisfactory.

| Policy as to Out-Relief and Indoor Relief. Aged deserving Poor. Able-bodied Poor. | 1. I advocate the granting of adequate outdoor relief to widows with children, especially during the first six months of their widowhood, to the aged deserving poor, and also in times of exceptional distress to the able-bodied poor, but without the application of a labour test, and then only for a very short period. 2. As regards the granting of out-relief to the aged deserving poor, there is a diversity of opinion, but I contend that where there are relations or friends with whom they can reside, and who will promise to look after them, out-relief is preferable. 3. The application of a labour test in the cases of the able-bodied poor who apply for relief is a very difficult problem, because whilst it would be a very laborious task for a clerk to break stones (this being the most common test) it might be only a very slight one for a labourer or navvy, and as these cases, as a rule, only occur in isolated ones, set tests of any particular kind are out of the question. 4. In all other cases I strongly recommend the granting of indoor relief. | 5. My union could not see their way to join in such an expensive scheme, which is practically only in its infancy, as they felt that a certain amount of consideration was due to the already overburdened ratepayers, and at the same time were of opinion that the treatment received by these cases at their own hospital was quite sufficient. 6. I am strongly in favour of classification in institutions and by institutions where the present ones cannot be properly adapted for such classification. 7. This is a subject which requires very grave consideration, as I am afraid that the detention of an unmarried mother against her will would be greatly in disfavour with English people; still, I feel quite sure that it would be better both for mother and child if they were detained, say, for three months in order to give the mother time to recover from the effects of her pregnancy and enable the child to become sufficiently strong. 8. As regards the permanent detention of women with more than two illegitimate children, I quite agree, because such cases are either of women of vicious habits, or else they are feeble-minded. |

APPENDIX No. XLI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. DAVID Q. HENRIQUES, VICE-PRESIDENT BOARD OF GUARDIANS FOR THE RELIEF OF THE JEWISH POOR OF MANCHESTER.
MEMBER OF THE DISTRESS COMMITTEE OF THE CITY OF MANCHESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

This board of guardians relieves necessitous cases throughout this district, no distinction being made between Manchester and Salford and the near suburbs.

2. There are practically no Jewish cases on the rates and subscriptions of £100 from the Manchester Board of Guardians, £25 from the Salford Board of Guardians and £60 from the Prestwich Board of Guardians are annually received.

3. Medical relief is furnished by this board.

4. One of the most interesting features of this charity is the loan committee, a committee administering various small sums, which are lent out to selected applicants, who are able to furnish two guarantors. I beg to enclose herewith copy of the rules and regulations re these loans and would refer you specially to the report of the loan committee for the year 1905-6 (See Appendix No. XLI. (A.) in which full particulars are given and from which you will gather that on a turnover for the year ending March, 1906, of £1,964 12s. 6d., £8 9s. was written off for bad debts. It will also be interesting to note that during the thirty-one years this fund has been in existence on a turnover of £68,530 15s., only twenty-four applicants out of 6,456 have been declined. The total loss from bad debts during this period amounts to £174 5s. 6d., or about one quarter per cent. on the total sum lent.

5. I am enclosing also a copy of the bye-laws, together with rules and regulations of the loan department and would refer you to pages 12 and 13, in which the objects, as well as the regulations of this department are set forth (See App. No. XLI (B.)).

6. As regards the question of the non-Jewish unemployed, it is useless to shut one's eyes to the fact that whether trade be good or bad—and even in the very best of times—there will be always a very large body of unemployed. I am of opinion that the first step in dealing with them would be to examine them medically and thence to classify them into various sections, as so many are quite unfit for hard manual labour.

7. A feature which is very noticeable is that when once men, who for many years have been in regular employment get out of work, they often drift into the class of the chronic unemployed. I am particularly struck by the fact that among the unemployed there are a number of men, who are ready and willing to work by fits and starts, but who find it physically impossible to submit themselves to the discipline of regular work. The idea of having to reach work at a given time and to leave off at a given time, seems to be more than their strength of mind can undertake. I am almost inclined to think that a modified form of conscription, which would oblige youths from the age of fifteen or upwards to submit for some time to rigid discipline, would have a great effect on the national character.

8. I believe, that the want of discipline, which is patent everywhere, is the cause of a great deal of unemployment.

9. I am of opinion that most of the land schemes, which are now under discussion, are likely to be futile.

APPENDIX No. XLI (A).

Handled in by Mr. Henriques.

THIRTY-NINTH REPORT OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS FOR THE RELIEF OF THE JEWISH POOR OF MANCHESTER, 1905-6.

LOAN COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

Six hundred and fifty-five loans for £3,626 have been granted, being an increase of forty-four in number and £17 in amount over the preceding year. As the object of the fund is to help the small trader and mechanic, the result of the year's operations must be considered very satisfactory. Of the sum lent during the year, £1,964 12s. 6d. (54½ per cent.) has been repaid; the number of individual repayments being 17,358, and increase of 2,108 over the previous year. The sum of £8 9s. was at the end of the year written on for bad debts. The amount due by borrowers at the end of the year is £1,667 17s. 6d., of which the sum of £6 10s. is the balance of loans granted in 1904-5, and there are no loans outstanding before that year. Only two applications were refused.

During the thirty one years that this fund has been in existence a sum of £68,530 15s. has been lent, and from 1894 (when a record was commenced of applications refused) only twenty-four applications out of 6,456 have been declined. The total loss from bad debts during thirty-one years is only £174 15s. 6d., equivalent to a loss of about one-quarter per cent. on the total sum lent.

One hundred and ninety-six recipients of loans have contributed the sum of £28 1s. in small donations during the year to the relief department, making a total of £546 2s. 6d. given in this manner. There is no doubt that but for the depauperising work in which the committee are engaged, a larger number of poor would be thrown upon the relief branch of the board.

The phenomenally small amount of bad debts made while undoubtedly testifying to the honesty and perseverance of those who have sought the help of this committee, points conclusively to the efficiency with which the work is performed by the staff under the guidance of Mr. I. A. Isaacs, who has been mainly instrumental in bringing about the success which has resulted.

Many of the older contributors to the funds are being gradually removed by the hand of death, and their places are not being filled to any appreciable extent by the newer generation. This is a matter of deep concern to the committee, whose expenditure exceeds the fixed income, by about £100 a year. If the success of the department is to be maintained, the community must largely increase their financial support.

APPENDIX No. XLII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MISS. OLGA HERTZ, MEMBER OF CHORLTON BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

Children. 1. This is the only department of a guardian's work from which some satisfaction can be derived. The system of cottage homes, as carried out by the Chorlton Union at Styal, is certainly good, and the results are most satisfactory. With few exceptions the children turn out well. Even a spirit of attachment to the homes is shown to exist, as proved last year by the presentation of a handsome silver cup by a number of old boys to be competed for at football by the boys of the various homes.

2. Since 1889 I have conducted a class on behalf of the Girls' Friendly Society, formerly at the workhouse, now at Styal. I enrol all girls of twelve years and upwards as candidates and at fourteen admit those that are suitable to membership. The influence of this is very helpful, and it enables me to keep a hold on the girls after they leave the guardians' care. (Leaflets enclosed.) Out of 280 girls dealt with eighty-two have done very well, fifty-nine fairly well, and only twenty-seven badly. Twenty-four have gone to Canada, and are doing well, nineteen I know to be married, seven have died, and sixty-two are still at Styal.

3. A good many of the Styal boys are enrolled in the Church Lads Brigade. They attend parade with other boys and go into camp for a week annually with good results in every way.

4. I may say that we do not find our children have any tendency to become paupers in their turn. We find it a great help to have a female officer, who visits all boys and girls after they have been placed out till they attain the age of eighteen, and she inspects all situations before any are allowed to go.

Difficulties.

5. The chief of these is the interference of relatives when the children come to a wage-earning age. The only radical cure for this is emigration and we have adopted this in many cases with excellent results. I think the powers of guardians in this respect might well be extended, especially to make it apply to children adopted by them under the Act of 1889. Children sent to Canada under proper conditions are so well treated and looked after that they almost all do well and they mostly write they would certainly not like to return to England, and want us to send friends or younger brothers and sisters to join them.

6. Another excellent method of severing all connection with the Poor Law in the case of girls is to send them to a training home for six months or more before placing them in service, and more use might with advantage be taken of this, even for children from cottage homes and certainly for those from barrack schools or scattered homes. They can get a better class of situation and start unhampered by connection with any workhouse. The pauper taint is unfortunately a real thing and the best of the children feel the disadvantages of their antecedents all their lives more or less.

Out-Relief.

7. I have always been convinced that strict administration of out-relief is the only right method of dealing with what is at best an evil. I should like to see it much restricted, because I know that every time it is given in an undeserving case untold harm is done to the striving poor of the district. I think it should be made illegal to give out-relief to deserted wives, and though at first there would be cases of hardship if this were done, in the end I believe we should have very few such cases to deal with. When the men know that their wives and children will be kept by the guardians and they can return to their homes whenever they please, they think nothing of disappearing for a time and repudiating their responsibilities while they enjoy the freedom of bachelor life, but were the homes inevitably to be broken up it would be another matter.

Old-age Pensions.

8. Old-age pensions would, I suppose, be the best substitute for out-relief to old people, and would no doubt prevent a good many from being forced to go into the workhouse; though there would always be some unfit to take care of themselves and with no one to do it for them, for whom (failing almshouses) the infirm wards of a workhouse would be the best asylum.

9. There remain the widows with young children. These now constitute a class who are not satisfactorily dealt with. The out-relief given is almost always in augmentation of wages, in fact, the rule is, not to give after the first few weeks of widowhood unless the woman is earning something. In so far as this enables the employer to get cheaper labour it is bad. Also a mother with young children ought to be at home looking after the children and the house, and the relief is hardly ever enough to allow her to do this. It is indeed a question whether it would be advisable to put these women into such a position from the rates, that they did not require to seek work. To relieve them of some of the children—as is done in some unions—is open to the objection of breaking up family life and is only justifiable in cases where a child is very delicate or mentally defective and needing special Old-age care which the mother cannot give. I suppose no one pensions would advocate forcing all widows to break up their homes and go into the workhouse, though really this is the only method by which you can be sure the children will be adequately clothed, fed and housed.

10. It is hardly possible to say what the effect of life in Workhouse the workhouse is on its inmates; but I am afraid it cannot Inmates be called curative. My experience is that even with those who are very well behaved and useful inside, when they get situations found for them, they mostly drift back after a longer or shorter period, either owing to drink or to incompetence.

11. There is one class of inmate that is the despair of every guardian. I mean the very large class of feeble-minded persons of all ages, children and adults of both sexes, who are constantly in and out of the workhouse, and when out getting into trouble of all kinds. Over these the guardians ought to have power of detention, even when they cannot be certified by a medical man. I know quite well that there are so many grades of feeble-mindedness that it might sometimes be difficult to decide where to draw the line, but those who are daily in contact with these people know very well when they are unable to take care of themselves. As a rule they can be kept quite happy under restraint, if not exposed to bad influences which unsettle them, and if this could be strictly carried out in all cases, one hopes in a few generations the numbers might be much reduced, though possibly they will never be altogether eliminated. This power of detention is the most pressing need in any reform of the Poor Law.

12. Also I think more influence for good might be exerted over the young unmarried women who go into the maternity wards. The young women coming there for the first time in the Chorlton Union are cared for by the ladies belonging to the workhouse Magdalen society (report enclosed) but I think more should be done in all cases to further the affiliation of all the illegitimate children, wherever the necessary evidence can be procured. If necessary I should advocate detention for this purpose.

Co-operation between Poor Law
and Charity

13. There are many agencies of a more or less voluntary nature with which the guardians might co-operate more than they do, though they already make use of some. In my union lists are exchanged with the corporation of Manchester of all people receiving the benefits of the municipal charities (such as the Lord Mayor's, Barnes Samaritan Charity, Mayes etc.) and in the case of blind persons who receive help from Henshaw's Blind Asylum relief committee. This is of great assistance in testing the statements made by applicants for relief as to help received from other sources and our lists are at the disposal of these charities in the same way.

14. The Charity Organisation Society's officers are always willing to co-operate with the guardians and so are societies such as the Boys and Girls' Refuges, Sick, Poor and Private Nursing Association, Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Day nurseries, Police-aided Clothing Association, Prisoners' Aid Society and others (reports enclosed).

15. In conclusion may I say that with exception of the above-named necessity for powers of detention of feeble minded men and women, it seems to me that the revised Poor Law of 1834 is sound in principle and adequate in practice. The difficulty is to get the right sort of men and women to serve as guardians, and if some inducement could be offered to a better class of persons to serve on boards of guardians a great step would be taken to diminish pauperism and at the same time ameliorate the condition of our poorer classes.

APPENDIX No. XLIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. T. F. KELLY, FORMERLY A MEMBER OF THE MANCHESTER EDUCATION COMMITTEE, ON BEHALF OF ROMAN CATHOLIC CHARITIES OF MANCHESTER AND SALFORD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

1. Catholics form nearly one-seventh of the population of Manchester and Salford but owing to certain causes they number 50 per cent. and possibly more, of those who may be regarded as the very poor. Consequently there is a wide field for Catholic charity, and despite their restricted means the Catholics of the district carry on a large number of works of the most estimable character.

2. The Catholic Church is fortunate in having in the Religious Orders refined and educated ladies ready to devote their lives to the service of the poor. Chief among these in this district, having regard to the extent of their work, are the Little Sisters of the Poor. They have two houses in Manchester containing at the present time about 380 inmates. Men and women over sixty years of age belonging to the poorer classes are eligible for admission and they are maintained entirely by voluntary subscriptions collected from door to door by the Sisters. Nearly all these people would be chargeable to the Union were it not for the labours of the nuns. It is impossible for the sisters to give them as good food as they would get in the workhouse, but in all other respects they are better off than the inmates of that institution. No pauper taint attaches to their residence in the Little Sisters' Homes and they are not compelled to mix with the vile and abandoned characters who are often found in workhouses. In health and sickness, too, they are treated with an amount of kindness and consideration which would hardly be possible in a workhouse.

3. St. Bridget's Orphanage, the oldest Catholic charity in Manchester, was founded about sixty or seventy years ago in the Presentation Convent, Livesey Street, but for the last few years has been carried on by the Daughters of the Cross in Church Lane, Harpurhey. It is for the children of respectable parents who were Catholics and residents in the diocese of Salford and who are now both dead. It is maintained partly by voluntary subscriptions, partly by interest on investments. At present there are seventeen children in the institution, though formerly, when its funds were larger, it had nearly double the number. Girls from three to fifteen years of age are admitted and are trained to be domestic servants, dressmakers, and, in some cases, teachers.

4. The Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, have established a very useful home in St. Vincent Street, Ancoats, one of the poorest and most congested districts of Manchester. A number of young girls are housed and trained to laundry work, and when proficient are put out in suitable situations. In addition there is a night shelter where destitute girls may stay for three or four nights, and get their lodging, supper and breakfast free. The number of girls seeking the shelter varies, but may be taken as averaging five per night. The Sisters also take charge during the daytime of about twenty very young children, whose mothers have to go to work. Besides attending to the inmates of their houses, the Sisters visit several hospitals, and interest themselves in finding employment for the poor, men, women and children, a task in which they have been very successful.

5. The same Order conducts an excellent training home in Rumford Street, Chorlton-on-Medlock, where about sixty girls, mostly over fourteen years of age, are trained to laundry work and sewing. The Sisters have also two houses, apart from the main institution, in which forty other girls who are old enough to work, and are expected to pay a weekly sum for their maintenance find a decent and respectable home. Girls temporarily out of employment are taken in, and if nearly destitute no payment is demanded.

6. The Sisters of the Good Shepherd have a home in Blackley, for women and girls who are incorrigible, or whose virtue may be in danger. The inmates are employed in laundry work and sewing and number about 200. This Order has a wide experience of work of this kind, and has been highly successful in it. By patience, by sympathy, by unceasing kindness, they win the confidence of their charges, and restore to happiness and contentment many lost creatures who had been previously victims to hopelessness and despair.

7. The Sisters of the Cross and Passion, carry on in Salford a home for working girls, very similar to that conducted by the Sisters of Charity in Rumford Street. It has about twenty inmates. The same Order has also two large homes for girls in Bolton.

8. The Sisters of Bon Secours have also a house in Salford. They devote themselves to nursing the sick in their own homes.

9. Besides the above there are three Poor Law schools conducted by religious orders in this diocese of Salford, Buckley Hall, Rochdale, for boys, Holly Mount, Tottington for girls and the house of the Sisters of Nazareth, Prestwich, for very young children. Though most of the children in these homes are paid for by the guardians, yet other children are sometimes admitted when there are vacant places.

10. The Protection and Rescue Society is a large organisation established by the late Cardinal Vaughan when Bishop of Salford and covers the whole of the diocese. It devotes itself to the protection of the young who are in danger, and expends about £4,000 a year. With the exception of a small sum received from interest in investments the greater part of this money is raised by appeals in churches and through the press and by monthly collections from door to door.

11. The Society conducts a home in Worsley Road Patricroft, in which there are at the present time 155 children. It has also a home for working boys at Fairy Hill, Waterloo Road, Manchester, containing forty lads, who contribute a few shillings a week each towards their maintenance from their wages. The boys' earnings have to be supplemented by about £200 a year from the general funds of the Society to carry on the home. There is also a small home in Chorlton Terrace, Chorlton-on-Medlock, Manchester, for children on remand under the Youthful Offender's Act. During the past year 138 children were remanded here from the police courts, who, but for the home, would have had to be sent to the prison or to the workhouse. The taint associated with these places has thus been avoided. The Society also boards out considerable number of children with respectable people, paying a few shillings a week for the maintenance of each child.

12. The Brothers of St. Vincent de Paul consist of laymen of a charitable disposition who visit the poor weekly in their homes. They have twenty-five branches or "conferences" as they are called in Manchester and Salford and raise about £700 a year which they distribute partly in cash, partly in tickets for food. They also help the poor by clothing which has been given them by benevolent persons.

13. There is an equal number of "conferences" in other parts of the diocese which are doing the same kind of work.

14. A very similar society but consisting of ladies, married or single, is that of the Ladies of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul. They exist in at least six of the parishes of Manchester and Salford and number about eighty or ninety members. They visit the poor at their own homes and distribute relief in kind. But more valuable probably than any material gifts are the practical instruction and help they are able to give to those they visit. They can talk to mothers about their homes and their children as only women could and can do work quite impossible for men.

15. There is no special agency in Manchester among Catholics for dealing with unemployment, but the various societies enumerated above interest themselves as far as circumstances permit in finding work for deserving people and often with considerable success.

16. It will be seen from the above list that numerous charities exist among the Catholics of Manchester and district. That their effect is good cannot be doubted. The aged have the hardships of their lot mitigated by the never-ending kindness of the Little Sisters of the Poor.

The young in the various homes and institutions established for them are carefully protected from the dangers of city life and experience has shown that in the majority of cases they turn out respectable members of society. Catholics do not like to see their poor, whether young or old in workhouses, believing that, however careful the guardians may be in their management, the associations of the place are not beneficial to its inmates, and by their charitable efforts they yearly maintain many hundreds of the destitute who otherwise would have been compelled to become paupers.

APPENDIX No. XLIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. T. LOMAX, AGENT AND SECRETARY OF THE DISTRICT PROVIDENT AND CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY OF MANCHESTER AND SALFORD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

1. The above society was established in the year 1833, and its objects are:—

The encouragement of industry and thrift, the suppression of mendicity and imposture, the occasional relief of sickness and unavoidable misfortune, and the organisation of public and private charity.

Overlapping.

2. The committee has inaugurated a scheme for the registration of the names and addresses of all persons receiving charitable relief. Most of the relief societies have joined, but to make the scheme absolutely successful every person or institution having funds at their disposal for relief should co-operate.

3. The plan is for the co-operating agencies to make a weekly return on a special form having a perforated slip attached of all persons being assisted by them, and to send the same to the office of the society, when the names and addresses are examined and any information known is entered in the perforated slip and returned to the society which has sent in the list, a postcard being at the same time sent to inform the last society that helped the applicant, of the amount of assistance being given elsewhere.

4. Up to the present over 9,000 names have been registered. The scheme has been in operation about eighteen months.

Other Charities.

5. It is much to be feared that some charities produce the evil they exist to cure. There is a large, and I fear an increasing, class in Manchester quite content to earn food and lodging for a night by a slight task at some shelter or labour home; they come time after time and never appear to get regular employment, indeed, many of them are content with such a state of existence. There does not seem to be adequate investigation into the circumstances of each case.

Poor Law.

6. There is close co-operation with the unions, and all cases coming under the notice of the society for help are submitted weekly to that board of guardians in whose area the applicant resides. Many cases of a temporary nature and of a superior class are referred from time to time to this society for assistance by the board of guardians. This society encourages the guardians to do this rather than pauperise the applicants.

Out-Relief.

7. In my opinion it would be possible to substitute voluntary help for Poor Law relief in all cases of temporary sickness. Persons compelled to apply for outdoor relief through sickness should not be under any stigma of pauperism as at present.

Provident Dispensaries.

8. In connection with this society there are ten branch dispensaries. The entrance fee is 6d. for a single person and 1s. for a family, and a payment of 1d. each per week; for this free medical attendance and medicine is provided.

The wage limit is as follows:—

Single man or woman	- 12s.	per week.
Married couple	- - 18s.	"
For each child	- - 1s. 6d.	"

9. Families only whose incomes are less than this scale are eligible for free medical treatment at the Royal Infirmary, Salford Royal Hospital, Northern Hospital and Ancoats Hospital (see page 17 of Report).

Unemployment.

10. There is not an abnormal amount of unemployment at the present time. The cotton trade is very good and other branches of industry are working full time. I am of opinion, however, that there is in Manchester a large and increasing class of unemployed which may be divided as follows:—

1. Physically unfit.
2. Idle and vicious.

Unemployed Workmen Act.

11. Admitting that this Act was a genuine attempt to cope with the problem, it seems to me that the mistake is that the Act is framed to deal with genuine distress through want of work; whereas the real problem is men who will not work; these are always ready to take advantage of seasons of excitement and sensational reports.

APPENDIX No. XLV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. JAMES MACDONALD, CLERK TO THE GUARDIANS, TOWNSHIP OF MANCHESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

Combination of Unions.

1. The combination of two or more unions for a special purpose must obviously be more economical than if each union had itself to undertake the work.

2. As an instance, I may mention that some years ago the casual wards in the Manchester and Chorlton Unions respectively were found to be quite inadequate to fulfil their purpose, neither ward having sufficient accommodation for detaining casuals or setting them to work. By combining and erecting joint casual wards providing sufficient accommodation, the number of casuals from the two unions rapidly fell to about the number which each union had previously had to deal with, while the cost of the erection and administration of the joint institution has been relatively much less than would have been the case if two smaller institutions had been provided—one for each union. Another advantage gained is that by combination uniformity in the mode of dealing with this class is secured.

3. Again, by combining (as they have done) for the erection of a test house for the able-bodied, I am of opinion that the fact of there being a fully-equipped test house to which able-bodied men can be sent has resulted in both of these unions being relieved of the cost of maintaining a number of idle men who would have been content to remain in an ordinary workhouse, where the strict discipline which is necessary in dealing with this class of paupers cannot be effectively applied.

Swinton Schools.

4. The children belonging to the township of Manchester are maintained in the separate schools at Swinton. The schools are of the type known as "barrack schools," but, while each mode of dealing with pauper children has its advantages and disadvantages, the guardians are of opinion that the institutional system is on the whole as effective as any other. A more healthy, cheerful and contented lot of children than those maintained in these schools it would be hard to find anywhere, and with the exception of occasional outbreaks of diseases, which occur amongst children in every description of institution, the general health of the children is all that could be desired.

5. The schools will accommodate about 800 children, and the reports of the periodical visits paid to such of the children as have been placed out in situations show that the schools are doing a good work.

Suggested Amendment of the Poor Laws.

6. With respect to the question of the extension or otherwise of the powers of guardians, I think that it is desirable that such powers should be extended in the direction, for instance, of giving greater power for the detention of workhouse inmates in certain classes of cases and power for the compulsory removal of certain cases to a workhouse, while, with respect to the administration of outdoor relief, I think it advisable that the latitude at present allowed to guardians should be restricted.

7. Indeed, I think if a much stricter supervision were exercised by the Local Government Board over the administration of out-relief, and the powers of that Board could be used to bring into line those guardians who administer out-relief in a lavish manner and without due discrimination, it would be of national benefit; and in this connection I think it would be of great advantage if rules for the administration of outdoor relief on similar lines to those which have been in operation for many years in the township of Manchester were made to apply to all boards of guardians in the country. A copy of these rules is handed in.

8. I would suggest—

(a) That further powers of detention in the workhouse should be given to guardians in the cases of (i.) ins-and-outs, (ii.) feeble-minded women, and (iii.) women suffering from contagious diseases.

(b) That justices should be empowered, on the application of a board of guardians, to direct the compulsory removal to the workhouse of destitute persons who are unable to take care of themselves and have no one to properly attend to them.

(c) That guardians should be required to provide suitable accommodation, apart from the workhouse, for all children in health above three years of age, in whose cases indoor relief is necessary.

(d) That guardians should also be required to provide separate accommodation for deserving aged inmates of the workhouse and to assign special privileges to them.

(e) That no building be opened by any person or body of persons as a shelter or free lodging house for destitute persons, except with the sanction of the Local Government Board first had and obtained.

The Effect of Workhouse Life on the different Classes of Inmates.

9. The Aged and Infirm.—I think there can be no doubt that although somewhat monotonous, the life of the aged and infirm inmates is considerably lengthened by the great care and attention which is bestowed upon them whilst in the workhouse, and although the rules and restraint of personal liberty must be irksome, and, in the cases of persons of good character, the association with inmates whose manners and language are repulsive must be a source of annoyance and discomfort, still they must in many respects be very much more comfortable under the improved conditions to be found in most workhouses than would be the case if they lived outside in a poor neighbourhood, with most probably insanitary surroundings.

10. The Able-bodied.—The effect of workhouse life on the able-bodied inmates must differ considerably according to their character and former life and surroundings. In the case of persons whose one object in life has been to shirk all responsibilities, they are no doubt quite satisfied with being allowed to exist in an ordinary workhouse where strict discipline is not enforced free from care and the trouble of earning their own livelihood, but in cases of persons who have formerly had any feelings of independence or self-respect, the workhouse life must to some extent imbue them with a feeling of degradation and depression, and cause them to look forward to the day when they may be able to shake the workhouse dust from off their feet.

11. Sick Inmates.—The sick poor who are received into our up-to-date workhouse infirmaries must surely be thankful that there are such institutions in which they can obtain medical treatment and efficient nursing. In a large number of cases there seems to be less reluctance to accept relief in this form than was formerly the case.

12. Children.—The effect of workhouse life on children must be most pernicious. Those boards of guardians who still maintain their children in the workhouse should be compelled to provide, without delay, suitable accommodation for them elsewhere at a considerable distance from the workhouse.

Law of Settlement and Removal.

13. To abrogate the law of settlement and removal over the whole country would be unjust to large centres of population and to the principal seaports. At the same time the suspension of this law between neighbouring unions, who may desire it, leads no doubt to considerable economy, and I may here state that the operation of this law has been suspended by mutual consent (except as regards pauper lunatics) as between the three Manchester unions (Manchester, Chorlton, and Prestwich) for a considerable number of years.

APPENDIX No. XLVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. ERNEST S. REYNOLDS, F.R.C.P., PHYSICIAN TO THE MANCHESTER ROYAL INFIRMARY, AND VISITING MEDICAL OFFICER TO THE MANCHESTER WORKHOUSE INFIRMARY.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER

1. I beg to state that for the last sixteen years I have been the (visiting) medical officer of the Manchester Workhouse Infirmary, an institution containing about 1,400 beds for the sick and about 400 beds for lunatics and epileptics. During the same period I have been connected with either one or other of the charitable Manchester hospitals as a physician. I have thus an intimate knowledge of the medical relief in Manchester which is available for the very poorest and also for the poor.

Definitions.

2. By "very poorest" I must be understood to mean the person who is or ought to be in receipt of parish relief, the great majority of whom are quite thriftless. And by the "poor" those who, if sick, attend the charitable (voluntary) hospitals; most of these earn some definite wage and are more or less thrifty, but cannot afford to spend much on doctors' fees and especially for the fees of consulting physicians and surgeons.

3. By "infirmary" I mean the workhouse infirmary; and

4. By "hospital" I mean a charitable or voluntary hospital. My remarks also must be understood to refer principally to Manchester, with which place I am most intimate.

The question of the need of more free medical relief.

5. For the very poorest there is ample relief provided, the Manchester Workhouse Infirmary being never full, and there is in addition another large infirmary for the Manchester district at Withington.

6. But I think that in some way more power should be given to the board of guardians to insist on the removal of sick and destitute persons into the infirmary as at times they are left by their friends or neighbours either unattended or insufficiently attended and in a dying condition because they will not submit to removal.

7. For the poor there is at present not sufficient hospital accommodation in Manchester, with the result that patients cannot be kept in for a sufficient time, and even urgent cases have to be refused admission from lack of room.

8. The result is that not a few poor persons urgently ill or suffering from chronic diseases have to be sent to the workhouse infirmary, and in the majority of these cases this is their first introduction to pauperism and a workhouse life.

9. Much of this unfortunate state of affairs will cease in Manchester in about two years, as a larger hospital containing twice the present number of beds is now in course of construction.

Class of persons resorting to Workhouse Infirmary

11. I should say that the class of persons going to workhouse infirmaries is the same as it was ten years ago; I have noticed no difference either better or worse.

12. There is not much overlapping between Poor Law and voluntary hospitals, as the rules of the voluntary hospitals distinctly state that persons in receipt of parish relief are not admissible. But any person, however poor, is attended to in the casualty department of the voluntary hospital, and if urgently ill is admitted if there is room.

Co-operation between Poor Law and Voluntary Hospitals.

13. Co-operation exists between the voluntary hospitals and the workhouse infirmaries. The workhouse authorities will always remove from the voluntary hospital any urgently sick person for whom there is no room in the hospital; and also such chronic and incurable cases who have been resident for long periods in the hospital and whose friends cannot take proper charge of.

14. Long lasting but curable cases such as some fractures of the legs are sometimes sent from the hospital to the infirmary owing to want of room in the former, but this should be avoided as far as possible.

15. As to the question of whether some general public health authority controlling all aid for the sick, both poor and very poorest, would be better than the present system. I do not think one controlling body for the relief of sickness in these classes would answer in this country.

Question of health authority "for dealing with sickness among the poor and very poorest."

16. The poor are more or less deserving, and therefore will always be proper objects for private charity, and the controlling body will almost necessarily have to be selected from private individuals.

17. But the very poorest are more or less undeserving (taken in a very wide sense) and are not so commonly objects of sympathy; and yet they must be cared for by some one and especially so, as if not looked after they would be a danger to the health of the community.

18. Funds for this purpose must almost necessarily be levied by compulsion from the rest of the community in the shape of poor rates. And it follows that the control of the very poorest must be in the hands of a publicly elected body. This controlling body, moreover, should be the same body which looks after the general interests of the very poorest, whether sick or healthy.

19. Whether it should be a board of guardians or a Poor Law committee of a municipal corporation does not seem to me to matter very much, and the change would only be similar to what has recently occurred in substituting an education committee for a school board.

20. One point in favour of a Poor Law committee of the corporation would be that the same committee might have the control of the infectious disease hospitals. At present these are under the control of the sanitary committee of the corporation and there is a large amount of overlapping with the workhouse infirmary, which might thus be avoided.

21. I do not think the medical officer of health should have any control of the workhouse infirmary, but I think it would be an excellent plan for all hospitals either for infectious disease, for paupers, or for voluntary patients to be required to send a weekly report in some detail to the medical officer of health such as would enable him to judge of the general morbidity of the community.

22. At workhouse infirmaries generally there is an insufficient medical resident staff; there should be more facilities given so that the patients could easily receive the services of specialists. So that on the staff of workhouse infirmaries there should be consulting physicians and surgeons and also medical men specially trained in diseases of women, of the eye, the skin, etc., etc. Medical knowledge is nowadays too wide for any one or two men to cover the whole range of treatment.

General criticism on medical Poor Law relief,

23. As regards the "parish doctors" who visit by order of the relieving officer the very poorest in their homes I think they should still be supervised as at present by the board of guardians (or Poor Law committee). There is no necessity so far as I know for them to be under the control of a head medical officer. Nor do I think these offices should be held for short periods only by more or less recently qualified medical men. For the permanent official can much better get to know the poorest in his district such as apply again and again for medical relief.

APPENDIX No. XLVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MISS MARY STANISTREET, MEMBER AND TREASURER OF BROWNLOW HILL BRABAZON COMMITTEE AND MEMBER OF SCHOOLS COMMITTEE.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

Brownlow Hill.—Brabazon Work.

1. This work was begun in the Infirmary, Brownlow Hill, in 1895, and has gone on steadily since.

2. The work has been done in the wards of male infirmary and in a division of the old women in the House. It has been a great boon to the men, who, when once started in the work, regret any interruption to it.

3. The various occupations—wood-carving, mat-making, frame wool-work, embroidery—depend greatly on the ladies who come to help in teaching the men, as they need much direction and encouragement. Excellent wood-carving was done till the lady who taught it had to leave Liverpool, and no one has been found to take her place.

4. Some men have been able to maintain themselves by the work they learnt during their stay in hospital. One man offered this winter to come and teach the men what had been taught him.

5. The chief difficulty is to get the men to start any work; when started they go steadily on and confess it helps them to have something to do, specially with the chronic cases, giving them "something else to think of" than their own ailments.

6. With the old women, the visit of the lady to teach and read to them is "a break" in the week, and as well as giving them fresh interests, keeps them from "arguing and quarrelling among themselves."

7. All the work is sold at the annual sale and the prices so fixed as to allow a proper value for the work expended on each article.

8. Rewards of tobacco, sweets, papers are given regularly, and a subscription is paid from Brabazon Funds to a Library, each worker being allowed to have a book.

9. There is a representative Committee responsible to the select vestry for the proper working of the Brabazon Scheme.

10. The great difficulty in the work is getting the support and help of ladies who can give a regular time and day to it, and with knowledge and capability of teaching work to others.

Olive Mount.—Cottages Homes.

11. These homes have only been started during the last three years, and now all children (healthy) are sent up to this establishment.

12. Ins and Outs Department.—Here the children are sent up daily from the workhouse and are kept for a period till it is decided which institution they shall be sent to. The Protestants are drafted into the cottage homes, and the Catholics to the various Institutions they are suitable for. There is no "pauper" help; the assistants are responsible for the children under their charge.

13. The Cottages.—Each cottage can accommodate fourteen children, and the "Foster Mother" in charge has the help of a half timer to assist her with work. She is expected to make all do some little thing, and make the life as homelike as possible.

14. There are separate cottages for boys and girls and one for babies, the very young children, who require more individual care; here the "mother" has an assistant, as the children need attention and can give no help.

15. The Committee hope and believe that the cottage home life will assist the children in training them for work and that girls who have taken share in work of their own cottage, will have received good training for service.

16. The Governor lives in one of the cottages, and matron in the Ins-and-Outs Block. The matron is responsible to the governor for supervision of all the domestic work, and visits daily each cottage.

APPENDIX No. XLVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY THE REV. J. B. STOPFORD, M.A., VICAR OF LEESFIELD, OLDHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

Description of a Poverty-stricken District.

1. At one time, 1892–1901, I had a district assigned to me by the Ven. J. M. Wilson, late Archdeacon of Manchester, and Vicar of Rochdale, which gave me ample scope for inquiry into crime and poverty. This district included some of the lowest neighbourhoods in the town of Rochdale, within the boundaries of the ancient parish of Rochdale. Roughly speaking, it contained about 4,000 people. There were eight lodging-houses in the area and some dwelling-houses used as "Furnished rooms." The houses in many of the streets were of a poor type and might be let for 3s. 6d., 3s., and 2s. 6d. per week. Many were "Back-to-back" dwellings. Some of them were situated in dark and unwholesome courts. There were also other better-class houses situated in streets where traffic was considerable, and rents correspondingly higher. There were also eleven enclosed courts where sanitation was imperfect and light and air much needed.

2. A district of this character must of necessity show many cases of chronic poverty, such as old people stranded in their latter days, people of feeble constitution, the frequenters of common lodging-houses, who seldom have regular employment, the weak and drunken family, where there is little knowledge of the higher life and little impulse to it, the idle lad, the unfortunate girl of the lowest class.

3. My memory of the poor of this district is vivid.

Police Court Returns.

One year I examined the police court returns, as given in the files of the local papers, with a view to obtaining information. Ninety separate cases were from this district alone brought before the Local Bench of Magistrates in a year chosen at haphazard. Connected with them were 300 to 400 relatives: children, parents, or more remote relations. They were summoned on such charges as "Drunk and disorderly," "Indecent behaviour," "Stealing," "Using obscene language," "Assault."

4. Let us note that one in forty of the population of our area appeared in the police court in the year under review. Several of those who thus were summoned appeared three times in the year; some, too, had often appeared before, e.g., one was brought up for the ninety-first time, another for the fifty-fourth time, another for the forty-fifth time, others for the fortieth, thirty-seventh, thirty-fifth, twenty-second, fourteenth, eleventh, and fewer times.

Influence of Criminals.

5. The influence of such poor degraded creatures was felt throughout the area. A single man or woman can make life in a court or street intolerable for others; what must be the power of such a number as ninety? Life is poisoned; the moral atmosphere is saturated with evil; crime and sin abound. Can we wonder at it? The public opinion of such streets does not condemn a week or a fortnight in gaol. Is it said without any shame, "So-and-so has gone down for a week."

6. In a town of even moderate dimensions we find such low-class districts well-defined and well-known. From time to time one hears that some family has left their house and migrated. They may generally be discovered in some other like area. The social worker knows where to look; he can guess to what parts of a town they may have gone, and it is only a question of going and searching. I have done this many times. Poverty-stricken and criminal areas are well-known to every social worker, just as well as the fashionable or residential part is.

Guardians' Returns.

7. A study of the guardians' relief returns for the same period and area is as significant as the police court returns. 176 separate cases were relieved; dependent upon these were fifty-six wives and 218 children; total, 448. That is about one in nine of the population.

8. The causes why relief was given were various; the chief was: "No work," "Sickness," "Infirmary," "Husband's neglect," "Fatherless children."

9. "No work" accounted for seventy-five persons. Thirteen of those came before the local bench; eight lived in lodging-houses and may be taken as unworthy; over twenty took drink to excess; eight or nine were young men, strong and able to work. Five received help from the local branch of the Charity Organisation Society. Considering that there were forty-nine undeserving cases and five helpable ones out of fifty-four, may we assume that three or four of the remaining twenty-one would be worthy of help?

10. Again, the cases of relief through sickness numbered thirty-eight. Four of these appeared before the magistrates and thirteen came from lodging-houses; four others were absolutely undeserving from my own observation; nine others applied to the Charity Organisation Society, which relieved four as bona fide cases. Of the remaining cases I question whether three would be fit for relief on Charity Organisation Society principles.

Effect of Outdoor Relief.

11. With results like these I ask myself the question, What effect can outdoor relief have upon the lives and characters of these people? They turn to it for all kinds of reasons.

12. I recall a young man who was out of work for many months and then found employment. He told me one day he thought of changing his work because he could not play football regularly and he wanted to do so. He had had outdoor relief by work at the workhouse, and he knew he could get it again.

13. Or here is a father with five children, who lived in several houses, but always in dark corners where the rent was low. He could not get up soon enough to go to work, and therefore lost his place time after time. He worked for the guardians, receiving relief in food and money. A lazy man like this is never improved by outdoor relief. His children are irregular at school; there they are the dull children in the class. Frequently it happens they attain only to the fourth or fifth standard. The education received is soon lost. The name can be written; we find this out when a boy or girl from such a house comes at eighteen or nineteen to be married: but he cannot read intelligently; words of two syllables are too much for him. Sunday school also reveals this loss of education; and often the reason why Sunday school is deserted is to be found in the fact that efforts at reading call out the derision of some of the other scholars. Far better would it be if the demoralised parent, who is idle, vicious, or drunken, or all three, were refused outdoor relief and the children removed to institutions.

14. Why should there not be State homes for such children, where they can learn trades, have good examples before them, and be taught how to make effort? The lazy father, the poor degraded mother, teach their children lessons which they learn, alas! too quickly. I once knew a father, mother, grandfather and two sons, all sent to prison on one court day for separate offences. Outdoor relief in such cases perpetuates evil and helps to keep up family traditions of ineffectiveness, vice, and drunkenness.

Black Spots.

15. I have often thought that certain streets in our towns ought to have a black mark against them, signifying that no outdoor relief should be given there. Some would even go so far as to say that certain areas should be thus distinguished. There would be some hardship in cases of sudden sickness and of a few old people, but probably the good would far out-weigh the small percentage of hardships.

Old and Infirm.

16. The effect of the present system of outdoor relief upon the old and infirm involves very intricate problems. But probably all will agree that, when given, it should be adequate. Here are two old people, brother and sister, seventy-nine and sixty-six respectively; they live together in a house whose rent is 3s. 6d.; they are allowed 3s. 6d., and 2s. 6d. by the guardians. Their total income is 6s. with 1s. from a sick club; they have therefore 3s. 6d. for fuel, light, food and clothing per week. Fire in winter will cost 10d. and oil perhaps 2d., and there remains 2s. 6d. for food, or 4½d. per day. It would be cruel, people would say, to send these old people into the House; yet their misery is acute, their house and persons are dirty, their life is one long effort to keep body and soul together. The sister has worked in a cotton mill until a year ago, and has kept her brother for a dozen years at least. They have distant relations who help them slightly, but their help is just a dole of a few coppers, or a gift of coals, or some broken meat.

17. Or again, here is another couple, man sixty-nine, woman sixty-one. They live in a house 3s. per week. They are allowed 5s. by the guardians. The man has one arm. They are both uncared for. They do not wash very often, and drag out a miserable existence in a dark house. Now and then they have the exhilarating influence of a pint of beer, which makes them for the moment forget their troubles and trials. Wretched must their lot be. Inside the House they would find warm friendliness, and abundance of food, and soon they would get over the loss of liberty and the difficulty of living by rule. They would be happier every way. Now they look to the weekly relief as the security for rent, fire, and a little food. Their lives never can be bright; gradually they will sink into semi-imbecility. Inside the House they would be freed from care, their lives would open out a little, there would be a possibility of growth.

18. Consider the old widower or widow. Often they live with relations, often in dwelling-houses alone. One knows quite well the old man who has 2s. 6d. or 3s. per week who lives with a son or daughter. If too feeble to attend to themselves, the affection of the children is sorely tested; and yet one is glad to bear testimony to the wonderful self-denial and sacrifice manifested towards the old and sometimes very querulous.

19. In some cases of the most disagreeable and perhaps disgusting illness the old man and woman must occupy the same sleeping room as the rest of the family. I have known cases of cancer where there were two other beds in the same bedroom. This side of outdoor relief is not known because it is difficult for anyone but the clergyman or doctor to know the domiciliary arrangements. Probably the medical officer of health ought to have power of visitation in outdoor relief cases and of making recommendations where necessary.

20. In other cases old parents who live with children find themselves much in the way. Often I have been told by them that they would welcome the end. Compelled to go inside the workhouse, such cases would be happier.

Widows.

21. When a widow is left with four or five young children there is often real hardship. The pittance allowed by the guardians is inadequate. The mother must do something and the children left alone suffer. The older ones become unruly and the house demoralised. On considering such cases one feels that some of the children might well be removed to institutions and the mother aided by voluntary and other workers. But these would have to be earnest, devoted, and persistent. On a large scale there would be need of an alliance amongst the philanthropic and charitable, and a union of workers which England has not yet seen. Why should not experienced social workers take charge of such cases and help them through such organisations as the Mothers' Union and kindred bodies?

22. One such case with which I have dealt lately is worth recording.

The father was employed in a cotton mill and earned about 30s. per week. He was a drunken man and his wife and children consequently suffered sorely. Their home was in a low neighbourhood; the father did not give his wife money sufficient to rent a decent house. The children were—a girl of fourteen years, and boys of eleven, five, and three years respectively. In the autumn of 1905 the father fell ill, and pneumonia supervened; his constitution, enfeebled through drink, could not resist the disease and he died after a few days' illness. A few weeks after his death a fifth child was born. The eldest girl had just begun to work and earned a few shillings per week. Soon, however, a further misfortune came to the family; the girl was found to be suffering from a diseased bone in one leg. The guardians allowed the mother 8s. per week. Here the Mothers' Union hon. secretary stepped in. The mother belonged to the Leesfield parish branch, and the members agreed to allow the mother 1s. per week from their funds, and the Rev. J. B. Stopford, Vicar of Leesfield, supplemented this with 6d. per week. A member of the congregation gave also a bag of coals per week for many weeks. Then the mother found that the eldest boy was becoming very unruly and she obtained the offer for his entrance and that of his next brother to an orphan institution. The girl also obtained entrance into a children's home where her leg is being properly treated. The baby died at Christmas, 1905, and thus the mother was left with one child. She works when she can, and, though not free from care, the appended letter shows how grateful she is. (See Appendix No. XLVIII. (A).)

23. Altogether the cost to this ecclesiastical parish was £4 8s. in money, and much service rendered by the clergy and other workers. The result will be, we believe, that a family will be saved. It should be added that we took care to give the money so that the woman might not be deprived of any portion of parish relief through our charity. It is not unknown for the Poor Law authorities to deduct the amount of help given by private persons from the gross amount they give; so does "red tape" choke sympathy and active work.

Co-operation of Poor Law with Private Charity.

24. The conclusion forced upon me from this and other cases is the necessity of co-operation between Poor

Law authorities and those who help cases of need. At present the Poor Law discourages private charity. And further, their action, I fear, often leads to deceit on the part of those who need relief. The outwitting of the Poor Law official is not regarded as wrong. It is rather praiseworthy and clever. This cannot be a right result of our system.

Outdoor Relief and Relatives.

25. Outdoor relief is accepted by people who would not accept indoor relief. I recall an old man and woman, both over 70 years of age, whose two sons contributed through the Poor Law a small sum weekly. The wife was strong considering her advanced years, and earned a few coppers now and again. The sons, a plumber and a mechanic, would never let their parents enter the House, but they let them nearly starve. They gave what they were compelled, and no more. So the outdoor relief failed to provide adequately and undermined filial love and responsibility.

26. I have known persons in receipt of outdoor relief who live with relatives. Frequently help is given in the home, or in caring for children, or in some other way. Such service is liable to be unrecognised, whereas it ought to be set against board and lodging. In not a few cases a small weekly wage ought also to be given.

27. Outdoor relief destroys self-respect, and I think also often loosens ties of relationship, making relatives careless, because, as they put it, "the guardians will give them something."

Clergy Relief.

28. The relief given by clergy must differ very much in different parishes. In some cases there are doles and small charities which are to be given at Christmas time. In other places nothing of this kind exists. To watch distribution of the Christmas charity is an education in the needs of human nature and the claims that are put forward. Doubtless 2s. 6d. or 3s. 6d. in money at Christmas given to forty old people is a godsend to them at the moment; but we question if the permanent good would not be greater if a pension of 2s. 6d. was given to one person. At this moment I give two pensions under a recent gift and it is certainly simpler for me. Why should not the clergy of parishes be associated with boards of guardians in these cases, and some common adequate scheme be evolved for the cases which bear the strictest investigation?

Old Charities.

29. There are examples of old charities, the schemes of which have been revised; e.g., the Gartside Charities at Rochdale used to provide lengths of cotton and woollen goods for old people at Christmas time. It was found that the articles were in not a few cases turned into money and that the charity missed its object. A new scheme provided for the part-purchase of recommendatory letters for hospitals and convalescent homes; and each year now a large number of deserving cases is thus relieved. One wonders if the schemes of some of the other old charities could not be revised and, while giving the trustees, who are frequently the vicar and wardens, a great voice in distributing them, add some direct representative of local authorities, such as boards of guardians. Such re-arrangement would be called "diversion" by some people, but one feels its urgent character. The difficulty would be that the little patronage involved brings power, and some abuses. There will be always those who can ingratiate themselves with the individual clergyman or guardian and so perhaps obtain more than their fair share of help. This patronage is dear to the English heart.

30. Other vested interests are so many; suspicion in the minds of churchmen so great. The change would demand the diplomatic resources, the tactful policy, the enlightened conscience, and a knowledge of human beings and human nature which politicians and officials do not possess as often as they might.

31. And the clergy would be suspicious and with some reason. I have seen a guardian who was also warden of his parish church distributing relief at Christmas along with the vicar; each of them possessing full knowledge of the cases, for each had lived many years in the village to which I refer. But the vicar was the more just and reasonable, not so much led aside by private considerations, more judicial and judicious and truly sympathetic. In spite of much which is said to the contrary, the clergy are often more really humane in these matters than their fellow lay-trustees; feeling this they would be suspicious.

32. I don't think the elimination of private pressure, which is so much to be desired in the giving of any form of charitable relief, would be greatly forwarded by such schemes. Yet new schemes there must be, and the risk of abuse too. The "good-natured guardian," or the "nice kind gentleman" who is so approachable and so easily swayed by those who know how to deal with him is a great problem. So also is the clergyman who gives out of kindness of heart without knowledge. But the more common type is the guardian, and he does infinitely more harm.

An Absolute Necessity.

33. I should say that the more one looks into Poor Law and other relief, the more one is struck by the insufficiency of the information upon which it is given in large towns. It is not easy to obtain information and relieving officers have much to do besides collect information about their cases. They should be largely increased in number and they ought to have some special training for their work.

34. In this connection I should like to affirm that there ought to be some means of obtaining information rapidly, about applicants for help. There is a large number of well-dressed men and women who travel the country and seek relief from clergy and others. Probably many are impostors, but some must be bona fide cases. There is much casual charity given to such. If there were in every district officers, either directly or indirectly connected with the Poor Law, to which these might be referred with the knowledge that relief and shelter for the time would be offered, there would be much easing of the public conscience. A step forward would have been taken if this information could be obtained, helpable cases aided, and impostors punished.

The Poor Law must be Humanised.

35. When we attract to the service of the poorest and weakest amongst us, the services of the best and most enlightened, much will have been done in this direction. We need all relief given with sympathetic interest and knowledge. We want a guild of social service whose members are inspired with the one desire to help their fellows.

Outdoor Relief much curtailed.

36. Above all other things we must discourage outdoor relief. It is given to unworthy persons. It is accepted by persons whose relatives ought to help them. It fosters lying and deceit. It encourages idleness and unemployableness. It helps to perpetuate a weak race of inefficient persons. It is often cruel to old people. It needs radical reform. When in the few cases it is given it must be adequate and it might then perhaps approximate to an old-age pension.

37. Were some such change with respect to outdoor relief accomplished, I believe that the clergy and all other social workers could be brought into co-operation with the Poor Law, and that private charity and charity as administered by the clergy could all be co-ordinated and correlated.

COPY OF MRS. D.'s LETTER.

6, P— St.,
G—, Kent.

December 12th, 1906.

DEAR MRS. T. (Honorary Secretary of Mothers' Union),—I am sending a line or two for the festive season to wish you and yours with others a very happy Christmas and a bright New Year.

The time passes round and one doesn't always make an effort to write, but I still remember the kindness I received from you and the members of the Mothers' Union. I hope the branch will still continue to prosper and that you will be greatly rewarded for the effort you have made to promote love amongst us. I find it rather a struggle to keep going on, but on the other I am very thankful that I keep fairly well in health.

Edith (the girl) keeps better and is still in the home, and Albert (the eldest boy) is doing fine, I feel quite proud of his writing now. I hear from Miss M., the guardian of Teddy. She tells me he is a thorough good child. Little Jim is growing fine as well. He keeps on chattering all day long and is a bit of company for me.

Give my love to your dear mother and accept the same for yourself and kind regards to Mr. Thorley.

Yours very sincerely,

S. D.

A happy time to every member.

APPENDIX No. L.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY REV. J. WILCOCKSON, HON. SECRETARY, CHURCH ARMY SOCIAL WORK, MANCHESTER AND SALFORD

preliminary.

1. The Church Army commenced social work in Manchester about fifteen years ago, starting with a labour home in York Street, Chorlton-on-Medlock ; this work was afterwards transferred to Upper Brook Street, Chorlton-on-Medlock, and a lodging house added. In 1902 a temporary relief depot was opened in Ogden Street to meet the case of those sleeping-out ; this work was afterwards transferred to 3, Moulton Street, Strangeways, and since continued there. In 1904 another labour home was opened at 34, Smedley Lane, Cheetham. At the present time the Church Army has in Manchester :—

(1) Labour home for twenty-five men at Upper Brook Street.

(2) Lodging home for twenty-five men at Upper Brook Street.

((3) Labour home for twenty-five men at 34, Smedley Lane.

(4) Labour home for twenty-five men at 3, Moulton Street.

(5) Relief Depot for fifty to 100 men at 3, Moulton Street.

Preliminary. 2. Exclusive of the lodgers at Upper Brook Street (who pay for their lodgings and work outside) the Church Army deals with 130 unemployed men daily in Manchester and Salford.

Conditions of employment in the relief depôt. 3. The Church Army rarely gives relief unless a work test has been applied. The usual procedure in Manchester is as follows:—Single men (mostly homeless) apply at the Strangeways Relief Depot, Moulton Street at 1.45 p.m.—the officer takes in as many as he can find beds for (there are seventy-five beds altogether); these are given work at wood chopping or cleaning until five o'clock, they are then given food, consisting of bread and soup. Afterwards the clothes of each man are taken from him and fumigated, a night-shirt being supplied to each one as soon as he has had a bath (every man is compelled to have a bath). Each man is allotted a bed, and can sit and smoke in a room provided, until nine o'clock, if he desires, after which he must go to bed; he is awakened next day at 5.15 a.m. Breakfast, consisting of bread and margarine (or jam) with tea, is supplied. By 5.45 every man must be out seeking work in the district.

4. A ticket is given to each one, entitling him to return to the institution at 2 p.m. on that day and the following day (not more than three days per week); the ticket guarantees work, food and bed for two more days, hence the man need not waste his time seeking coppers for lodgings, but can give his whole energy to seeking out work of a more permanent nature. The men so dealt with are termed "casuals," and get nothing for their work except food, bath, and bed. No questions are asked concerning religious beliefs, and they are not compelled to attend any religious service or meeting.

Conditions of employment in Labour Homes. 5. From the men employed at the relief depôt (the casuals), a few are picked out to receive more extended relief—men who are desirous of further help, or who are too weak to have a chance of getting work under private employers until in stronger condition. These are passed on to the labour homes at Cheetham, Chorlton-on-Medlock, or 3, Moulton Street. There the conditions are somewhat different. The men stay in the homes for a period not exceeding three months; they are engaged generally at wood-chopping, being paid "piece-work" wages. After a week or two it is usual for a man to earn 10s. to 14s. per week. Out of this each man pays 6s. for board and lodging, the balance is usually put in the bank, with the exception of 1s. or 2s. allowed to each one for pocket money. Any man desiring to procure clothing or other necessities may draw on his account in the "bank," and when he leaves the home the balance in hand is paid over to him.

6. Whilst in the home each man has to attend morning prayers, and on Sunday must attend the worship of the denomination to which he belongs—usually the men attend the parish church twice on Sunday—Roman Catholics attending the nearest Roman Catholic Church and bringing back a certificate of attendance.

7. Though no vigorous religious campaign is carried on amongst the men, the officer is expected to influence them by his own personal conduct and living.

Hours of employment and food. 8. In the homes work usually starts about 7 a.m., the men receiving a cup of tea before commencing, from 7.30 to 8.30 a.m. the time is occupied by prayers and breakfast; 12.30 to 1.30, dinner, consisting of hot meat with vegetables; 5.30 p.m., tea, consisting of cake, bread and margarine or jam (occasionally varied with meat or ham, but rarely). On Saturday work ceases at 12.0 o'clock noon. The men have the evenings and Saturday afternoon to themselves, but must return to the home before 9 p.m. The men are not allowed to take intoxicating liquor on pain of dismissal.

Class. 9. On referring to the entry books at the relief depot I find that of the men applying 16 per cent. are usually tradesmen (fitters, carpenters, etc.); 30 per cent. are semi-skilled (i.e., belong to trades which require some little skill though no apprenticeship is required), and 54 per cent. are unskilled labourers.

10. These percentages seem to have held good during the past three years, and though larger numbers may apply, according to the state of trade, yet the "mixture" of those applying seems to always follow the percentages given above.

11. This winter there seems less distress than usual, but nevertheless we have 50 to 100 applications daily which we are powerless to entertain.

12. Though we have never kept statistics of the ability of those to whom we have given work, yet personal experiences of myself and officers agree in estimating the ability of the men as follows:—20 per cent. good workmen (either as tradesmen or labourers), 40 per cent. moderate (some slight moral or physical defect), 40 per cent. bad (vicious, lazy, simple, weak, or old).

13. At the relief depot we give help to any able-bodied men, but no man over forty-five years of age is taken into the homes.

14. The homes exist to give men a chance of returning to ordinary employment, and the chance of reforming a vicious man over forty-five years is so remote that we have to give the vacancies to those more likely. Again, men over forty-five years seem to have a difficulty in getting employment, and we cannot keep them in our homes indefinitely, nor do we care to turn a man into the street when three months have expired; hence we reserve the Homes for men under forty-five.

15. The great bulk of the men applying at the Relief Ages. Depot are between eighteen and forty-five (generally between thirty to forty years).

16. We find that the usual percentage of men who do well after passing through the homes is sixty. Permanent good effects

17. In the case of ex-criminals, who are also taken into the homes occasionally, the record is even better, and works out at about 70 per cent.

18. We receive appreciative letters from time to time from men who have passed through the homes, though usually after a month or two most of them cease to correspond with us, as they perhaps find it more to their interest to bury their past.

19. It is sometimes asserted that wood-chopping by charitable organisations defeats the end in view, that it throws out of employment as many men as it employs, and causes distress amongst the private wood-choppers. This is not true in this district, for during the past three years the demand for chopped wood has enormously increased; like window-cleaning, the supply has created the demand, and in houses in which the men servants had to do the wood-chopping, "charity" chopped wood is now found, even the more respectable class of working-people have ceased to chop their own wood (as they have ceased to clean their own windows). The "charities" obtain orders for chopped wood which would never be given to private traders.

20. We do not claim to increase the facilities for employment (beyond what is stated in the preceding paragraph, "objection to wood-chopping").

21. The good effects of our work are physical and moral—preventing men from becoming unemployable, helping the unemployable back to employable condition, Increase of employment

22. It would seem, from personal observation, that the cause of unemployment can only be stated under a general head, like "Insufficient trade in the country to support the population." This may be due to a great extent, in the first case, to the rush from the country into the towns, and latterly by the employment in the country of labour-saving farm implements devised to meet the scarcity of country labour. Causes of unemployment.

23. At the present time trade is prosperous in this district, perhaps we are as prosperous as we ever shall be; but there is still a large amount of unemployment, and amongst the unemployed 20 per cent. good workmen, 40 per cent. moderate. Unemployment does not depend altogether on men's ability, and it is wrong to assume that capable men can get work if they want it; there is a surplus of labour over the demand.

24. It is impossible to suggest a certain remedy, but, as experiments, afforestation and reclamation of land ought to be tried by the State; the municipalities generally, as Remedies.

shown by their work of the past twelve months, are only able to employ men in work which would have to be done at some other time. Good has been done by the Distress Committees, but only of a temporary nature. Perhaps tariff reform would result in increased employment.

25. My own view is that whatever is tried by State, or municipality, or charity, if it is to do permanent good, must be something which will actually increase the trade of the country or increase facilities for same. The unemployed are lacking work not because they are incapable or vicious, though these are incidents in unemployment and indirect causes, but because there is not sufficient demand for labour.

Work amongst married men.

26. The work of the Church Army in Manchester and district is mostly among men of the "homeless" kind, those who through lack of permanent employment have ceased to have permanent homes; but during the past two winters work has been given to married men who had families to maintain; this was rendered necessary by the inability of the Distress Committees to meet the need, either from lack of funds or inability to provide useful work.

27. Personal observation has led me to infer that the percentages of "class" and "ability" given above in reference to unemployed single men, apply also to married men who have homes and families. Personal experience in connection with (1) Church Army work; (2) parochial labours; and (3) as one of the chief distributors of Lord Mayor Shann's Relief Fund in 1904-5 has led me to believe that relief without a labour test demoralises and pauperises in almost every case (excepting sick and aged), and no amount of inquiry or investigation can separate the worthy from the unworthy, a work test being absolutely necessary.

28. It will be seen from the foregoing that the Church Army deals generally with a class (i.e., homeless and single men) not provided for (under the Workmen's Employment Act) by the municipalities.

Other classes of unemployed.

29. Above, I have referred only to the work of the Church Army and its effect upon the able-bodied unemployed. Whilst acting as deputy-chaplain at a northern workhouse, I came to the conclusion that all the inmates would be happier if some suitable employment was found for each one capable of doing light work. There are many for whom it seems impossible to find work in a town workhouse, and they spend their lives in miserable idleness, at a heavy cost to the ratepayers.

Other classes of unemployed.

30. It might be possible to provide work for every inmate (except the crippled) if the workhouses were situated in the country instead of in the towns. To every workhouse a large farm should be attached. The old couples might be allowed to live in homes, each couple being responsible for the care of a number of poultry or pigs. Many of the old folks living in workhouses at the present time might be profitably employed in poultry and pig-farming. The epileptics also could be found more employment, whilst the children, both girls and boys, could be taught dairy and farm work. The Poor Law guardians would be enabled to provide the cities with a satisfactory milk supply, and also do something to solve the "unemployed" question, if they would provide "holdings" for the youths—to become their own after a few years work. This would certainly be better than emigrating them to work for farmers abroad. It would be the means, no doubt, of bringing back into cultivation, many areas of land now lying idle. Some scheme of co-operation amongst the allotment holders would be necessary, but I am convinced that the scheme would turn many of our pauper children into landowners.

Workhouse reform and suggestions.

31. Every board of guardians ought to have power to elect members of the board, in the same manner as education committees. These co-opted members would be persons who had experience as social workers outside Poor Law administration, and would be able to keep the Poor Law in touch with all phases of destitution and unemployment. At present, men are elected to boards of guardians simply because they belong to some religious or political society rather than because they know anything about the cause of pauperism; though no doubt, after a little experience as guardians, they acquire a knowledge of some phases of the question.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MISS FRANCES ZANETTI, INSPECTOR, CHORLTON BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—LIVERPOOL AND MANCHESTER.

nature of appointment and duties.

I was appointed in February, 1898 as Inspector under the Infant Life Protection Act, 1897, to the Chorlton Manchester and Prestwich Unions.

In October, 1901, I was appointed by the Chorlton Board of Guardians as their inspector. In this capacity it is my duty to visit and inspect—

(1) Children nursed for hire or reward, apart from their parents or adopted for a lump sum paid down and not exceeding £20. (Such children are "nurse children," within the meaning of the Infant Life Protection Act.)

(2) Children chargeable to the Guardians—

- (a) In Schools, Homes and other Institutions.
- (b) Boarded-out within and beyond the Union.
- (c) Boys and girls placed in situations or in domestic service by order of the Guardians.

various systems for maintenance of children.

2. I am of opinion that it is well to make use of more than one system for the upbringing of children chargeable to the Guardians.

3. Roughly speaking there are two classes of children to be considered:

- (a) Normal children.
- (b) Children requiring special treatment

Various systems for the maintenance of children.

4. For the former, I consider, that in the case of a union which has a large number of children to provide for the Cottage Homes system is the most suitable, in that as much as possible the institutional element is eliminated, whilst the colony is directly under the guardians' supervision and control.

5. For the second class of children, comprising the defective, feeble-minded, refractory, and "difficult" I am in favour of placing each child in the environment best suited to its individual needs, and would advocate boarding-out for orphans and for children of vicious parents, special schools for the defective and feeble-minded, crippled, deaf and dumb and blind, training ships for refractory boys, and training homes for girls needing more than average discipline and training.

Various systems for the maintenance of children.

6. Emigration is, I consider, a very useful means of establishing children far away from the influence of undesirable relations.

7. Wherever possible, I am of opinion that children placed out in situations or in homes, should be periodically visited by an official inspector, up to at least eighteen years of age. By this means they are protected against unfair treatment on the part of their employers and receive a fair rate of wages, and also, are prevented from leaving good situations on frivolous pretexts. On the whole, I find that the children do well in their places of service. Since 1900 I have had under supervision 130 girls in service, of whom thirty-five have done excellently, giving satisfaction to their employers and saving money steadily. (One girl, now aged twenty years, placed out in service for the first time in October, 1900, has a sum of £30 to her credit in the Post Office Savings' Bank.) The majority have done well and only eighteen have needed extraordinary care, e.g., removal to a home of a disciplinary character, many of these latter having eventually become well-behaved, and only a small number having persistently refused help.

8. I think it is easier to train girls for domestic service, etc., than to teach a trade to the boys. Our boys are frequently unable to command a standard rate of wages, and I am told by their employers that this is because they practically have to learn every detail of their work. I would like to see technical schools provided for these boys by an amalgamation of unions, the pupils attending the classes to live either in the homes belonging to the unions or in Working Boys' Homes.

9. I should like to see the power of the Guardians strengthened as regards the ins and outs, and the children of tramps and vagrants. Such children degenerate, owing to their undesirable environment when out of the Guardians' care; they derive little good from their short sojourn in cottage homes, etc., and are a real danger to the morality of the other inmates. In my opinion they are the true paupers, who, unless rescued in time, will largely recruit the criminal, pauper and unemployed ranks of the future.

10. It should be permissible for guardians to control up to the age of eighteen years, not only such children as are adopted by them under the Looe Paw Act of 1899, but also those who for a specified time (I would suggest two years, whether continuous or otherwise) have been chargeable to the Union. This would prevent children from being reclaimed, at a wage-earning age, by relatives hitherto careless of their welfare.

Boarding-out within the Union.

11. This system needs revision, children at the present time being usually boarded-out with relatives, frequently grandparents, often too old and too poor to care properly for their charges and apt to regard the money paid to them by the Guardians as a kind of out-relief to themselves, rather than as a sum to be expended for the benefit of the children. Such cases need closer inspection than do those "beyond" the Union, yet the latter are supervised by Local Government Board Inspectors, and the former are not.

Underfed children.

12. I think that the feeding of school children should not be entrusted to the Guardians. The welfare of children is a national question, and any measures calculated to promote it should be the charge of the State. I should like to see meals provided by the school authorities subsidised by the State, for all children attending certain specified schools. This would, I think, obviate distinctions between children in one and the same school of whom some were fed and others not.

Underfed children.

13. As the Act now stands, its provisions apply only to (a) cases in which more children than one under five years of age are nursed or maintained, for hire or reward, apart from their parents, for a longer period than forty-eight hours. (b) Cases in which any child under two years of age is adopted for a lump sum paid down and not exceeding £20.

Infant Life Protection Act, 1897.

14. It is very important that the provisions of the Act should be extended so as to include cases in which one child only is nursed for a continuing payment. My experience has shown that at present five-sixths of the nurse children in Manchester are excluded from the purview of the Act because of the exclusion of the "one child" cases.

15. I have found few cases of wilful neglect and cruelty, but many in which children are subjected to discomfort and danger through carelessness and ignorance on the part of their nurses, who know little of hygiene and the care and management of children and greatly need the instruction afforded by the visits of an Inspector.

16. I have invariably found that the women desirous of doing well by their nurse children do not resent my visits, and I cannot support the suggestion that, were the "one child" cases under official inspection, respectable women would be unwilling to take a baby to nurse.

17. The exclusion from the provisions of the Act of the cases in which a baby is adopted for a lump sum exceeding £20 is a serious menace to infant life. Indeed, as the Act now stands, it affords numerous loopholes whereby unscrupulous persons can receive a baby and treat it as they please, without coming within reach of the law.

18. The Act provides no penalty for failure to notify a lump sum case, beyond the forfeiture of the whole or a portion of the sum of money received with the child.

19. Failure to notify these cases should be distinctly set out amongst the "offences."

20. There is no compulsion on the persons nursing the children to give notice of a change of address.

21. Guardians have power to remove children only when they are maintained on premises dangerous to health.

22. The Act needs amendment as regards all the above mentioned points.

23. I think that the detention of unmarried mothers of babies born in workhouses, would, if feasible, have an important effect on the infantile death rate. The mother herself would derive great benefit from good food and lodging for a few months after her confinement, and the child nursed by its mother during that time would have a better chance of healthy life than if brought up on upon artificial food and left to the care of a baby farmer.

Detention of unmarried mothers in workhouses.

24. Probably before long amendments in the Factory Acts will forbid a woman to work for a longer period than is now specified before and after her confinement, and will thus pave the way for similar legislation respecting women engaged in other branches of work.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY P.P.G.M. MELLOR ADDY, PROV. C. S. INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODDFELLOWS, MANCHESTER UNITY, HUDDERSFIELD DISTRICT.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. My experience of friendly and other self-help societies has been largely confined to the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows in the Huddersfield District or area.

2. We pay over £63 per week for sickness and funeral benefits, the members' subscriptions being from 1s. 5d. to 1s. 8d. per four weeks, according to age at entry. Benefits are 10s. per week for twenty-six weeks and reductions after; £10 at death of member and £5 at death of wife; wages range from 18s. to 28s. per week.

3. By an extra contribution saved from tobacco, beer, football, etc., members of friendly societies may provide a small pension for themselves—four lodges of the Manchester Unity in Huddersfield pay 5s. as a continuous sickness benefit.

4. In our society, we have very few members who apply for out-door relief, but those members of the Manchester Unity and other friendly societies who have applied, have, in Huddersfield, been treated more liberally since the passing of the Out-door Relief Friendly Societies Act.

5. In consequence of the collecting, slate and dividing societies, friendly societies are not and cannot progress numerically as they did say ten years ago.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. J. W. ALEXANDER, MEDICAL OFFICER FOR ARMLEY DISTRICT, BRAMLEY UNION, AND MEDICAL OFFICER (NON RESIDENT) OF UNION HOSPITAL.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I am unable to offer any suggestions as regards administration of the Poor Law except in reference to the working of the Poor Law in the district of which I am Medical Officer, and that only as administered by the Guardians.

2. I think the poor in our district have no difficulty in obtaining medical attendance, as practically anyone in indigent circumstances who applies to the relieving officer can get a medical order. If the medical officer considers the case one for hospital treatment he can immediately order removal to the union hospital, and there has never been any difficulty in getting serious surgical cases admitted to the general infirmary.

3. It is otherwise, however, with monetary relief or relief in kind given as outdoor relief.

The Bramley guardians give more in outdoor relief than many other boards of guardians do, but even then the small allowance they make is almost entirely spent in rent, coal, and light, leaving the barest possible margin for food.

APPENDIX No. LIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. TOM ATKINSON, EX-GUARDIAN, LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. In the Leeds Union very few experiments in Poor Law administration have been made.

2. Some six years ago at the erection of the new tramp wards the policy of keeping in the tramps for two nights was tried and turned out to be very successful. The increase in the amount of allowance for test labour was adopted by the board and was not at all a success, but was more an inducement for those applying to keep on the test books as long as ever the guardians would allow them.

3. Children's Homes. The experiment of scattered homes was adopted by the board and is still continued on the same lines. The views of some of the guardians, including myself, at the time was that the scattered homes are not the best means of bringing up the children that the board have been obliged to adopt. There is too much risk of the children coming in contact with those who are altogether undesirable.

4. The constant changing of the foster-mothers in the various homes is not to the benefit of the children. The homes being entirely left at night without supervision also places too great a responsibility upon the foster-mothers and it leaves the door open for abuse, which is a risk I think the guardians ought not to run.

5. I have no hesitation in saying that outdoor relief should only be given in cases of the really deserving poor, and that the amount which is allowed to-day is far too small. If outdoor relief is given to enable really deserving persons to keep their home together it is not sufficient, in my opinion, that a mere trifle (sometimes 6d. or at the outside 1s.) should be left to them after paying the rent from the amount allowed by the guardians. I know that the stand taken by some guardians is that it is cheaper to give outdoor relief than indoor, but this lets in a class of person for relief who, in many cases, would prefer a small amount and beg the rest rather than do any regular work.

6. My experience while on the board was that the bulk of persons applying for relief were not of the really deserving poor. Married women whose husbands had deserted them; women of not very good character; men under fifty disabled through sickness in many cases arising through their own fault; men thrown out of employment by stress of weather or bad trade, who had never made the slightest provision for it. None of these, in my opinion, should be placed under the heading of deserving poor. I have had more than once, in the sections, men apply for out-door relief who have been connected with trades unions, and admitted that they had lost their situations because they were not capable on account of age of doing sufficient work, and had been offered a less wage, but were obliged to refuse it, because their trades union would not allow them to take less than the fixed wage. These are not cases that should ever come before the Poor Law guardians for relief.

7. The causes of pauperism are, in my opinion, primarily intemperance; if not directly, indirectly; parents losing their work from drink, children leaving home or getting married very early to avoid their wages being spent by their parents in drink and idleness.

8. The operations of the Workmen's Compensation Act has thrown out of employment men who would have been kept at their work if there had not been risks of being liable under the Act.

9. My opinion is that many seek to be returned as guardians more from a desire to be styled a guardian than to do the work of the office. Many are mere units on the board, very few taking any initiative part in the work, voting from a political party standpoint, and especially so when an appointment under the guardians is being made. The chairman, usually a strong party man, uses his position to suit the view of his party, often to the detriment of the service. I have known cases where it has been used, with the help of his political friends, to suit his personal views, and I could give one instance of a very glaring character that occurred during the time I was on the board.

10. The election of ladies on the board is not altogether, in my opinion, an unmixed blessing. With very few exceptions the work is looked upon from a sympathetic point of view instead of from a really business-like point and a desire to carry out the Poor Law. They are apt to give outdoor relief where an order for indoor would be more just. In the provision of materials the ladies have altogether exceeded what was right in buying materials of too expensive a nature. There are portions of the work that can be done by ladies, but, in my opinion, it is detrimental to the whole board if certain members of it cannot take their full part in the work.

11. With regard to the Leeds Union I should certainly say that yearly elections of a third of the board would be a very great advantage. The plan at present is for the whole of the board to retire, which is apt to leave any important work which was just about to be adopted not finished. This has to be done by a new board, who, very naturally, in many cases object to sanction proceedings with which they have had nothing to do and absolutely know nothing about. The consequence has been, with regard to the Leeds Union, that important proceedings have been delayed for many years because of the inability of the board during its short life to get the matters passed through to completion. Again, when the whole board retires as at present, the number of candidates before the elections in some of the wards is so large as to cause confusion. Take Headingley Ward, for instance; the number required is six, which means that the number of candidates for election is twelve and sometimes more.

12. I would suggest that more power should be given to boards of guardians in respect to adopted children. It would be an advantage if they could be boarded out, and thereby removed from the influence of their former associates.

APPENDIX No. LV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. A. BANNISTER, MEMBER OF THE HOLBECK BOARD OF GUARDIANS, LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. This is mostly a working-class district, and the houses are small cottages with rents varying from 2s. 9d. to 7s. per week. We have not very many large works in the place, most of the people work in other parts of the city. What large works we have are clothing factories which employ a larger number of females than males, and a few small engineering and tool-makers' shops.

2. I do not know of any peculiarities or experiments in Poor Law administration in this union except one, and that is we allow more freedom to the old men. This applies to the 1st class only. We allow them out every afternoon when fine, except Sundays.

3. The question of indoor and outdoor relief is, in my opinion, one that ought to have great consideration. Cottage homes for old people ought to be provided instead of forcing them into the "house." The distinctive dress ought to be abolished, more freedom allowed, and the children removed altogether from the workhouse.

It should be compulsory on boards of guardians to make other arrangements, as it is, many boards including Holbeck have a number of children coming into contact with the inmates which is not good.

4. Outdoor relief is not what it ought to be, many guardians instead of giving according to the needs of the case, give according to the age of the applicant. That is that relief committees tie their own hands by fixing the amount to be given by adopting a scale such "as applicants over sixty and under seventy shall have 2s. 6d. or 3s. per week and seventy 6d. or a shilling more." Too often one can hear guardians saying: This is a half-crown case, or a 3s. case. In this union the same thing obtains. This is altogether wrong in principle; if an applicant is considered to be a deserving case, the amount given ought to be sufficient to keep them in food, clothing, and shelter. If we do not give adequate relief we are practically wasting the money that we allow.

5. The class of people applying for relief are widows with children, widows who are too old to work, old men and sick persons, with a few able-bodied men who cannot get work at their ordinary occupations: these are relieved in the test yards.

6. Old age, widows who have been left with families of small children to rear, and men broken down in health constitute the bulk of our outdoor poor here. One thing I have noticed which is responsible for adding to the unemployed is the tendency to discharge men as being too old to work at forty and forty-five. Also the displacing of men by machinery, the introduction of newer and quicker methods of production, are all factors.

7. It is far from the truth to say as some do that pauperism is caused by the improvidence of the workers. As a working man, living and moving among them, and knowing all their habits. I repudiate such statements. Insecurity of employment is one of the contingencies with which working men and women are faced, along with other things which I have mentioned. A workman however thrifty he may be has got little left to provide for old age when he can no longer work.

8. Business men, retired tradesmen, property owners, and a few working men (who are however in the minority), form the class of persons seeking election as guardians.

9. Outdoor relief is only granted to persons who can satisfy the guardians that they have not brought about their poverty by their improvidence; if unable to do so they are given an order for admission to the House.

When relief is given the maximum amount is 3s. 6d., except in a special case which gets 6d. more. All applications are investigated by the relieving officer who reports on each case to the board.

10. I think it is desirable to make an alteration in the law with regard to orphan children. Where there is an elder brother or sister willing to look after the younger children, guardians should be allowed, if necessary, to give relief; but as the law now stands, help can only be given by boarding-out or placing them with strangers. In my opinion this is wrong. I have known cases where this has occurred, e.g., a sister was keeping the home together and wished to look after her younger brothers, but was unable to obtain assistance because the law said, no. On the other hand if they had been placed with strangers we could have given relief. I think an alteration in this is required.

11. Relief by loan or purchase is desirable. A case we have here will show more clearly what I mean. We have a man on our books doing test work now who has earned a living for years by hawking (he is a cripple with one leg). Having the misfortune to lose the horse which carried his goods about, and not being able to buy another we have to allow relief for himself and wife, whereas if we had been able to buy him another horse, he would have been earning his living as usual. If guardians had discretionary power in matters like these it would be a boon to many poor men and to the unions where such cases arise.

APPENDIX No. LVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY ALDERMAN BROADBENT, HUDDERSFIELD, CHAIRMAN OF HEALTH COMMITTEE OF TOWN COUNCIL, ETC., ETC.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. My actual experience has been limited to municipal administration, and I am not competent to give actual experience on the work of the guardians of the poor, nor to any great extent on voluntary work.

2. I have been aware of some overlapping between the Poor Law authority and the municipal, chiefly in connection with small-pox and vaccination.

3. I should not be prepared to advocate the concentration of all medical relief to one authority. The voluntary work in hospitals and dispensaries is carried out so thoroughly and efficiently that it would be, in my judgment, dangerous to interfere with it. That the municipal and Poor Law relief might be combined with advantage is exceedingly probable.

4. So far as my own personal knowledge extends, I think at the extremes of life, in the case of the very aged and in that of the very young, there is evidence of the insufficiency of medical assistance now available. I have known cases, especially of infants and very young children, where medical assistance would have been of very great value, but there is little or none from any quarter that is available.

5. Speaking generally, there has been found to be a very great reluctance on the part of parents to call in medical advice for very young children. The question of expense is undoubtedly one reason for this reluctance; but apart from this, there is a fixed opinion expressed often in the words "Doctors are very little use for babies." It has been one of the direct objects set before our voluntary health visitors to remove this impression and to urge upon parents the advisability of calling in medical advice even in what may seem to be the slight ailments of their children. It does not seem ever to occur to even the poorest class of parents to call in the Poor Law medical officer, and I think I am not exaggerating when I say that the ordinary working man would resent any suggestion in that direction.

6. In the very short period during which the Huddersfield Corporation have had qualified ladies under the Health Department, there have been ample indications how extremely valuable the services of these qualified ladies would be if available, not only for the first days after birth, but for the benefit of infants a little older and for young children.

7. We had not originally intended them for this work but rather for the giving of skilled advice to mothers immediately after birth so as to secure breast-feeding as much as possible; but it was found by our voluntary visitors that there were numerous cases where medical advice was needed but not called in, and accordingly our qualified lady doctors are gradually being more and more called for by these cases. This evidently is meeting a distinct want and is being more and more appreciated by the mothers, by the voluntary visitors, and by the lady doctors themselves, and that without any interference with ordinary medical practice. It was very unfortunate that this natural evolution was interrupted by a change in the personnel of our lady doctors. This temporary difficulty was soon removed, and the work of the lady doctors is rapidly growing in public appreciation and demand.

8. At the commencement there had been a fear that the visits of the staff of the Health Department might be resented. This has hardly ever been the case; on the contrary there has rapidly developed on the part of many mothers a demand that the lady doctors shall visit. The advantage of skilled advice from a woman, after even so short a trial, has been so obvious to those most concerned that during an unavoidable and temporary withdrawal of it there were frequent complaints. The public demand is now being most effectively met. The great value of this medical aid in the case of infants seems to be two-fold: the advice as to feeding very frequently results in great improvement to the infant's health where there is little danger of death. But the value is further seen from a consideration that has been enforced by actual experience. There arise crises in the first few months of life which, though of short duration, determine the life or death of the infant. The voluntary visitors find that such help and advice as they can give at these critical times turns the balance. Often the voluntary visitors can render such aid, but when reinforced by the qualified and experienced advisers from the Health Department, the help becomes much more effective.

9. It is perfectly certain that were such skilled medical advice—especially from qualified women—available, and at hand for infants, there can be no doubt that it would be greatly appreciated and used, and would tend to the preservation of life: there would naturally follow as a necessary corollary increase of health and physical well-being in all the children.

APPENDIX No. LVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. F. BUCKLAND, INSPECTOR UNDER THE NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN, LEEDS BRANCH.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I am of opinion that recipients of out-relief are encouraged to apply for charity.

2. The fact that a person receives relief from the rates acts as a recommendation for public charity, because it is assumed that the case has been adequately inquired into and is deserving.

For instance, a man with wife and four children applies for relief, which is given in the form of test labour. He is paid for that labour, part in money and part in food.

The man often finds this to be insufficient to support himself and family, the result being that the wife and children resort to begging. Finding that they can then manage to eke some kind of existence, it invariably happens that the parents lapse into an indolent and thriftless life.

3. I am also of opinion that the number of relieving officers in Leeds is not sufficient to cope adequately with the work, that it is impossible for the circumstances of each case to be properly inquired into and to procure independent testimony relating to the cases. The average number of cases per day to be dealt with by a relieving officer does not admit either of time for investigation of these cases, or for adequate supervision of the existing cases of relief.

4. I would respectfully draw the attention of the Commission to the following state of affairs, that in my opinion requires legislation. That is the liability of the parents of illegitimate children which become a charge upon the rates.

5. The present law does not touch the reputed father of such children except an order is obtained upon the evidence of the mother, which order can be obtained by the guardians if the children become chargeable.

6. Cases have come under my observation where a man and woman not legally married cohabit and raise a family. In such cases it is seldom that proceedings are instituted by the mother, because the father as a consequence of any such action on her part would probably leave her and the children.

7. The mother can only obtain an order in these cases. Should the woman die, the father is immune from proceedings, and if the children become chargeable to the rates, no action can lie against him, and he cannot be compelled to maintain them.

8. Several such cases have come under my notice, of which the following are two examples:—

(a) W. W., a miner, able to earn 48s. per week, cohabited for upwards of seventeen years with J. R., a single woman, and as the result of that cohabitation there were eight children, aged respectively, sixteen, fourteen, nine, eight, six, three years, fourteen months, and baby three weeks. The woman died from neglect at her last confinement. After the interment W. W. absconded and left the six younger children chargeable to the rates.

(b) W. O., a painter, earning good wages, cohabited for sixteen years with A. O., a single woman, and as the result of that cohabitation there were three children, aged respectively, thirteen, ten, and eight years. The man obtained work at Durham and sent the woman for upwards of six months 16s. per week for the children's maintenance. The woman was found to be mentally deficient, and unable to manage her affairs and the children. The man was appealed to respecting this. He at once stopped the maintenance, and the result was the woman and three children were removed to the union, and became a charge upon the rates.

9. This does not seem to me a proper thing, as the father escapes the penalty of his own wrong-doing. I am only able to point out these matters, but am not in a position to say what form the legislation should take.

10. With reference to the question of the extent of co-operation between charity and Poor Law and the possibility of its extension, I cannot see that, on the present system, the functions of the Poor Law and charity societies can be much altered. The Charity Organisation Society and the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children work in harmonious co-operation with the Poor Law officials.

APPENDIX No. LVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. J. W. BULMER, MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF GUARDIANS, HUNSLET UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The social and industrial conditions of the union are somewhat varied. In the district in which I reside the occupation is largely mining, which is very hazardous and dangerous, and which brings about to a certain extent premature old age.

Miners' earnings fluctuate very much.

2. Indoor relief in the Hunslet Union is relatively good.

3. Outdoor relief is given sparingly and in most cases is very inadequate. Examples :—

An Aged Couple, aged seventy-six and seventy-four respectively, never had children—saved a little money and finished it before applying for relief. Granted 7s. per week.

This amount is to pay rent, provide food, clothing, fire, and light. Many similar cases. 8s. is the most given in any case.

Deserted Wives.—The policy of the board is to refuse out-relief to deserted wives with less than two children, in fact, however good may be the character of the woman, no deserted wife is granted out-relief without her case being fully dealt with by the whole board. This no doubt is very harsh, and often drives women to follow immoral lives before going through what appears to them such a trying ordeal.

Widows.—It is customary to give relief of 1s. 6d. per head per week for children, and nothing to the mother if she is able-bodied, e.g., a widow left with six children, ranging from twelve to two years of age, received 9s. per week relief. Whole time occupied in attending to home and family. Impossible to live a decent life on such a meagre allowance. This is a direct incentive to immorality. Cases of which I have seen similar in my experience as a Poor Law guardian.

4. The causes of pauperism are :—the advancement of machinery which has displaced hand labour, and been the means of swelling the ranks of the unemployed ; irregularity of employment ; low wages resulting from the competitive system ; drink and gambling. The latter of which is largely on the increase in this union, and it is to be sincerely hoped the new Betting Act will do something to retard the progress of this evil.

5. I offer no suggestion in the reform of the Poor Law, as I believe the whole machinery should be abolished on economical grounds. In our own union the total cost per head is 14s. 6·5d. for those in the house. This is very costly and in my opinion it could be done much cheaper, more efficient and more humanitarian in other ways, e.g. :

(a) By a system of old age pensions.

(b) By the establishment of labour colonies for the able-bodied.

(c) The county and county boroughs to become the authority to erect almshouses, cottage homes, hospitals, and asylums.

(d) The granting of out-relief to be in the hands of the local sanitary authority.

(e) The receipt of relief in any form should not pauperise nor disenfranchise any person.

APPENDIX No. LIX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY REV. W. J. COLE, VICAR OF THE PARISH OF ST. MARY'S, SHEFFIELD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. In Sheffield there are several sets of almshouses, built and maintained by private benefactors which give not only comfortable rooms to the persons admitted, but also a liberal weekly allowance :—

(a) Shrewsbury Hospital, with dwellings for twenty men and twenty women, together with an allowance of 7s. weekly to sixty pensioners.

(b) Hollis Hospital at Whirlow, accommodating sixteen poor widows.

(c) Firth's Almshouses, containing forty-eight persons who receive 7s. weekly or 10s. per married couple.

(d) George Woofinden Almshouses, accommodating eighteen persons.

The Effects of these Charities.

2. With regard to the almshouses and the helpful pecuniary allowance given therewith, the people thus befriended are saved from the workhouses in their old age. Into the rooms allotted them they bring their own furniture and so keep around them the hallowed associations of their former homes. None but the most deserving are admitted into these almshouses, and therefore one never hears of any abuse. The effect is in every way beneficial ; while the existence of such charitable places is certainly a saving to the rates.

3. With regard to the charities specified above and administered by trustees, they help many persons who make no parade of their impoverished circumstances and who would not be disposed to accept Poor Law relief. Some of these grants reach as high a figure as £25 per annum and have proved a perfect Godsend to deserving and destitute people, enabling them to keep a home over their heads. Where the amount is only £10 per annum and distributed among widows these charities have been a precious boon, for when such an allowance has been further supplemented by relatives it has been possible to keep such cases off the rates.

In the possession of such charities Sheffield is specially favoured and fortunate.

4. Where the help given is substantial and equal to the needs of the case the effect on the recipient has been pecuniarily and morally beneficial. But where the dole is small, as with some of the Sheffield charities, I fear that not much good is done. "Multum" rather than "multa," assisting a few persons adequately rather than disbursing the same amount of money among the many, would be far more fruitful in its results. The same is true of Church charities. When a deserving case is liberally helped, gratitude is called forth and the person put once more upon his feet, but where ordinary relief tickets are given out, small in value though many in number receiving them, the effect is not altogether wholesome.

5. The distribution of Church charity leaves much to be desired. It is rarely adequate, because where the needs are greatest there the resources are often least. It is isolated and therefore likely to cause overlapping and sectarian rivalry. "Where," says Francis Peabody with some truth, "do hypocrisy and fraud find so many credulous victims as among the pious? Who are so emotional in their philanthropy and so hard to convert to self-restraint and to scientific methods as the religious people? Where does divided effort so often duplicate relief and encourage deception as in the schismatic generosity of the divided Church?"

6. When the clergy, after personal investigation, relieve cases of sickness the effect upon the recipient is generally beneficial, but to scatter relief tickets to other applicants is frequently to breed the spirit of the parasite and of the hypocrite. I should like to see those distressed persons who are not in personal touch with any of the churches, dealt with by a central committee so that overlapping and deception might be avoided. The clergy have had little or no training in the administration of relief. What they have learnt has been acquired in the school of experience, where the tuition fees were somewhat heavy.

The Effect of Poor Law Relief.

7. Speaking of Sheffield I am only too pleased to testify to the humaneness and tender consideration shown by the guardians. Recipients have been loud in their praise for the kind way in which they have been treated.

8. I should like to see the Poor Law methods amended in these directions:—

(a) More money distributed in outdoor relief and less upon the upkeep of the workhouses themselves, more spent in relieving destitution in the homes of the poor and less upon bricks and mortar.

The so-called "workhouse test" requires modification. Instead of asking destitute people to come into the "house" might they not be a little more encouraged to keep outside by the assistance of outdoor relief? I urge this, first on grounds of economy, and secondly for moral reasons. Once admitted, the spirit of self-reliance and of self-effort is likely to suffer from atrophy, whereas help given during a period of distress might tide over the time of misfortune and stimulate them to help themselves.

(b) Take the case of a widow who has only a married daughter. Her son-in-law is not legally bound to maintain her. He however offers her a shelter, but as his weekly wage is not high he asks her to contribute something towards her keep. She applies to the guardians. They refuse to grant her outdoor relief and instead offer to receive her into the union. Surely that is unwise, unfeeling and uneconomical!

(c) The promiscuous herding of all sorts of people in the wards of a workhouse is most injurious, and feeds the very evil that the Poor Law system is meant to cure. I should like to see a discrimination of classes so as to preserve the less fortunate from the contaminating influences of others who are now to be found in the same ward.

I have visited old people in workhouse hospitals who, through no fault of their own, have had to seek admittance. Many of them had refined tastes, spiritual ideals, and yet were placed in wards where they had to herd with others whose nature was coarse and whose language was revolting. When such persons are able to walk about they can to some extent avoid uncongenial company, but when they are stretched upon a bed of chronic sickness they have no escape.

(a) Another hardship. When a man is visited by the Poor Law medical officer he can receive medical attendance and medicine without being disfranchised. When, however, he is admitted as an in-patient into the workhouse hospital he loses his vote as a citizen. This deprivation is peculiarly harsh and for this reason. The local hospitals, either through their abuse or through lack of accommodation, are unable to receive every deserving case. The man must either be content to stay at home, where his speedy recovery is handicapped, or he must go into the union hospital, where he has a better chance of regaining his health. Should he adopt the latter course, which from every point of view save that of franchise is the wiser one, he must lose his vote. In Sheffield the working man is very jealous—and naturally so—of his privilege of citizenship. Rather than be disfranchised he will stubbornly resolve to stay at home for medical treatment even though it may mean delay and discomfort to himself and family. Voluntary hospitals in their accommodation are not keeping pace with the increase of population. Hence the point of hardship to which I have alluded.

9. One can only hope for closer co-operation between charity and the Poor Law when the former is more properly systematised and distributed through some central agency. If this were done and a register kept to which the guardians might have access, not only would overlapping be avoided, but frequently it might happen that these charities could take over cases now relieved by the Poor Law and so increasingly the one could displace the other.

10. The possibility of substituting charity for out-relief seems only possible by the bold introduction of the Elberfeld scheme or by an adaptation thereof. Such an adaptation, and with cheering results, is now being worked in Bradford, Halifax, Bolton, and Eccles. Sheffield has just launched its Guild of Help on similar lines. In this direction lies some hope that by the co-ordination and wise use of charity its power for good will be increased and its injurious tendencies checked. The Sheffield Guild of Help does not intend to quiet the restless and indigent poor by the anæsthetic of relief, but rather to quicken the discouraged life by friendly personal sympathy and timely succour. It is an attempt to substitute relief by love instead of relief by law, as will be gathered from the following objects:—

(i.) To deepen the sense of civic responsibility for the care of the deserving poor and to promote through personal service, a neighbourly feeling among all classes of the community.

(ii.) To provide a friend for those in need of help and advice; to make it easier to discover the deserving poor, and to render it more difficult for the idle and undeserving to trade upon the charitable impulses of the public.

(iii.) To discourage indiscriminate almsgiving by private persons, inasmuch as it tends to perpetuate the evil it is intended to remedy; and to organise methods whereby the generosity of such persons may be wisely directed.

(iv.) To co-operate with all existing charitable agencies in order to prevent overlapping.

(v.) To arrest the inroads of poverty in order to prevent the poor from sinking into destitution and to ensure, so far as possible, that the home of no deserving family shall be broken up.

(vi.) To encourage the needy in efforts towards self help, and to aid such efforts by friendly counsel and personal assistance.

(vii.) To consider the causes of poverty in the city and to bring influence to bear, through public bodies or by private effort, so as to effect their removal.

11. The success of this scheme depends, not so much upon money, as upon the men who will volunteer as helpers and in whom is the spirit of social service, patriotic citizenship, and true charity. Through these helpers the guild will become a clearing house for cases of genuine distress, transforming spasmodic and thoughtless charity into well directed channels, arresting poverty in its initial stages so that it shall not slide down into chronic destitution.

12. The charm of the Guild lies in the fact that its operations will be carried on almost entirely by voluntary agents—a feature worthy of encouragement and development. Instead of the relieving officer, mechanical, official, in his uniform of red tafe, there will now be the voluntary helper whose aim it will be to interest himself personally in the case brought under his notice, and catch the family before destitution.

13. Between the suburbs and the slums there is to-day a gulf, bridged over indeed by cheque charity, but which too often intensifies the misery it longs to alleviate. A more effective bridge is that of personal service which, if properly constructed and utilised, might do much to prevent many hapless people from coming on to the rates as recipients of Poor Law relief. The Guild of Help has been formed to call forth this personal service with a view of offering the wisest assistance to the multitude ready to perish. How far it is likely to succeed is borne out by the experience of Bradford where, after one year's trial, the unanimous testimony was this, "amply justified; far beyond the expectation of the most hopeful."

14. The city of Sheffield is now divided into ten divisions with its divisional chairman; each division into ten districts with its district chairman; each district into ten or more sub-districts under the personal care of a helper who will visit the people in his own sub-district.

APPENDIX No. LX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. WALTER COLEMAN, MASTER OF THE LEEDS UNION WORKHOUSE.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. Leeds is a big manufacturing centre—the largest proportion of its people being factory workers. The wages of the labouring classes are not very large; and, owing to the ebb and flow of trade, many are thrown on the rates.

2. I find that the average age of persons entering the workhouse is about fifty years.

3. Take a case of this sort: A large fire occurs at a large factory—the hands are at once thrown on their own resources: this of itself causes many to come on the rates.

4. I think in most cases the workhouse should be offered to applicants for relief, but unless under the circumstances described in the next paragraph, no person should be forced into the workhouse; the relieving officer should watch each case closely, especially after the first application—to note the real necessities of the case. In all cases where out-relief is resorted to, it should be more adequate, and not the small sum which is often given, viz., 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d. These sums obtain in most cases, but each should be judged on its merits.

5. I think the guardians might have power to cause persons to enter the workhouse where it is shown they have no one to look after them, even if out-relief is granted.

6. Generally speaking, the class of persons applying for relief are widows, widowers, single women and single men—the first-named through the loss of the breadwinner, and being thrown on their own resources; the second, in consequence of their being broken down in health, their mode of living, and their not being able to look after themselves. Single women often become paupers through having illegitimate children; others are of weak mind and are not capable of looking after themselves. Single young men also become paupers through bad health and general debility.

7. Intemperance, laziness, Compensation Act, keen competition in trade and stress of modern life whereby the weakest go to the wall, and the "too old at forty" theory, are the chief causes of pauperism.

8. In my opinion there has been a deterioration in the class of members of boards of guardians in general; this has been especially the case since the passing of 1894 Act, under which the persons who seek election are not subject to any rateable-value qualification.

9. In my opinion all the Local Government Board Orders should be consolidated, and put into more simple form; they should be brought up to date or made more elastic.

10. A law should be made to prevent guardians resigning their positions in order to apply for appointments under the same board.

11. The heads of the Poor Law service should be appointed only by the Local Government Board by promotion on the grounds of merit, capabilities and experience; this would stop out-siders who have had no experience in the management of a workhouse or infirmary being appointed to any responsible position.

12. The administration of workhouses should not be left to the caprice of the guardians; this should be placed more in the hands of the inspectors and master. I firmly believe in governing an institution by tact and common-sense.

13. One thing should be delegated to the master, especially in the larger unions—power to give to inmates leaving the house clothing and food to meet the circumstances of the case, as a man with shabby and worn-out boots and clothes stands no chance of getting employment. Furthermore, if necessary, genuine cases should be allowed out at 5 a.m., to enable them to start work first thing in the morning.

14. Guardians should be compelled to put up separate married quarters for old deserving couples.

15. The proper classification of inmates to be put into force, viz., first, second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth; generally to keep the good from the bad, and this to a large extent would be done if the workhouses were large enough for the purpose. I fear, however, such could not be done without a great outlay on the part of the guardians; and this many of them decline to undertake or be parties to.

16. The guardians should be granted power to detain in workhouses simple-minded women who are unable to take care of themselves outside.

17. The admission tickets to the workhouse, issued by the guardians and relieving officers should be for a period only, viz., 7, 14, 21, and 28 days. No one should be allowed to stay in the workhouse for months and years, "without seeking employment" as they do at present. Of course there will be exceptions to the above.

APPENDIX No. LXI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. ARTHUR COOK, CHAIRMAN BOARD OF GUARDIANS, BRAMLEY UNION, LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The Bramley Union consists of both industrial and agricultural classes. There are various kinds of trades, including engineering, manufacturing, brick works, etc., and consequently we have a great number of the labouring and poor classes. Having had a depression in the building trade for some time, we have had a great number out of employment, some only temporarily, whom we have had to relieve one way or another.

2. To meet the different classes of persons applying for relief we have tried several kinds of test labour, including wood-cutting, digging, etc., and by this means we have been able to find out the bona-fide workman. As a guardian I am of the opinion that there should be two distinct methods of administration, one for the bona-fide applicant and one for the indifferent.

3. I would strongly advocate out-relief to the deserving poor and to those who have been overtaken by misfortune through no fault of their own.

4. With regard to indoor relief, there ought to be two distinct methods of administration, one for the deserving and one for the ne'er-do-well and those who may become applicants through wasting their earnings in many ways.

5. The classes of persons applying for relief are aged poor (both sexes), persons who are not old but cannot get work, persons who are not strong physically and therefore cannot get work.

6. The chief causes of pauperism are indolence, drink, feeble-mindedness, and misfortune in business.

7. The class of persons seeking election as guardians are retired business men, tradesmen (various), persons desirous of seeing the rate-payers' money properly spent, and the poor cared for.

8. The relief given in this Union varies from 2s. 6d. to 4s. each to the deserving, to the able-bodied test work, half money and half kind, amount allowed according to each case.

9. I desire specially to bring forward the following recommendations :—

(a) That labour colonies should be established and placed under the control of the State, to which the habitual vagrants should be committed.

(b) That grandparents should not be liable for grandchildren.

(c) That a law should be passed whereby boards of guardians should have power to grant assistance in respect of children who have been left orphans and whose relatives will undertake the charge of them.

APPENDIX No. LXII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. S. COOPER, RELIEVING OFFICER OF THE BRAMLEY UNION, LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. My district comprises the New Wortley and Upper and Lower Wortley districts of the Parish of Armley and Bramley. At the census of 1901 the population was 27,000; 1,013 acres. The New Wortley district is practically taxed to its utmost limits, so far as housing accommodation is concerned, and certain areas therein are overcrowded to a considerable extent. The people are, generally speaking, of the artisan type, but in the congested areas they are improvident and unthrifty. With regard to the Upper and Lower Wortley districts, the same remarks apply comparatively, although there is much more vacant land and consequently greater facilities for building more dwelling houses.

2. There are several very large works in and about my district, viz., engineering, forges, cloth and woollen mills, boot factories and a few ready-made clothing houses. The people employed in these works however, do not for the most part reside in my district, the better class of artisans having removed to better class districts, good electric car service helping this matter considerably.

3. There are not, to my knowledge, any peculiarities, neither have there been any experiments in Poor Law administration, i.e., so far as outdoor policy is concerned.

4. Outdoor Relief.—If judiciously administered, can be made a great factor for good amongst the poorer classes of people, otherwise it is most pernicious in its effects, having a tendency to supplement wages, displace independent labour and produce indolence, giving no incentive to individual effort, but rather destroying any that exists.

5. Deserving cases to which adequate relief should be given, represent but a very small number on my list. I generally find deserving cases are reluctant in making applications for relief.

6. Indoor Relief.—The workhouse order should, very much more frequently be made the true test of destitution. Many able-bodied men have been receiving out-relief continuously for over twelve months, whereas I am confident if the workhouse order was offered, it would be promptly refused and the men would endeavour to get other work. Indoor relief acts as a deterrent to a greater extent than out-relief. Workhouse orders would be refused but out-relief taken without any hesitation.

7. The majority of the people who apply to me for relief are indolent, unthrifty, shiftless. As previously stated there are a few deserving cases where every endeavour has been made to make provision for themselves and dependents, but without success. Many of the old people who apply for relief appear to think and even go so far as to say that, having paid rates for so many years, they are entitled by age, etc., to relief, irrespective of their general financial condition, practically treating the Common Fund as a sinking fund or bank.

8. A good many people, e.g., a son-in-law and wife take an old person (wife's mother) to reside with them; they both go out to work and the mother who is also receiving relief, does the household duties. The ratepayers are thus practically providing for these persons a servant, who is also helping to keep out of employment probably a young widow.

9. Young women with one or two children apply for relief at very first opportunity, making no attempt whatever to provide for themselves.

10. I have taken notice of the relationships of paupers and find that several families in receipt of relief are related to one another. This may be attributable to the fact that when children see that parochial relief is received by their parents without the least compunction, they consider it a certainty to fall back upon in later life or at any time of trifling misfortune.

11. I find the people in the congested areas to be the most improvident. Even when only in receipt of a very small allowance of out-relief and having nothing else whatever to depend upon, they spend a good proportion of it in drink.

12. In the centre of the city of Leeds much slum property has been demolished and new property put up at enhanced rents. Consequently the slum dwellers have been made to seek dwellings to suit them. In the vicinity of the gasworks, New Wortley, the rents of houses are very low, owing to the unhealthy surroundings, etc., and a good number of the persons mentioned have come to live here. In some cases a whole family live in one room, no attempt whatever being made to separate the sexes.

13. Drinking if not directly, is indirectly, the cause of much pauperism. In the congested parts drinking places and off beer licenses are numerous and there is therefore a great deal of temptation to drink. I have found by night visiting that many of the recipients of relief are indeed heavy drinkers.

14. Indiscriminate Charity is most baneful in its effects and its almoners by not making any or sufficient enquiries destroy their object, because instead of helping the poor to help themselves, they really teach them to always look to others for support.

15. The clergy in this locality are most generous, but very few enquiries are made by them in my opinion. I have frequently conferred with them and the Charity Organisation Society in cases which I found were endeavouring to obtain assistance from all quarters. Some means whereby lists might be exchanged would be beneficial in putting a stop to a lot of overlapping. I have expressed this opinion to the Society and offered at all times to render any assistance I could, but up to now no action has been taken.

16. This district was in a very bad state four years ago when I took it over—over 500 paupers on weekly list and out-relief £52 to £56 weekly; now this week the numbers are respectively 370 and £40 to £45.

17. I have had to persistently visit and make enquiries, as much depends on a constant watch on doubtful cases. The greater part of the "Cross and Catch" visits have been made during the evening. Better results would be shewn if the congested area of New Wortley were given to one relieving officer who would spend his time exclusively there.

18. The board of guardians is composed for the most part of retail tradesmen who have shops in the districts they represent. There are also two or three rather large employers of labour.

19. There is no system applied to the administration of out-relief in this union. Each case is supposed to be taken on its merits.

20. I think that where relief committees dispose of applications for relief if the guardians of one district were to hear the cases of another district, and vice-versa, there would be more impartiality in the consideration of cases than at present prevails, owing to the personal interests, etc., of some guardians.

21. The spirit of the Poor Law, if strictly administered, would be somewhat of the nature of a palliative to the further increase of relief. That is to say, the condition of the pauper should not be made in any way better than that of the poor but independent class of person.

22. The distinction between what should be the position of the pauper, and what should be the lowest mark of independence, is very fine, but a bona fide attempt to adhere to the strict principle would undoubtedly result in much good.

23. It appears to me that, under certain circumstances, guardians should be able to compel the following persons to go into the workhouse: viz. (1) The old and infirm, who have no one to attend to them and who live alone; (2) a young widow with family, who has been refused out-relief on account of immorality or any other serious matter, when workhouse order has been granted but refused. Under present conditions great responsibility rests upon the relieving officer in such cases.

24. With regard to boards of guardians I think that a higher qualification should be necessary before election. Since the advent of the more democratic element relief has been considerably on the increase. A longer term than three years is necessary in my opinion, to enable a guardian to become intimate with the administration of the Poor Law.

25. Under the present system, it seems to me, a member or members are just becoming qualified to act with knowledge and tact when their term of office is about to expire, and therefore I would suggest five years at least as the length of time to hold office.

26. The Central Authority should control the matter of officer's salaries as great discrepancies exist under the present system, which appears to be most unfair in a great number of cases.

27. A more uniform system of payment for work done would be most acceptable to many.

28. Offices should be provided for relieving officers, especially in low class districts. Their work should not be done at their residences.

APPENDIX No. LXIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. GEORGE M. CROWTHER, CLERK TO THE GUARDIANS OF THE BRADFORD UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The Bradford Poor Law Union is entirely urban and is wholly comprised in the city of Bradford; it contained a population in 1901 of 228,625, with an area of 10,802 acres.

The city of Bradford is the centre of the textile industry and the workers are dependent in a very large measure on this single industry for their livelihood. By far the lowest paid class (apart perhaps from the unskilled outdoor labourer) is that of the labourers in woolcombing and wool washing works and when it happens that there is slackness in this portion of the textile trade a large proportion of this class is obliged to seek relief.

2. More than most trades the textile industry provides work for women and children, and thus it occurs that in many cases where the head of the family is out of work there is sufficient income from the wife and children or other resident relatives to maintain all.

3. So impressed have the guardians been with the evidence substantiating this fact that in their regulations for the administration of outdoor relief the following rule appears :—"No. 8.—Outdoor relief shall not be granted to persons residing with relatives where the united income of the family is sufficient for the support of all, whether such relatives are legally liable to maintain them or not."

4. The ascertaining of these particulars of income alone causes a stringent inquiry to have to be made into the cases applying for relief and my experience convinces me that the relieving officer's inquiries are not generally complete enough for the purpose but should be supplemented by an independent investigator (preferably a lady) the result of whose inquiries into each case should be given in writing and form a case-paper.

5. These case-papers are, in this Union, submitted to a committee consisting of the whole of the members of the relief committees in the presence of the relieving officers, and such alterations are made in the orders previously given for relief by the committees as the new facts ascertained justify.

6. This consideration leads me to refer to the methods of poor relief which are more or less peculiar to this Union. The Union is divided into three wards for election purposes corresponding to the parliamentary divisions of the city; each ward returns seven members who are elected for three years. Thus no guardian can be said to represent any small ward, township, or parish and he does not feel it incumbent upon him to act as the champion of any special case, such championship being one of the greatest drawbacks to uniform administration that I know of.

7. To eliminate still further the possibility of the advocacy of special cases, the board has adopted the method of rotation of members on the Relief Committees and to secure at the same time, as far as possible, uniformity of treatment of applicants a permanent chairman for each committee is appointed and a scale of relief fixed which cannot be altered in any case without the concurrence of the whole of the guardians sitting as a Revision Committee.

8. The uniformity aimed at is that each case shall be considered from the following points of view, viz. :—That the status of destitution varies according to the needs of the individual, but that in considering the manner in which relief should be given the family of the recipient must be considered as the unit; that the ultimate benefit to the individual and the community should be the first consideration; that the condition of the able-bodied recipient should be less eligible than that of the independent labourer, but that the relief should be adequate to the needs of the family. If these aims are strictly borne in mind in granting relief the comparative merits of indoor and outdoor relief are lost sight of inasmuch as the needs of the individual, or the interests of the community, dictate in each case which of the two shall be given.

9. The guardians of this union have endeavoured for the last three years to carry out a policy of classification, i.e., to discriminate in granting relief so as to put the recipient in the proper class and then to deal separately with each class. The classes so dealt with are :—

(a) The Able-Bodied Men and Women who would spend in drink or gambling any relief allowed, persons living in common lodging houses, all young single men or women. These persons will be admitted into a test workhouse and given a definite task of work to perform each day and their diet will be as simple as can be provided commensurate with health.

(b) The Able-Bodied Married Men, with Wives and Families, temporarily out of work who are decent members of society. The men are given a task of work to perform, ample time is given them to seek for work, and the relief allowed is outdoor relief according to the scale which has been calculated so as to secure as far as possible the two objects that it shall be adequate and that it shall not exceed the wages of the ordinary unskilled labourer.

(c) Widows with Children.—Until the children are old enough to work and support the family a special scale of outdoor relief is granted if the woman is endeavouring to bring up her family decently. If she can make arrangements for the care of the children she is taken from the relief list and placed on the list of scrubbers. If she has made no endeavour to help herself an order for the workhouse is granted for her, and her children are sent to the cottage homes.

(d) Children.—No children between the ages of three and sixteen enter the workhouse wards. Under three they are provided for in a separate building, used as a nursery, with a special staff of attendants. All other children (unless sick) are drafted at once to a central home, and their cases are considered from the central home, if likely to become permanent, they are placed in scattered cottage homes, or boarded out beyond the union, or in a suitable institution (such as for the blind, epileptic or feeble-minded), or on a training ship.

(e) Old and Infirm.—The respectable old people who have no relations or friends with whom they can live are classified by being provided with cottages, two in each cottage, situate some miles from the workhouse—each old person being allowed perfect liberty. Old people who have conducted themselves in a reasonable manner living with relatives or with friends are granted a special scale of outdoor relief. The aged poor whose conduct in the past has not been of a nature to justify special treatment are provided for in the infirm wards of the workhouse.

(f) The Sick.—The special efforts the guardians have made with respect to the sick poor are the provision of an indoor staff of medical attendants, male and female, and a trained nursing staff in numbers and qualification equal to the ordinary general hospital. The guardians have provided for the phthisical sick in the incipient stages a sanatorium on a suitable site in the country and all persons resident in the union found to be in that stage of the disease, whose income does not allow them to reside at a private sanatorium, are accepted on the recommendation of their private medical attendant. Medical aid is freely given where the income of a family is below that of the ordinary unskilled labourer. The experience of our relieving officers does not justify the alarms of some Poor Law administrators, who are afraid that medical aid leads to the recipients more readily seeking other relief. Many old persons to their knowledge managing quite comfortably on their small incomes, but compelled to seek medical aid from the Poor Law in case of illness, never seek other forms of relief—the same is the case in many families where the man is out of work or employed very casually, the income is sufficient for their ordinary needs, but not when any strain is added. Medical aid from the Poor Law is often more readily obtained than is a recommendation for an outdoor charity, and is not so easily abused.

10. The above mentioned classes are the ones guardians have mainly to deal with. The main cause of their seeking relief, apart from the obvious ones which apply to the whole country, is, I think, in this union the fact that nearly the whole prosperity of the city depends upon one industry; when that is depressed, when worsted mills are working short time, for instance, and father, mother, and children are all possibly employed in the same factory, the only resource is the relieving officer until better times return.

11. Whilst fully aware that the ultimate responsibility for the relief of destitution remains with them the guardians of this union have in every way sought to co-operate with the charitable institutions and the public authorities of the city. For instance, acting on behalf of the Education Committee they have administered a voluntary fund raised by the Mayor amounting to upwards of £1,800 for the feeding of underfed children.

12. The superintendent relieving officer and the district relieving officers are in constant communication with the City Guild of Help (a voluntary association for assisting the poor without giving direct weekly doles of money), with the Charity Organisation Society, and the various hospital authorities, with the object of either recommending to them cases of temporary distress which might be met by one or other charity or of undertaking to make enquiries and giving relief where necessary in any case to which their attention has been called.

13. I may say here that I am afraid many Poor Law officers are not aware, or ignore the fact, that any responsible person may apply for relief for any case of destitution that comes to his or her notice and that it is the duty of the relieving officers to attend to the case just as readily as if a personal application had been made. In many such cases my own attention has been drawn to them and they have been dealt with by the relieving officers.

14. An arrangement has been arrived at with the blind institution and the police authorities whereby the male adult blind are taught to earn their own living in a home specially provided for the purpose, the guardians guaranteeing the whole cost of maintenance and the police undertaking to rid the streets of blind beggars by arresting them and asking the magistrates to give them the option of going to the home.

15. The superintendent relieving officer and myself are in constant communication with the officers of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and I do not hesitate to give an order of admission to the workhouse for the officer to use in any case of neglect or cruelty to which he calls my attention.

16. Since the issue by the Local Government Board of the Relief (School Children) Order, 1905, many cases of cruelty to children have come under the notice of the guardians and I have been instructed to forward the particulars of them to the officers of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. In all, sixty-five cases have been so sent directly owing to the enquiries made under the Order. The Society has taken steps in each case and the results, as supplied by the officers of the Society, are as follows:—

Cases warned and improvement followed	Cases where children removed from parents.	Insufficient evidence.	Committed to gaol.	Still under observation.

17. I consider the encouragement given by the guardians to me and through me to the superintendent and the relieving officers to deal promptly with all cases recommended in the way I have described has resulted not only in the alleviation of much distress but in the reduction of pauperism.

18. When one considers the detail work required in the carrying out of a proper administration of the Poor Law, the first qualification for a guardian appears to be that he should have ample time at his disposal. A man, however able he may be, who is absorbed in business cannot give that patient attention that every case needs for properly dealing with it. Apart from this absolute requirement in the large boroughs (which does not apply in the same degree to a town councillor) the guardian is drawn from the same class as the town councillor but from a smaller field of candidates, owing to the greater demand upon his time and the often tedious nature of the work.

19. One suggestion arises in considering the question of the personnel of boards of guardians and that is the desirability of ensuring that one woman or more should, either by election or co-option, be appointed on every board. The care of the sick and of the children is their peculiar province, and also, what I think should not be lost sight of, they can and do take an interest in the welfare of the female officers, an advantage upon which I need not dwell.

20. Two or three points in Poor Law or practice have been impressed upon me as needing reform:—

(a) Power should be given to the Local Government Board to ensure that an adequate staff of relieving officers should be appointed in each union and the Board should be enabled to veto any appointment which does not provide for the officer being freed from extraneous duties, and for a reasonable educational standard. When the staff exceeds three a superintendent is essential to act directly under the clerk.

(b) I suggest that the appointment of a collector of repayments at a commission, especially if he is also a relieving officer, should be forbidden, as I have reason to believe that the practice often results, to say the least, in a reluctance on the part of the officer to refuse relief if the applicant has relatives legally liable and able to repay.

(c) The law of settlement might be altered to advantage by making the area of settlement the same as that of irremovability, i.e., the union instead of the parish.

21. On the larger question of the reform of the Poor Law, it appears to me that no obstacle should be placed in the way of an applicant seeking relief, but that when once his case has been taken up, it should be dealt with entirely from the point of view of the benefit to the community. That to secure these two objects one authority only should deal with all cases which have to be supported by the community and that all areas of administration should be simplified in order to bring within one boundary all those having one common municipal or civic interest.

22. I am referring more particularly to urban areas and I feel it would be a great advantage in securing an inter-relation between charitable agencies, the health and educational authorities (with which the Poor Law authority is, or should be, in close connection), and the guardians if their interests were all contained within one common boundary.

23. If it were fully understood that when charity fails persons unable to support themselves from whatever cause should be dealt with by the Poor Law authority, and none other, in one defined area, a great many questions would fall into their proper places.

24. In conclusion, I should like to add that I believe any lessening of the control of the Local Government Board, especially in regard to the appointment and control of the superior officers in the Poor Law Service, would be disastrous.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY THE REV. W. H. DYSON, COUNCILLOR, A. WHITWORTH AND MR. JOHN MORTON, VICE-PRESIDENTS OF THE HUDDERSFIELD CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST. YORKSHIRE.

I. AN ACCOUNT OF THE OPERATIONS AND EFFECTS OF ANY OR ALL OF THE CHIEF CHARITIES IN THE NEIGH-BOURHOOD.

HUDDERSFIELD CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

1. The work of this Society is indicated in the following statement printed in each annual report :—

What can be done by the Charity Organisation Society.

I.—What the Committee will do, if they can, for persons in distress.

(1) They will visit and inquire into any case brought under their notice by subscribers, and forward a report and advise. They will do their best to secure assistance such as may be required, either from institutions, charitable agencies, or will act as a medium for the distribution of such assistance as the subscriber may desire to render, or make a grant from the means at their own disposal.

(2) They will, in suitable cases, give help in severe sickness, procure medical treatment, arrange for admission into hospitals or the infirmary, or other local institutions, and, when the time comes for a change of air, into convalescent homes.

(3) In times of distress they will endeavour to help those who can be permanently benefited and again made self-supporting. Inquiries must of course be made and it has not been found that the deserving poor object to such inquiries, as it is done with great prudence and consideration.

(4) In deserving cases of immediate need, the agent when necessary, will give relief at once, without waiting for the result of inquiries

II.—What the Committee will not do.

(1) They will not knowingly encourage thoughtlessness and improvidence.

(2) They will not encourage the drunken and discourage the steady and industrious by spending money on families when the wage-earners waste their wages on drink, or squander them on other vices.

(3) They will not undertake the duties of other people by assisting those who should be dealt with by the Poor Law, or who have near relations in a position to do what is necessary.

(4) They cannot undertake, out of annual subscriptions, to relieve chronic cases or to give permanent pensions.

2. The society employs an agent whose duty it is to receive and inquire into all applications for relief. The present agent has served the society for over twenty years, and his large experience and genial tact have won for him the fullest confidence of the committee and of the subscribers. As a consequence the society is freely used for private inquiries and the distribution of private charity.

4. In addition there are considerable gifts of food and clothing, and also of money from private donors. The organisation of the society is fully adequate to the administration of much larger funds, without any increase of working expenses.

5. As the funds are very limited, the work of the Society is much crippled, and in many cases the relief which the Society is able to give is very inadequate.

6. The Committee meets weekly—on Friday afternoons, in the rooms of the Society—to consider the applications, and to interview the applicants.

7. The following statistics for 1905-6 fairly indicate the extent of the society's work :

The applications received during the year 1905-6 were 972. They were disposed of as follows :—

Number relieved	-	-	-	570
Referred to the board of guardians	-	-	-	105
Undeserving of assistance	-	-	-	53
Not requiring help	-	-	-	33
Applicants for work (unprovided)	-	-	-	59
Applicants for whom work was provided	-	-	-	29
Private inquiries made and reported	-	-	-	111
Inquiries made for other societies	-	-	-	12
				972

Representing 3,210 individuals.

N.B.—The number relieved, 570, does not represent distinct cases. Relief is usually given for two weeks, and a further application and inquiry are necessary for its renewal. There are also periodically recurring applications, especially for coals and clothing.

8. Causes of distress.—The most serious of the causes of the distress which comes before us is sickness and it is in dealing with these cases that the want of adequate funds is most realised.

9. Irregularity of work, and the usual winter out-of-work cases are very difficult to deal with, owing to the lack of temporary work. The society has no workshop, and can only refer the able-bodied men to the Guardians for test work, which is quite unsuitable for self-respecting men who value their civic rights and status, or to the Labour Home in connection with the Police Court Mission, which, at present, is quite inadequate to cope with the requirements. In a few cases work of a more or less permanent character is found. Thus out of eighty-eight applications (1905-6) work was found for twenty-nine.

10. A third class of applicants consists of widows and the aged poor in receipt of outdoor relief, which they find inadequate. The cases tabulated under the heading "Referred to the Guardians" are either of the intemperate or "work-shy" order, or chronic cases of destitution which the Society cannot deal with. The cases classed as "undeserving of help," are for the most part confirmed vagrants, or professional beggars.

II. THE RESPECTIVE EFFECT ON THE RECIPIENTS OF CHARITY AND POOR LAW RELIEF.

11. We find the usual reluctance of the respectable poor to avail themselves of Poor Law relief. In some instances our judgment leads us to urge that applications for such relief should be made; but wherever we can, we honour this spirit, and do what lies in our power to render any such application to the Guardians unnecessary.

12. In regard to the help the Society gives, we receive many expressions of thanks, and occasional letters of grateful acknowledgment of timely assistance. In a few instances a small repayment has been made.

13. Occasionally our inquiries are resented—but not by any who are really in distress. Those whose application will not stand the test of investigation, and who know that inquiry will be made before help is given, do not trouble to apply; hence most of our tickets, which the subscribers are provided with to give to beggars, fail to be presented.

III. A CRITICISM OF POOR LAW METHODS FROM THE POINT OF VIEW OF THOSE ENGAGED IN CHARITABLE WORK.

14. Our experience is mainly of the administration of outdoor relief. The cases which come before us show that this relief varies very considerably, and, as far as our investigations reveal the actual needs, quite inexplicably—greater need not infrequently receiving less relief. Not infrequently the relief given is quite inadequate. Even when rent and food are provided for, nothing is left for clothing.

15. According to the official Circular No. 9 "the Guardians may properly supply requisite clothing in cases where out-relief may lawfully be granted," but we do not find that this is acted upon. With the exception of boots, little, if any, clothing is provided.

Our Society is frequently appealed to for grants of clothing, and bed covering and coals, by those in receipt of outdoor relief.

16. In cases of sickness amongst this class, we find there is great hardship. The "extras" which the medical officer may recommend seem to us—in practice at least, whatever the law may allow—very restricted. In not a few instances the sickness is in part owing to insufficient nourishment consequent upon insufficient income, and our society is frequently called upon to provide additional food and invalid diet. It would appear also, that many of the sick poor are unaware of the power of the medical officer to recommend food, and so make application to us for these "extras" instead of to the medical officer.

In our judgment, a more generous treatment of the aged sick poor is urgently demanded.

IV. THE EXTENT OF CO-OPERATION BETWEEN CHARITY AND THE POOR LAW, AND THE POSSIBILITY OF ITS EXTENSION.

17. Beyond the fact that the clerk to the Guardians is a valued member of our committee, and that the relieving officers willingly supply information and give full consideration to any very occasional suggestions of our agent there is no co-operation between the Charity Organisation Society and the Poor Law authorities.

18. We are of opinion that it would greatly assist our work if the privilege were granted to the Society of making representations, and even recommendations, to the Guardians in those cases where our investigations show the outdoor relief to be inadequate, and where clothing or special food in sickness may be required.

V. THE POSSIBILITY OF SUBSTITUTING CHARITY FOR OUT-RELIEF.

19. This, in our judgment, is possible only on the conditions of the Elberfeld system, in which the workers or helpers are invested with authority, and hold the position of representatives—not of a body of subscribers but of the municipality. In the Elberfeld system, charity in its finest form, viz., voluntary personal service, and municipal funds, are combined. If any private gifts are made use of these are in addition to the fund supplied from the rates.

20. The Poor Law admits of assistance only in cases of absolute destitution, whereas in our experience the work most urgently needed is in the prevention of destitution, and for this timely aid—aid prior to destitution—is absolutely essential. The Elberfeld system includes the two-fold method of help.

If the out-relief were truly adequate, our Society might more fully grapple with the urgent cases of temporary want.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY FREDERICK EASTWOOD, ESQ., J.P., HUDDERSFIELD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

Huddersfield Infirmary.

1. I was twenty-seven years Hon. Secretary, and for the last four years have been President of the above institution. It was opened in 1831 and has been enlarged several times until at the present time it contains accommodation for 140 patients. Sufficient for the needs of all suitable cases.

2. The institution depends entirely upon voluntary effort, the income consisting of subscriptions from private individuals, work-people's collections, friendly and trade societies' demonstrations, congregational collections, and interest from invested funds, particulars of which are given on page 10 in enclosed report,* amounting altogether to over £8,500.

3. The number of patients attending during the past year—in-patients, 1,363; out-patients, 5,923. Cases of minor accidents, 1,496. Röntgen Ray and Finsen Light and other cases, 187 and 512—total, 9,481.

4. The infirmary is for the sick poor and excepting in cases of emergency or accident no person who has been in receipt of parochial relief continuously for two months next preceding the application for admission is admitted as a patient; exception however, is made with regard to cases that cannot be satisfactorily treated at the union infirmary. These are taken in, and in consideration of such cases the guardians make an annual grant to this institution.

5. The infirmary is very popular among all classes of the community as is shown by the liberal way it is supported, it is splendidly equipped with every appliance for the efficient carrying on of its work and is thoroughly qualified to deal with all proper medical and surgical cases from the town and surrounding districts.

6. In my opinion the infirmary meets all the needs of the district, and does not in any way enter into competition with any other institution. I might add that in connection with the infirmary there is a convalescent home with accommodation for sixty persons (see Report,* page 37).

7. The infirmary buildings, furnishings, etc., cost £60,000 and are free from debt.

APPENDIX No. LXVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. H. ELLAM, RELIEVING OFFICER OF THE HUDDERSFIELD UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The industrial conditions of this union are very good, and in my opinion trade has never been better. Many mills are running night and day. This has been the means of raising the social condition of the people to a great extent.

2. Relief is administered in accordance with the Outdoor Relief Regulation Order. No experiments have been tried.

3. Outdoor relief is too readily granted in this union, and in my opinion as a real test an order for the house should be offered more frequently. If this was done a large number would make an effort to maintain themselves which would show an appreciable reduction in the number of paupers receiving outdoor relief.

4. The classes applying for relief include all kinds and conditions of people. Many respectable old men and women and widows with young families. There is also that class who have never worked and do not intend to work if they can eke out an existence.

5. Many apply through improvidence, others through circumstances over which they have no control, such as sickness and often death of bread-winner.

6. Outdoor relief granted in 1900 for the whole of the union was £7,163, and in 1906 this amount had increased to £12,241. In my opinion this state of things has been brought about first by the Local Government Act of 1894 doing away with the rating qualification of guardians, which has brought men on to the board without any business experience whatever, second, by the Outdoor Relief Circular of 1900. This circular in the hands of men prepared to grant relief often in face of information supplied by the relieving officers, is the chief cause of the great increase.

7. The orders relating to outdoor relief are all right if administered in the proper spirit by responsible rate-payers. If the rating qualification were reinstituted a different state of things would prevail.

8. Where old people are earning a trifle the guardians grant them an amount which together maintains them. Medical relief only is often granted in cases where the income is very small.

9. My opinion is that outdoor relief should not be granted to persons residing in common lodging-houses either belonging to corporations or private individuals.

* Not Printed.

APPENDIX No. LXVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. JOHN W. FAWCETT, SECRETARY OF THE LEEDS INDUSTRIAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The society is enrolled under the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts.

2. It was established in the year 1847, and has therefore been in existence close upon sixty years. It originated amongst a number of working-men who joined together to start a corn mill in order to put down the adulteration of flour, and to supply themselves with a pure article at a less exorbitant price than it could be obtained at from private sources. The attempt proved a success, and in subsequent years other businesses were entered into.

3. At the present time the society has ninety-four branches for the sale of groceries and provisions, seventy-seven for butcher's meat, twenty-four drapery, nineteen boot and shoe, six ready-made and six greengrocery branches, together with fifteen coal depots, besides central premises in Albion Street, where various departments of business are conducted. The society possesses a small farm of about 80 acres, an extensive corn mill, bakery, boot factory, and cabinet works. It also carries on brush-making, bespoke clothing, tinning, wheelwrighting, shirt-making, paper bag making and other minor productive operations, and possesses a building department of its own.

4. The total value of goods sold by the society for the twelve months ending June 30th, 1906, amounted to £1,567,703, and the net profit £197,894. The share capital then stood at £780,011, and the number of members at 49,186.

5. The society affords facilities for enabling members to obtain dwelling-houses of their own by weekly instalments. In this way 756 dwellings have been sold to members, of the value of £197,579. It has also advanced to members £201,235, on 907 dwellings not built by the society, and at the present time has on hand 271 dwellings built or purchased by the society at a cost of £56,535.

6. Its investments in Co-operative, Municipal, and other outside undertakings amount to £191,837, whilst the value of its trade stocks amount to £218,620. It has a Reserve Fund, Fire Insurance Fund, Plate Glass Insurance Fund, and Accident Insurance Fund amounting in all to £54,182.

7. For twenty years the society has carried on an Education Department supported by grants from profits.

8. The society has undoubtedly been a great blessing to the working classes of Leeds and surrounding districts by encouraging habits of thrift, forethought, self-reliance and self-respect. In times of industrial depression members have been able to draw upon their accumulated dividends and savings to tide them over periods of bad trade and scarcity of employment, and in this way has prevented many from becoming chargeable to the rates.

9. Speaking generally, my own opinion is that the members of the society are not the people to seek Poor Law relief.

10. I append two tables of statistics showing the operations of the society for the twelve years ending December 31st, 1905. (See App. No. LXVII. (A) and (B).)

11. I enclose copies of the society's balance sheets for 1905, the last year to which the statistics relate, for reference if required.

APPENDIX No. LXVIII

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. LEVI FITTON, RELIEVING OFFICER, LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The social conditions of the Leeds Union are very varied, it comprises both slum and better class property. Its industries are many and also varied. The chief are:—iron works, woollen mills, dye works, boot manufactories, tanneries, tailoring establishments, rag-picking, and several other smaller trades, all these employing men, women and children. When trade is good, all who will work may.

2. In and out-door relief, in my opinion, are both necessary. In-door, first, for sickness, which cannot be dealt with efficiently at home, and if attempted, continues the sickness rather than relieves it, and second, to test cases, as to the need for interference with them.

3. Out-door relief is all right, with clean and thrifty people; those who are willing and able to attend to each other, or live with relatives who will undertake to look after them, but are unable to do anything to support them.

4. Out-relief should never be given into public lodging-houses, or houses of doubtful character, or with relatives who use the recipients as servants, or in cases addicted to drink.

5. Aged men and women chiefly, but also married, widowed or single. Widows with children, cases of sickness of head or some part of family. Any of these classes, in the event of being down, if either they or their friends have paid rates for any length of time, consider themselves entitled to help and must be dealt with.

6. There are also skilled and unskilled workmen with families, who through stress of circumstances, rather than vice, are driven to apply.

7. The causes of pauperism: old age and sickness, drink, want of work, unskilled labour from insufficient training, and laziness.

8. A very prevalent cause of destitution is the drinking habit of society, and until this can be dealt with, pauperism must increase.

9. During my experience the class of persons seeking to be guardians has degenerated. Men of little or no experience of human nature consider themselves qualified, and in the administration hinder rather than help.

10. In too many cases the interest of those they are elected to serve are made subservient to personal ends. Their position in life, in many cases, does not leave them perfect freedom of action.

11. Relief in the Leeds Union is administered by sections of the board, meeting fortnightly, when each case is dealt with separately.

12. Persons sixty years and upwards, out-relief 2s. 6d. or 3s. each. Families in case of sickness: Man sick, with wife and four young children, 6s. 6d. money and 2s. 6d. in food, or 7s. 6d. money and 2s. 6d. food. Able-bodied sick, 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. Able-bodied in want of work, 5s. for man and 1s. each for rest of family, half in money and half in kind. Single able-bodied persons not relieved except in workhouse.

13. I do not consider our scale is high enough if the poor could be better classified. Old respectable poor ought to have 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d. each, and all doubtful cases given the workhouse.

14. I think districts for relieving officers are as a rule far too large. It is almost impossible for them to watch the number of cases they have to deal with, and my experience has taught me that constant visitation is more effective in keeping down pauperism than anything else.

15. Respectable poor appreciate the visits, while the rest soon show they are not suitable cases.

16. Officers will learn more by constant visiting than by enquiry, there being so few who will give reliable information.

17. The enforcement of the rule that guardians should not sit in the section they represent.

18. That there should be power to remove, and detain in the workhouse, cases utterly unable to properly look after themselves outside.

APPENDIX No. LXIX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE AS TO THE MEDICAL ASSISTANCE OF THE POOR BY DR. ALEXANDER FORBES, DISTRICT MEDICAL OFFICER, ECCLESALL BIERLOW UNION; MEMBER OF THE SHEFFIELD CITY COUNCIL.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The city council—of which I am a member—as sanitary authority for Sheffield, have built three hospitals for cases of infectious diseases, and as far as possible, i.e., about 500 beds, all cases of small-pox, scarlet fever, typhoid fever, and diphtheria seeking admission are taken in and treated, at an annual cost to the city of about £28,000. The city council is also about to provide a sanatorium for consumption, about fifty beds.

2. The two boards of guardians provide medical attendance and relief for all persons who are qualified for such relief, either through the district medical officers or in the union infirmaries.

3. There are two general hospitals: one Children's Hospital and one Hospital for Diseases of Women, and these, speaking generally, are for those above the pauper class, but who are not sufficiently well off to pay for medical assistance. There is a good deal of abuse by people for whom hospitals were not intended, hence cramping their usefulness for proper cases.

4. I do not think there is much overlapping between the various agencies for medically assisting the poor, but it seems to me a distinct anomaly that cases of, say consumption, should be treated by the city council at the expense of the rates without disfranchisement, while those treated by the Poor Law authorities—also at the expense of the rates—should incur this penalty.

5. I think the city council might take over the administration of the Poor Law, but not the general hospitals.

6. I think the amount and quality of medical assistance is at present fairly adequate, except that the guardians might do more than they do at present in the isolation and treatment of consumption, and that consulting operating surgeons and physicians should be attached to the union infirmaries, as is done in the case of one of the unions.

APPENDIX No. LXX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE RE VALUATIONS FOR ASSESSMENT PURPOSES, BY MR. GEORGE FRANKLIN, CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARDS OF OVERSEERS OF SHEFFIELD AND ECCLESALL.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. In considering the subject of the valuation of property for assessment purposes, the question naturally suggests itself, Is the present system conducive to uniformity and convenience?

2. To anyone with merely an elementary knowledge of the question the reply must be in the negative. The number of authorities who are at present entrusted with the making of valuations is four, viz. :—

(1) The overseers with the Union Assessment Committee as a revising body for poor rate purposes.

(2) The borough councils for borough rate purposes.

(3) The county councils for county rate basis.

(4) The income tax assessors for property tax and inhabited house duty.

3. These different and varying valuations are very bewildering and annoying to the ratepayers, besides being very expensive, troublesome and wasteful.

4. In the county boroughs and large urban districts there is no doubt that the duties of the Assessment Committees have been efficiently and conscientiously discharged, but in the rural and agricultural districts the duties have been carried out in a very perfunctory manner.

5. The ideal system is to have one valuation authority, with one valuation for all purposes.

6. In suggesting a new valuation authority, I am strongly of opinion that the proposals contained in Mr. Long's Bill of 1904 would approach as near to this ideal as it is possible to get. That the council of each county and county borough should be the valuation authority and that following the model of the Education Act, 1902, the valuation authority should appoint valuation committees to perform the duties. The valuation committees should be elected jointly by the borough or county council and the board of guardians in the area, in the proportion of two-thirds by the council and one-third by the guardians, the surveyor of taxes as representing the Treasury having a recognised place thereon.

7. Some difficulty might be experienced in forming areas and committees in counties, but these difficulties are not insurmountable.

8. In dealing with the preparation of the valuation lists the main principles of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, might with advantage be extended to the rest of the country. Under this Act a quinquennial valuation must be made, and a fixed scale of deductions from gross to rateable value is adopted, thus ensuring uniformity in the different classes of property assessed.

9. Greater elasticity should, however, be given, enabling appeals to be made against assessment in cases where property has depreciated through the decay of locality or the shifting of values from some cause, otherwise considerable hardship might fall upon the owner or occupier in continuing the fixed value to the end of the quinquennial term.

10. The valuation list as adopted by the valuation authority should be the valuation list for all purposes.

APPENDIX No. LXXI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. A. K. GALE, DISTRICT MEDICAL OFFICER, ECCLESALL BIERLOW UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I have been medical officer of the ninth district Ecclesall Bierlow Union since March, 1889. Also medical officer of Ecclesall Bierlow Union Workhouse since October, 1890.

2. At the time of my appointment as district medical officer, my district, comprising the parishes of Norton and Beauchief, was situated in Derbyshire, the area being 5,232 acres the population about 6,000, at the census of 1901 the population had risen to 11,959, and the more populous portion of the district was taken in by the City of Sheffield. Since 1901 the population of the district has increased very considerably, and at the present time probably numbers about 15,000.

3. Probably my experience as a workhouse medical officer is more likely to be of use to the Royal Commission. When I was first appointed as medical officer of Ecclesall Workhouse, the hospital consisted of a building which would accommodate about ninety patients, male and female. At this time the total number of workhouse inmates including children was 445. The nursing staff consisted of a married couple, who were untrained, and they were assisted in the performance of their duties by pauper inmates. At this time there was no infirm accommodation beyond the hospital and the body of the workhouse.

4. In 1891, the total population of the union was 37,905; in 1901, the total population of the 179,699. A large proportion of this increased population belong to the working class.

5. At the present time the hospital buildings have accommodation for 290 beds which could easily be expanded to 300. In addition to this, there is special accommodation for 190 infirm, apart from the workhouse general accommodation. The total inmates of the workhouse at the present time is 872. The present hospital staff consists of the following :—

1 resident medical officer.	20 probationers.
1 superintendent nurse.	12 paid ward maids.
8 charge nurses.	1 hospital porter.

6. By a process of evolution the hospital has passed through the following stages :—

1890. Untrained nurses and pauper assistants.

1894. Trained nurses and pauper assistants.

1899. Trained nurses and probationers; no pauper assistants.

7. The resident medical officer was first appointed in 1901.

8. Probationers were first appointed in 1899 on the advice of Mr. Jenner Fust (Local Government Board Inspector). The probationers are first of all engaged on two months probation, and if found satisfactory, sign an agreement to stay for three years training, the salary paid is, first year, £10; second year, £15; third year, £18. At the expiration of that period they are examined by an independent examiner, and if a satisfactory report is received from him they are granted a certificate.

9. All the probationers we have trained have no difficulty in securing at once good positions, either as charge nurses in other hospitals or in private nursing institutions.

10. In 1899 the superintendent nurse was appointed by the guardians to perform the duties of matron with regard to the hospital, and this course was continued by annual re-appointment up to 1905, when the guardians refused to renew the appointment, but allowed the superintendent nurse to continue discharging the duties of matron by tacit agreement until such time when the Local Government Board should issue further orders on this subject.

11. A short time ago, I addressed a letter to the guardians, and the Local Government Board complaining of this continued anomalous condition of affairs, which I consider has a prejudicial effect on the relations between the master on the one hand, and the superintendent nurse and myself on the other hand.

12. I need hardly point out that the duties and responsibilities of the principal officers concerned were defined by the Poor Law Orders of 1847, with the addition of the Short Nursing Order of 1897. At the time the original Orders were issued trained nursing and modern hospitals were unknown.

13. I consider that a hospital such as ours, containing 290 beds and having a staff of more than forty paid officers is ripe for a separate administration or if the expense of this course prove too great an obstacle, the scheme recommended by the Departmental Committee to the Local Government Board on nursing should be adopted.

APPENDIX No. LXXII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. ALFRED GAUNT, CLERK TO THE GUARDIANS, BRAMLEY UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

Social and Industrial Conditions.

1. The population of the Bramley Union consists principally of middle classes, artisans, and labourers, and their respective families. Industries in the district are various, including important iron and engineering works, woollen manufactories, collieries, brickworks, and boot factories. These find work for many of the inhabitants, whilst many others are engaged in clothing factories and other workshops in the city of Leeds. Most of the local trades have experienced severe depression, and, in consequence, many of the workpeople have been thrown out of employment or been working short time for a considerable period. The building trade in the district has been particularly affected, and at present very little progress is being made in the erection of new property. The operatives in boot factories and clothing factories are subject to lengthened periods of slack time, according to the season of the year, and only for short intervals do these works experience busy periods.

Experiments in Poor Law Administration.

2. The guardians adopted regulations for classifying the inmates of the workhouse, granting certain privileges to those of good character, and allowing them leave of absence daily, if desired. Homes outside the workhouse have been acquired for the accommodation of children, and a foster-mother is in charge of each Home—the present number of such children in the four Homes being about forty.

The respective Merits of Indoor and Outdoor Relief.

3. Many of the persons who apply for relief have a fear of entering the workhouse, but after a first experience their reluctance to re-enter does not appear to be so pronounced, and they are invariably well satisfied with the treatment and consideration shown to them by the guardians and workhouse officials.

4. The treatment of the outdoor poor cannot be made so adequate as that of the indoor poor, but the out-relief recipients appear to be well content to eke out their existence with the pittance granted, in addition to the small earnings of other members of the family, and in many cases assisted by their friends.

5. In the case of able-bodied men with families, considerable difficulty is experienced, there being a considerable number of this class at present out of work. Some of the families have been chargeable to the union for quite a long period. Relief granted to this class is given half in money and half in kind,* and the men are set to work five days in the week. More assistance of supervision for this class would most probably result in a reduction of the number seeking relief, as if they could be kept strictly to the work, it would no doubt be a strong incentive for them to find more remunerative employment, and in any case would prevent them acquiring so easily the habit of indolence through lack of adequate supervision.

Particulars and Statistics as to Administration of Relief.

6. The guardians have adopted no regulations for the administration of relief. Applications in all cases are dealt with separately on their merits.

7. The Returns of paupers chargeable to the Union on January 1st, 1907, furnished herewith, show that the total number of indoor paupers relieved (including vagrants and lunatics) was 348, and outdoor (including lunatics in asylums) was 1,253, a total number of 1601.

8. The number of indoor paupers (exclusive of casuals and insane) was 327; namely, 140 men, 115 women, and 72 children.

9. The outdoor paupers (exclusive of casuals and insane) relieved numbered 1,113; namely, 209 men, 505 women, and 399 children.

10. The cost of pauperism to the union (excluding lunatics) for each year, ended at Lady Day, 1895, 1900, and 1905, is as follows:—

	1895.	1900.	1905.
In-maintenance - - -	1,387	2,166	3,401
Out-relief - - -	3,914	4,742	6,240
Total - - -	5,301	6,908	9,641

The Class of Persons seeking Election as Guardians.

11. There has certainly been a considerable change in the policy of the guardians since the present qualification for the office came into force. Applications for relief receive a far more sympathetic hearing, and the result has been to increase the amount of relief granted in the majority of the cases.

Reform in the Law or Practice Suggested by Experience.

12. It would be desirable to have regulations for administering relief. The adoption of a definite policy, with certain fixed rules, would be of considerable advantage in dealing with applications for relief, and the result would be more satisfactory. Cases of an exceptional character might be arranged to be considered by the whole Board. Under the present system a deserving case, where the applicant is well known, is likely to have very favourable consideration, whilst another applicant, although equally deserving, but not known to individual guardians, might not receive the same sympathy.

13. The law of settlement and removal, particularly with reference to children, would require simplifying, if continued. The decisions of the courts have made the carrying out of the law at present a most complexed question in respect to the settlement of children, and the result is that considerable sums are expended by many unions in costs of litigation.

14. The present law of settlement in other respects also works very harshly in certain individual cases. Instances have occurred where families have been lawfully removed to workhouses of other unions, the place of their last legal settlement, such workhouses being many miles from the parish where they have been born or usually resided, and in the same instances the persons removed had never previously resided in the place of settlement, they being thus separated entirely from their friends and placed in a district to which they were complete strangers.

15. In 1902 a woman and her five children were transferred to the Wincanton Union Workhouse, in the County of Somerset, from this union, the settlement being that of the husband and father, who had deserted them in this union. The woman had always resided in Yorkshire, and her children were born in this union, or in the immediate neighbourhood.

16. A case occurred about a year ago in this union where a woman and her three children were chargeable, and none of the family had ever resided in the union of settlement. It was only after urgent appeal that non-resident-relief was allowed, and removal to Settle Union was avoided.

* This class are at present relieved in kind only in all cases, unless the Board should think there are exceptional circumstances.

APPENDIX No. LXXIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. THOMAS GRUNDY, MEMBER OF DISTRESS COMMITTEE, POLICE COURT MISSIONARY, AND MANAGER OF LABOUR HOME AND WORKSHOP FOR UNEMPLOYED, HUDDERSFIELD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. My position in this town is that of Police Court Missionary and Manager of the Labour Home and Workshop for the Unemployed. This position I have held for six years. I am also a member of the Distress Committee for this borough. Previous to my taking up my present work I was engaged by the Church Army, and was with them about eight years. The Committee which I represent is a broad one, embracing men of different thought both in religion and politics. Perhaps I ought to mention the fact that before long we move into much larger premises. The public of this district has generously subscribed £3,000 to enable us to do so.

2. I now propose to lay before you what we do as a society and to make observations and statements which have been impressed upon me in the course of my experience.

3. We divide the unemployed into two classes, those who have homes and those who have not.

4. The First Class are mostly composed of married men and if not married are to some extent the support of a home. Work is given to them by the day, for which they receive 2s. 6d., receiving same at the end of each day's work. In order to obtain this temporary work the applicants must be workers, i.e., not lazy or suffering from physical infirmities. Pauperizing charity is not given, and if a man does not make an honest attempt to work we refuse to be a party to his laziness. They must also be men whom we can reasonably hope to permanently benefit. With regard to character, previous career does not put a man outside the pale of our assistance. He is made to understand that his accepting the employment that we give him means his willingness to do better. We do not set the highest standard of morality for those who work for us, at the same time we do not mean that they are to be of the lowest. The men are of the average in this respect. We give preference to those who are the most deserving. Many of the men who have worked for us have been sent to us by the local relieving officers. Some of the guardians have also referred men to us and when suitable and possible we have given them temporary employment.

5. Every facility is given to these men to find employment and permission for leave of absence can be obtained at any time to accomplish this end.

6. This voluntary effort of ours stands between the man and the workhouse and if well supported must develop into a much greater means of help for the relief of distress. It is very evident that in the first place it must have a tendency to reduce the poor rates, for the reason that those to whom we give employment if not so helped by us would become applicants for Poor Law relief. Our Committee appreciating this fact, have recently applied to the local guardians for a subscription to our work. In the second place, which is of much greater importance, the man sees the chance of escape from becoming a pauper, which of course means the loss of self respect. In many cases we have found that when once a man has taken to test labour he is only too willing to fall back into it again.

7. Co-operation with the guardians is possible to a large extent, for instance, a right down wastrel might still be sent to perform test labour, and those whom I have termed the average could be referred to us, provided the guardians on their part subscribed a reasonable sum of the actual wages paid and expenses incurred.

8. A system of payment similar to that in force between the Government and the Discharged Prisoners Aid Society might be adopted.

9. The Second Class :—I will now describe what we do re the men we term homeless; they include men of no fixed abode, those who sleep out and those who live in common lodging houses.

10. The conditions of help are as follows:—Men destitute of food and shelter can by doing a certain amount of work have a meal and a night's lodging, but no money is given; they are not allowed to use this privilege more than twice a week nor to make a regular practice of using this means of help twice every week. We make an exception to this rule for the men who have a reason for being in the district. It happens often that in a few days a man may secure work or is promised the same, in instances of this kind we extend further help, but if we decide to give any of these men permanent help then we admit him into the labour Home.

11. Certain questions are asked these men as to their need and the cause of it, their plans and intentions, where and when they worked last, and where they worked longest.

12. We will not knowingly help the professional tramp, but refer him to the casual ward, our object is to help the man who is not yet a real tramp, but who may for various reasons be compelled to tramp the country in search of work. As the object of the real tramp is to tramp the country to avoid regular work we have no sympathy with him.

13. The treatment at the casual wards is good enough for the habitual tramp if he could be forced to use it but he only does so occasionally when he cannot beg sufficient or find a suitable place for sleeping out. The system in force in casual wards is not at all a desirable one for the working man who may be on tramp and tends to degrade men and make tramps by its harshness. The unreasonable severity of the rules, etc., at these places are for the purpose of keeping people away from them, and the result is that they are kept from them, but the evil of vagrancy is not lessened but increased, men will sleep out, beg, even steal, rather than make use of them.

14. Some plan of discrimination should be adopted whereby it would be possible to know the worker from the vagrant. This ought to be possible if the system of dealing with vagrancy was in the hands of the police—not because they are police, but on account of their extensive organization. A kind of ticket or license (augmented by resorting to the finger print system, if found necessary) should be expected of every man tramping the country, a man without a ticket should be deemed a defaulter with opportunity of clearing himself, it should be possible to make this ticket a record of the way the individual has been spending his time and if it was not spent with some definite purpose which should be decided by the magistrates, and if convicted his licence should be endorsed and after two or three convictions he should be sent to some labour colony for a period long enough to cure him of his vagrancy. Then a very strict application of the vagrant laws re begging would be a means of dealing with the local loafer and vagrant and after a certain number of convictions he should also be sent to a labour colony provided for such men.

15. The other section of our work for homeless men is that of the labour home, the existence of which is an admission of the fact that to help some men to respectable citizenship needs more than a meal and a night's lodging and to keep them moving from town to town is to do nothing less than to drive them to despair.

16. A labour home rightly managed is undoubtedly a blessing to the right man. The work of other labour homes will be well known to you, it is not necessary, therefore, to dwell further upon ours.

17. Perhaps I ought to mention that the problem of unemployment is not so severe here as in most towns in England, but there are unemployed among us, and I think we are having our best days.

APPENDIX No. LXXIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE OF MR. GEORGE HADFIELD, MASTER, CROSLAND MOOR WORKHOUSE, HUDDERSFIELD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The condition of this workhouse is on the whole favourable, consequent on the construction and general plan of the building, which allows a fair latitude for classification, viz., eight, but in no case more than nine, beds in one room, with day rooms to correspond.

2. This allows six classes for old men, and three classes for ordinarily able-bodied men, including one bedroom and one dayroom for the ins and outs.

3. The accommodation for the ins and outs is separated from, and is some distance from, the main building, and while it acts as a deterrent to this undesirable class of inmates, it in like manner tends to promote the peace and comfort of the aged and more deserving class of poor.

4. We have also in connection with this workhouse over sixteen acres of land, which are all under spade labour cultivation, and from which all the vegetables required for the house are produced. This land proves to be of further advantage, as it lends itself to division and subdivision, and thus allows a classification in outdoor labour.

5. We have also a large firewood industry which finds light employment for a number of old men who prefer it. It proves very remunerative and does not in any way enter into competition with outside labour.

6. The classification for females is practically the same as for males.

7. It is, however, most desirable that there should be a ward completely detached from the main building (as in the above cases of ins and outs), for the morally depraved women. I have often pointed out to our board the necessity for it, but up to the present without success, on account of expense; but I am yet hopeful of bringing it about.

8. The old women are chiefly employed in making and repairing garments.

9. The younger women are employed in the wash-house, laundry, and in scrubbing and cleaning, which I have never found in any way to be objectionable. But in any case of employment, if tact and discretion are used the orders can be humanely and satisfactorily administered.

10. However much objection there may be to enter the workhouse for the first time, it is very soon overcome, and friends find it difficult to get their relatives to leave it.

11. The fact of a person applying for relief and accepting a workhouse order is a true test of his destitution. After a short time it could easily be ascertained if his friends (if any) would be willing to take him with an adequate amount of outdoor relief. (I am referring to the aged poor.)

12. In no case should out-relief to able-bodied men and women be given, unless for a very short period indeed. The tendency is, however, otherwise at the present day and it is growing most rapidly under the new dispensation.

13. Out-relief is given to all who are not ashamed to ask for it, and that this policy does not by any means reduce the numbers in the house the following figures will show:—In July, 1899, our indoor poor numbered 412, and our out-relief amounted to £138 8s. 9d. The statement submitted last week gave the number in the house as 555, and the out-relief amounted to £258 11s. 7d., showing an increase of 143 indoor paupers and an increase in out-relief of over £6,000 per annum; during the above period trade was never more prosperous. These facts speak for themselves.

14. The classes of persons applying for relief are old people whose children shirk the responsibility of maintaining their parents—young people notably; the unemployable males; deserted wives; and pregnant women.

15. Indiscriminate relief is a large factor in the production of pauperism.

16. The following are some suggestions for reform:—

(a) A larger and more experienced staff of relieving officers, well posted in their work.

(b) A rota relief committee would go a long way in preventing people from losing their independence and self-respect.

(c) The Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation Act, 1871, as amended by the Poor Law Act, 1899, should be further extended, so as to enable the guardians to detain for any period, not exceeding twenty-six weeks, feeble-minded young women, and also women who have been confined of two or more illegitimate children. Any person so detained should have the right to appeal to the guardians at any of their meetings, and the guardians should be empowered to reduce the time if it appeared to be excessive.

Outdoor Labour Yard.

17. Out outdoor test labour is employment on the land, whenever the weather will permit, otherwise the paupers are employed in cross-cutting railway sleepers for firewood, or in grinding Indian corn. By keeping this class of men constantly employed we are able to keep them away. We have only six of this class at present.

18. The standard of comfort in our workhouse, in my opinion, is fairly good.

APPENDIX No. LXXV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY REV. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., LATE HON. SECRETARY, LEEDS CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

CHARITIES AND VOLUNTARY EFFORTS.

1. "Charity" as commonly bestowed without full investigation, and study of the case in hand is uncertain and inefficient. It leads the applicant to depend on moving the compassion of the donor and tends to the encouragement of untruthfulness and idleness.

2. Charity wisely and thoughtfully given has for its purpose to help the applicant out of his difficulties and set him in a position of independence.

3. Poor Law out-relief looks in general only to the immediate and imperative need. It has no recuperative force. But it has the great advantage that it is given under official supervision and is constant. It is an effective check upon notorious vice in its recipients as it would of course be forfeited if such became known to the relieving officer.

4. The great evil of the administration of outdoor relief is that it is insufficient, and almost compels the recipient to look to so-called charity to supplement what he receives from the guardians.

5. An aged couple here in Leeds, if thoroughly respectable and deserving and having no sons to help them, would get 6s. a week from the guardians. Of this 2s. 6d. at least would go in rent, leaving 6d. a day for food, fuel and clothes. Of course they have to supplement this as best they can by dependence on neighbours and others. So that they necessarily live in a condition of absolute dependence. They would be in a far better position if they had had just sufficient for their needs from some one source.

6. The same is true for a widow left with say five little children. She will be allowed relief for four, 6s., and be expected to maintain herself and one child by her own exertions; but it is manifest that she cannot look after her own home properly and earn a living by outdoor work. Either the home is neglected or she relies upon casual charity; more probably both results ensue.

7. The standard of relief should be such as to meet the necessities of the case instead of, as at present, the guardians saying in effect "we will give you so much towards your support and you must make up the rest the best way you can."

8. There is in Leeds no co-operation between charity and the Poor Law, except for the readiness of the relieving officers to give information. I have done my best to bring about united action but hitherto without any success. This is greatly to be regretted.*

9. If the guardians decided not to give outdoor relief they would be obliged to provide sufficient workhouse accommodation for all cases which charitable societies were unable or unwilling to undertake. There would be needed an amount of zeal and generosity on the part of the public which certainly does not exist at present and if once aroused would always be liable to fail. I cannot believe the substitution would be tolerated by any class, ratepayers, voters, elected persons, or the poor themselves. What I should rather look to would be a much stricter discrimination in allowing outdoor relief and then giving such an amount as would be sufficient to meet the absolute necessities of the case. If it were found that the applicant was in receipt of assistance from other sources, an effort should be made to increase it so as to lift him above the status of a pauper and relieve the rates of the charge for his support.

* I am glad to be able to report that since this Statement was made our relations with the Boards of Guardians have, under our recently appointed Organising Secretary, become much more intimate, and there is now every reason to hope for the establishment of an effective corporation which will embrace all forms of legal and charitable relief in the city.

APPENDIX No. LXXVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY REV. W. H. HEAP, WESLEYAN MINISTER, HUDDERSFIELD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. My experience has been gained in Bradford, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, Douglas (Isle of Man) and Huddersfield. In most of these towns I have had charge of an old chapel in the centre of the town and have necessarily been brought into touch with the poor to a considerable extent. The condition of the criminal, the casual, and the helpless has always attracted my attention and absorbed my thought. In Manchester for six years I laboured in the slums and came into daily contact with wretchedness and want in every form. Here in Huddersfield the distress is not so widespread nor the difficulties so numerous, but the same problems have to be solved in every part of the country. It may be that a new spirit is beginning to be manifested in the administration of the Poor Laws or it may be that Huddersfield is exceptionally well manned, but I can honestly give much praise to the efforts locally made to grapple with these problems.

2. Further, I may add that I do not belong to any political party and am not prepared to pin my faith to any special remedy. Indeed, the problem is so acute and so complicated by various considerations that no one remedy will serve.

3. The effects of charity are admitted to be often grievous. At its best it is a palliative: at its worst it leads to offensive assumptions of superiority on the one hand and to cringing and dependence upon the other. Charity is not the prime requisite, but justice. My experience has convinced me that under the present social system it is impossible adequately to deal with unemployment. The unemployed vary alike in number and in qualifications, but the fact of unemployment is constant. Social reconstruction is imperative.

4. Poor Law methods leave much to be desired. In part this is owing to the inherent defects of the system, in part to the hampering restrictions imposed by the Local Government Board, and in part to what seems a rooted conviction on the part of many of its administrators that the applicant for relief must be either a wastrel or a rogue. The Poor Law never even seems to have been meant as a remedy for poverty. It is built upon the axioms that none shall be permitted to starve, but that the receiving of relief shall be made as unpleasant as possible. A new spirit is discernible, but one still meets and frequently meets with instances where the needy are treated unfairly and with unnecessary roughness by relieving officers. In more detail:—(1) Poor Law relief is too frequently given to those who do not need it—the pauper is more than supported, he is cultivated—while persons in desperate need are passed by. We need some such scheme as the Elberfeld scheme. I would draw the attention of your Commission to the system in vogue in Douglas (Isle of Man). The town is apportioned into districts, one guardian being responsible for each district. He obtains a personal and intimate knowledge of the inhabitants (the needier ones) in his district, and can upon his own initiative give relief where it is needed. The most deserving amongst the poor have often a rooted antipathy to becoming applicants for relief. In such cases it should be offered to them, even pressed upon them. It is desirable, too, that the guardian should be able to relieve, in urgent cases of distress, even before reporting to the general body of guardians. This is the first need of any new system—an organisation which shall ensure that every case of real distress shall at once be dealt with.

5. Poor Law relief is too often indiscriminating and insufficient. In a very real sense the deserving are penalised. The usual Huddersfield scale of relief is 2s. 6d. per adult and 1s. 6d. per child weekly. One particular instance will illustrate my criticism. I recently visited a man dying of consumption. He had been a decent hard-working man. The household consisted of himself, wife and two children. Ordinarily that man would have been allowed 8s. per week. But since he had 4s. per week coming in the guardians only allowed him

4s. per week. Again and again have I come across instances of this sort. The thriftless and the debauched have an advantage in the actual working of the system over the deserving poor. Where the individual is indolent or vicious, the relief should be on a narrower scale: where he is not, it should be adequate to his needs.

6. The third criticism I venture is that the uniformity of treatment in workhouses is a great mistake. I should like to see a much larger measure of freedom given to the guardians. The system that suits one part of the country is wholly unsuited to another part. Why should not the dietary be left to the guardians, the Local Government Board merely ensuring that a stipulated amount per person shall not be exceeded and that a certain average standard shall be maintained? What sense is there in providing a pauper uniform? The clothing explains something of the repugnance with which the workhouse itself is regarded. There is no need for this degradation. And I am confident that charity would provide great stores of second-hand clothing that might be used in the workhouses. The inmates of our workhouses might be much more usefully employed than they are at present. Rates would be eased somewhat and the monotony of workhouse life assuaged.

7. I should like the guardians to have large powers of experiment put into their hands.

8. With reference to tramps, distinction must be made between those who are seeking work and those who are seeking to evade work. May I draw the attention of the Commission to the system adopted by the Manchester and Salford Mission, particulars of which I enclose? I can bear testimony to the good results obtained by this system, even from amongst the dissolute and careless.

9. I think it both desirable and possible that there should be co-operation between charity and the Poor Law. Both would gain from the co-operation. May I add this word with regard to the Charity Organisation Society? I have found its work to be almost entirely negative. It is an admirable institution for detecting the undeserving: it does very little to lift up the really needy and deserving.

10. I would give the guardians a much larger measure of control over all matters affecting poverty, or likely to affect it:—

(a) The guardians should have power to remove at their discretion cases of phthisis to the workhouse infirmary.

(b) They should be directed to draw public attention to the conditions under which the poor are compelled to live. If the insanitary and defective conditions of the dwelling in which the worker lives produces an illness, which makes him and his household a charge upon the public purse, the owner of that property should be compelled to contribute towards their support. The housing problem demands instant solution.

(c) They should have power to appoint an officer who should stand in loco parentis to the boys and girls who are living in common lodging-houses. I have come across many instances in this town (in Manchester I met with hundreds such) where boys in their teens and, to a lesser extent, girls in their teens, are living in such places. Either they are orphaned or they have run away from home. But they are there, growing up amidst filthy conditions, forming desultory habits of work and life, surely gravitating into hooligans, paupers and criminals. They should be taken away absolutely, from the life of the common lodging-house, say every young person under eighteen years of age, and subjected to the supervision of a trained and competent official.

(d) They should have the widest possible powers given them for the purpose of caring for young children.

11. I should like to see houses established for the benefit of widowers and their families. The position of a man left with several little children is pitiable in the extreme. In the case of a working man it is next door to impossible for him to bring up the children properly. Further, I have known more than one instance where a designing woman has thrust herself upon such a man, to the great detriment of the upbringing of the family. Immorality easily follows in such cases.

12. Old age pensions are an absolute necessity. They should be granted to every person who attains the age of sixty, irrespective of need. This in itself would greatly relieve the pressure of Poor Law administration.

13. But whatever the particular remedies which may be suggested to and adopted by the Commission, the abiding need is for a recognition of the right to live and the right to work of every man: the constant distinction between the unworthy and the worthy; compulsion to be applied to the former class, and adequate considerate and immediate help to be provided for the latter.

APPENDIX No. LXXVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. JOHN HEWING, HUDDERSFIELD, MEMBER OF THE FRIENDLY SOCIETIES FEDERATION AND OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE TRADES COUNCIL, VICE-CHAIRMAN CONCILIATION BOARD, MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF GUARDIANS, AND MEMBER OF DISTRESS COMMITTEE, ETC.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The social and industrial conditions of the people here for the last fifteen years have been fraught with great concern.

2. As a member of the Friendly Societies Federation, the Executive Committee Trades Council, Vice-Chairman Conciliation Board, Poor Law Administration, Distress Committee, etc., I have been brought into contact with a great deal of the social and industrial life of this district, and I have generally found that the conditions prevailing in organised labour, if not altogether what one desires, are far superior to those in unorganised labour.

Organised Labour.

3. In organised labour there is a distinct tendency of a larger friendship and fraternity which I attribute to various agencies:—

(1) The monthly journals issued free to members by the friendly and trade societies, with leading articles and several pages devoted to members to air their views, and on social and economic questions and on the practical aspects of trade.

(2) With these thoughts inculcated in the mind you get a more retentive workmen, a better citizen, brighter homes, less insanitary surroundings, housing question solved, longer life.

(3) The habit of thrift. The hundreds of these working men with whom I have consulted have always impressed me with the fact that they have an account (though it may be only a small one) in the General Post Office or local savings banks.

(4) Not more than 4 per cent. of these apply for Poor Law relief.

Unorganised Labour.

4. In my experience of this union, where we have unorganised labour, the social and industrial conditions are extremely bad. Very seldom have I seen the unorganised workers aspire to anything above the public-house and drinking dens; they are very unintelligent and erratic in employment; they care little or nothing for the district and they make no effort to elevate themselves or others from their environments. While, therefore, the great friendly and trade societies are offering such splendid benefits for the present and future to alleviate suffering and old age, this unorganised body of labour is on the increase.

5. On our Relief Committees and Workhouse Visiting Committees I generally ask the applicants, "Are you or have you been a member of a friendly or trade society?" "No." "Have you ever thought of the great benefits such as out of work, sickness, superannuation and other benefits to be derived from association with these societies?" "Perhaps I have," uttered in "I don't care" sort of voice.

6. In my judgment we get from unorganised labour the great bulk of pauperism.

(1) "The able-bodied ins and outs," that infest our workhouses and won't work.

(2) "The ne'er-do-wells," those that migrate from mill to mill, from job to job, with a view to shirk the "monotony of labour" and so keep their families in a state of destitution.

(3) At the age of fifty, broken down in health, they are recipients of outdoor and indoor relief.

7. The great controversy that has taken place in our lodges and societies for a number of years with regard to the manner in which the widows and orphans of our late members have been treated has caused me to look into this question, the outcome being that I was nominated for a seat on the board of guardians in 1894. Previous to 1894 persons became members of the board because of political reasons and not because of their level headedness. They were often advanced in years and too feeble for the onerous duties and cares of Poor Law administration. Since the above date there has been a marked improvement in this direction; friendly and trade societies have taken the matter up to the benefit of the ratepayer and the honest recipients of relief.

State Old Age Pensions and Free Medical Relief.

8. The great bulk of our friendly and trade societies are strongly in favour of State old age pensions. But in all the discussions in which I have taken part there has been a distrust in non-contributory schemes. After millions of our members have provided through their various societies for old age, and when thousands to-day are enjoying the same, it would hardly be fair that the Imperial Government should step in and place a premium upon the lack of industry and thrift and cause a great cessation in membership and funds.

9. I would suggest that a Revenue stamp be placed upon the wages list opposite the name of every employee (say, 1d. stamp where wages were 10s. and under 20s., 1d. stamp from 20s. and under 40s.) and that it be compulsory upon the employer to affix the same, and stop the amount from the wages of the employee.

10. With regard to free State medical relief, I cannot see my way at present to advocate it. The country has not given enough thought to such a scheme. But what I would advocate is that our hospitals and infirmaries ought to be subsidised very largely by Government grants.

Proposed Reforms.

11. I make the following suggestions for reform in the law:—

(1) That the chairman and vice-chairman of the boards of guardians be ex-officio justices of the peace.

(2) That the full control be given to guardians to engage or dismiss all officers without having to ask the sanction of the Local Government Board.

(3) That all meetings of board of guardians be held at 5 o'clock in the evening, in order that all sections of the community may be represented.

(4) The Out-door Relief Friendly Societies Acts be extended, so that trade unions, co-operative and kindred thrift societies be included.

(5) That all male children who come under the control of boards of guardians, when old enough and wherever desirable and possible, be apprenticed to a skilled trade.

(6) That full power be given to guardians with regard to dietary and treatment of hospital cases, especially tuberculosis, which should be treated without disenfranchisement.

(7) That full powers be given to guardians with regard to detention, work, isolation, and dietary of the ins-and-outs (or the idle able-bodied).

(8) That larger powers of detention be given to guardians with regard to young pregnant women coming into workhouses.

(9) That larger powers be given to guardians with regard to alterations or additions to workhouses, children's homes, union offices, etc., without having to submit the same for approval to the Local Government Board.

APPENDIX No. LXXVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. GEORGE HILL, SUPERINTENDENT OF OUT-RELIEF OF THE SHEFFIELD UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The members of the board with the exception of the chairman and vice-chairman, are divided into six relief committees, and no member is allocated to the one dealing with the ward or parish from which he is elected. A chairman and vice-chairman is appointed to each committee of which two members form a quorum; the meetings are held weekly at 10 a.m., except on Tuesdays, when one committee meets at 2.30 p.m., no meeting being held on Saturdays.

2. All applications, including those for discretionary relief received, and for admission to the workhouse or hospital, received by the relieving officer since the previous meeting are placed before the committee.

3. The relieving officer whose Application and Report Book is taken by the chairman, gives particulars of the case and result of enquiries made by him, after which the superintendent of out-relief, who attends the committee and records the orders of the guardians in the Relief Order Book, adds any information he may have, either from his own enquiries or from the Cross Visitor's Report, and assists the committee generally in obtaining the full facts of the case and coming to a decision.

4. Should any case arise affecting the policy of the board or which the relief committee consider is of more than ordinary importance, it is referred to a committee which is designated the General Out-Relief Committee; this consists of the chairman and vice-chairman of each relief committee, and meets on the second Tuesday in the month. It also deals with matters connected with the staff of the Out-Relief Department and those not directly connected with any particular relief district.

5. Visiting Slips.—These are of great assistance, and are entered by the relieving officer on the first application for relief of any description, either indoor or out, and are revised on each subsequent application. As they are transferred from one district to another when an applicant removes, they form a continuous record of the history of each case and of all relief given and are invaluable in tracing cases and families. (Specimen appended—See Appendix No. LXXVIII. (A).)

6. Outdoor Test Labour Yard.—For the purpose of dealing with the single men of the idle, profligate class the guardians have a yard where they are put to the task of either wheeling or breaking stone.

7. On their application for admission the relieving officer is empowered, after obtaining a certificate from a district medical officer as to their fitness, to offer them relief in the shape of an order for work at the yard, and food consisting of 2 lbs. of bread, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. tea, $\frac{1}{4}$ lb. sugar, 2 oz. cheese, and a ticket for one night's lodgings, the whole with one pint of soup given at dinner time, being valued at 9d. Some refuse the relief, others take the food, but do not go to the yard; if the latter return and become chargeable within a month they are prosecuted. Some take the relief and go to the yard, and at the end of the day, if the task is performed to the satisfaction of the labour master, they are given another day's relief in advance.

8. Provision is made for the men to go and seek work, and in many instances the labour master has obtained regular work for the men in the corporation yard which adjoins ours, and with other employers. Some of these men do not apply again, others after a time come again, and many of them, if not at the yard, are in either the workhouse or prison. They are generally of the class who live in model lodging houses, and in summer time roam the country, generally sleeping in fields or outhouses. They appear to be entirely devoid of any self-respect.

9. Medical Relief.—My opinion, based on a long experience, is that a lax system of giving orders for medical relief is one most prolific in producing paupers. It is a small matter for the relieving officer to give a doctor's note, but unless the strictest enquiries are made, and the case treated as an application for ordinary relief, it is opening the door to the class of people for whom relief is not intended.

10. I should be very careful in refusing medical relief unless satisfied the people were able to provide it themselves; yet if on enquiry I found they were in a position to pay for it I should take steps to compel them to do so.

11. The policy of the guardians in this union is to give outdoor relief to respectable people in satisfactory homes, and never to offer indoor relief unless after special enquiries there are strong reasons for not giving outdoor.

12. The recipients of outdoor relief are all classified on their length of residence and character, the maximum amount weekly for adults being:—Class A., 5s.; B., 4s.; C., 3s.; and children 1s. 6d. and 2s. per head. Although these amounts are fixed as the maximum under ordinary circumstances, the discretion of the relief committee is not interfered with and a larger sum may be given if special circumstances warrant.

13. The classes of persons applying for relief are sick and aged people, widows and deserted women with young children dependent, a good number of single men as mentioned under "outdoor test yard," able-bodied men out of employment, unskilled labourers from forty-five to sixty years of age, and who are beginning to show signs of advancing age; also a good number of females from sixteen to thirty years, who, whilst they can scarcely be termed prostitutes, do not lead respectable lives and are frequently found cohabiting with men who are often in the workhouse.

14. Causes of pauperism are so many, but I think the following are among the chief causes, viz.:—

(a) Lack of proper home life resulting in early and improvident marriages, large families, in many cases only small wages and no provision for sickness. (This class of person often resort to the relieving officer within six months of the wedding-day, and application is repeated in after years.)

(b) Drink and gambling are undoubtedly great factors not confined to the young or middle-aged, for we occasionally find our not able-bodied old people put a shilling on a horse if they can scrape one together.

(c) Want of work.—This brings many to seek relief, and whilst it is possible for a man with a family to enter one or perhaps two clubs and have 12s. or 14s. weekly in case of his own sickness, it is very difficult for the unskilled labourer to save sufficient money out of his weekly wage to maintain his family more than a week or two when out of work.

(d) Old age.

(e) Widowhood.

(f) Husband's desertion.

15. The present system of taking houses and subletting the rooms as furnished apartments at heavy rents in poor neighbourhoods is a source of considerable immorality and pauperism.

16. Applications for relief are made to the relieving officer, who takes all particulars on a visiting slip, visits the home, takes note of the whole circumstances and surroundings, and, if necessary, gives an order for the doctor to attend. If there is immediate need he supplies necessaries, such as food, coals, etc., or, if recommended by the medical officer, beef and milk, until the weekly meeting of the Relief Committee, and in the meantime enquires into the circumstances of relatives liable to maintain. He also gleans what information he can as to the habits and character of the applicants.

17. The cross visitor is also supplied with the name and address only of each applicant for outdoor relief. He makes all enquiries and obtains information independent of the relieving officer, and frequently unearths valuable information, which is placed before the Relief Committee by the superintendent of out-relief, along with that obtained by the relieving officer when the application comes up for consideration. Whilst there is no desire to harass or trip him, this arrangement has the effect of keeping the relieving officer up to his work, and as the cross visitor goes into all the relief districts he at times finds persons who, having applied and failed in one district, try another, but on his visit they are recognised and the record, of which he keeps a separate copy, is brought. This is of great help in keeping down the impostor, and it is of service in the interests of cases which at times are discovered where an increase in the amount is necessary, and it frequently happens that the relief is increased on information supplied by that officer.

18. In addition to visiting new applicants the cross visitor visits every person in receipt of outdoor relief once in three months, and in some cases more frequently. His visits are made at various times, often in the evening and unexpected, and it frequently happens that facts come to light that were not intended to. An energetic cross visitor with a good memory and knowledge of the customs of the people should be an invaluable officer in the efficient administration of relief.

19. The following reforms in the law or practice suggested are:—

(a) Powers should be given to the guardians to remove sick and aged people not properly cared for in their homes, to the union hospital, where at present they sometimes refuse to go, and the guardians have no authority to compel them.

(b) Powers to deal with destitute heads of families not suitable for out-relief, and whose families suffer by their refusal to accept indoor relief.

(c) Powers to deal with young single women who are constantly going in and out of the workhouse.

(d) An alteration in the mode of recovering on maintenance orders from parents of children adopted by the guardians to enable the orders to be enforced in the same manner as an affiliation order.

(e) The establishment of municipal lodging-houses which could be kept under efficient supervision would benefit the respectable working man and would very materially assist in keeping the worthless character more under control.

APPENDIX No. LXXIX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE AS TO MEDICAL ASSISTANCE OF THE POOR, BY DR. FREDERICK HOLMES, DISTRICT MEDICAL OFFICER, LEEDS UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. There are large and well-equipped infectious hospitals at Seacroft, near Leeds, built and fitted up regardless of cost by the City Council, where infectious cases, such as smallpox, scarlet fever, typhoid, and diphtheria, are treated free of cost to those who choose to take advantage of them. These hospitals have a staff of two medical officers with well-trained and efficient nurses.

2. In the service of the guardians of the Leeds Union there are eight district medical officers appointed to look after the poor in time of illness; in fact, anyone receiving an order from the relieving officer is medically attended to. There is a Poor Law dispensary, where medicines are dispensed on the presentation of prescriptions given by the medical officers. In cases of urgency the medical officers have the option of ordering extras in the shape of food and alcoholic stimulants such as brandy and port.

3. There is a large infirmary connected with the workhouse with a staff of three medical officers and well-trained nurses, etc.

4. In Leeds there are two voluntary hospitals and two public dispensaries and a lying-in hospital. A few miles out of Leeds there are convalescent homes and sanatoria for cases of tuberculosis. There are numerous medical clubs established for the working-classes, but these are frequently taken advantage of by people who are well able to pay for medical assistance.

5. I suppose that poverty is the chief reason for the seeking of gratuitous medical aid, although I have no doubt many who are able to pay take advantage of it.

6. There is no co-operation or over-lapping between the various agencies for the medical assistance of the poor, so far as I am aware.

7. I think the handing over to one agency of the whole of the work of medical assistance in a large population like that of Leeds would be altogether unworkable.

8. I consider the poor and general community of Leeds are medically well looked after.

APPENDIX No. LXXX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MRS. ROBERT HUDSON AS TO THE PROVISION OF MEDICAL ASSISTANCE FOR THE POOR IN LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. In the City of Leeds there are numerous agencies of a public and private character for rendering medical assistance to the sick poor, and a general outline of the arrangements and the methods employed may indicate the extent to which this work in the city is carried out.

(1) CITY COUNCIL HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

2. The work of this important branch in the city is primarily in the interests of the public health, and any assistance it may render to the sick poor is mainly incidental thereto. The City Council has made ample provision for the isolation of infectious sickness by the establishment of fever and smallpox hospitals in the open country at Manston, near Leeds. The sanitary authority also supplies disinfectants for infectious cases treated in the homes of people.

(2) THE POOR LAW.

3. There are four unions in Leeds, with hospitals attached to each, and this is the rate-aided provision for general medical assistance to the sick poor who are unable to afford the services of a private medical practitioner. The following is a brief description of the work of one of the Poor Law unions of Leeds:—The cases are enquired into by the relieving officers, and, if deemed necessary, orders are given for the services of outdoor medical officers appointed for different districts. An order is given for the treatment of any patient in the union workhouse hospital, provided the case cannot be adequately dealt with in the patient's own home. The whole union is mapped out into districts, and there are eight medical officers. The union infirmary has recently been enlarged and accommodates about 800 patients. There is a staff as follows:—Resident medical officer, two assistant medical officers, dispenser and upwards of sixty trained nurses.

4. There is, no doubt, some danger of overlapping between the unions and charitable institutions doing a similar work, but the authorities take steps to minimise such overlapping as much as possible. It should be noted that citizens who are treated by the union medical officers are not subject to the disabilities of being disfranchised as in the case of persons obtaining ordinary parochial relief.

(3) VOLUNTARY INSTITUTIONS—i.e., HOSPITALS, INFIRMARIES, MEDICAL AID ASSOCIATIONS, ETC.

5. The City of Leeds is happily well served with a large number of voluntary organisations for the relief of suffering and pain, and the treatment of all kinds of diseases. A few of the leading institutions may be mentioned.

(a) Leeds General Infirmary.

6. This is a pure charity, managed by public-spirited citizens and generously supported by all sections of the community. The only recognised claim for admission to this charity is the suitability of the case and the poverty of the applicant. This institution is exceedingly well equipped and meets the requirements of Leeds and the district for miles around. Its operations are, therefore, more than local. In addition to a resident staff of medical officers a large number of leading members of the medical fraternity in the city act in an honorary capacity and render a considerable amount of voluntary service. In the general infirmary there are upwards of 400 beds, about 90 per cent. of which are constantly occupied. There is also a large number of outside patients.

(b) Leeds Public Dispensary.

7. This is a charitable institution, supported entirely by voluntary subscriptions and endowments, and dealing with over 4,000 new patients per annum. The majority of the patients attending the dispensary are from the poorest section of the community, and are in a large number of instances only a step removed from pauperism.

8. The public dispensary opened a branch in South Leeds (a working-class part of the city) in 1905.

9. The Medical Board is largely constituted of honorary specialists and medical practitioners.

(c) Hospital for Women and Children.

10. This hospital is entirely supported by voluntary contributions and endowments and is doing valuable work in the treatment of diseases peculiar to women and children. All deserving poor cases are eligible for admission. The Medical Board consists mainly of leading members of the medical faculty, who act in an honorary capacity.

(d) Leeds Maternity Hospital.

11. This hospital has been established as a lying-in hospital for poor married women of the city who could not otherwise receive proper care and attention in their homes. Sixteen beds for lying-in cases are provided. Patients are admitted free, but each case is strictly investigated prior to admission as a precaution against misuse. The hospital is supported by voluntary contributions and endowments chiefly as the result of the efforts of the Leeds Ladies' Hospital Committee.

(e) District Nursing Association.

12. The object of this association is to provide for nursing the sick poor in their own homes. Branch nursing homes are situated in various districts of the city, where the services of the nurses may be obtained as required. The income is chiefly derived from subscriptions amounting to about £2,000 per annum.

(f) Leeds Association for the Prevention and Cure of Tuberculosis.

13. Sanatoria for consumptives (open-air principle) have been established at two centres in the neighbourhood of Leeds, and about ninety patients can be accommodated. The arrangements are under the control of a strong and influential local committee, and appeals for public subscriptions have been readily responded to in support of this association.

PUBLIC APPEALS FOR HOSPITAL FUNDS.

14. Every facility is given to the people of Leeds to contribute towards the medical charities. The Leeds Workpeople's Hospital Committee is a strong and energetic organisation appealing for public support by various methods. Grants are made each year to the various hospitals in proportion to the size and scope of work—the largest grant being voted to the general infirmary. Workpeople in the various workshops in the city contribute weekly to the funds.

15. The following extract from the last published annual report of the Leeds Workpeople's Hospital Fund Committee shows the subscriptions received and the grants proposed to the medical charities. It should be mentioned that this organisation has founded two convalescent homes for patients in the country for the benefit of the workpeople of Leeds.

"Comparative receipts for 1904 and 1905 (omitting shillings and pence):—

"The grants to the Leeds Medical Charities are proposed to be the same as in 1904, viz. :—

"These grants will leave a surplus of £2,609 17s. 11d., which will be set aside as a building fund."

16. The Leeds Ladies' Hospital and Maternity Fund is another organisation for raising voluntary subscriptions for medical charities, and the work is sustained by a body of interested ladies. The city is divided into districts for collecting purposes, and a president and a number of collectors are elected to serve in their respective districts. The following extract from the last published Annual Report of this organisation gives the amount of grants allocated to the medical charities :—

Maternity Home - - -	200
General Infirmary - - -	70
Women and Children's Hospital - - -	25
Public Dispensary - - -	25
District Nurses - - -	20
	£340

17. There are also collections made in all the places of worship each year on behalf of the medical charities, as well as in the theatres and other places of entertainment, etc., and large contributions are received from these sources.

18. In addition to the above, and many lesser kindred organisations for assisting the sick poor, mention should be made of the—

LEEDS FRIENDLY SOCIETY'S MEDICAL AID ASSOCIATION.

19. This association can hardly be considered as in the same category as the above-mentioned charitable institutions, as it is an amalgamation of upwards of fifty friendly society lodges, and exists for the benefit of the members who contribute towards its operations, and who cannot, therefore, be regarded as "sick poor" for the purposes of this statement. The friendly societies affiliated with this association number nearly 8,000 members, all of whom are provided with free medical attendance in times of sickness. There are two fully qualified medical officers and two surgeries possessing every convenience for the use of members of the association, which is managed by a committee of delegates from each society. This is one of the many benefits derived by members of friendly societies, and everything should be done to encourage the working-classes to adopt principles of thrift by alliance with such organisations. The Education Committee grant the use of their schoolrooms for friendly society meetings on payment of a nominal sum of 1s. per meeting for fuel, light and cleaning.

20. Although only indirectly bearing upon the subject at present under enquiry, it may be interesting to refer to the work of the Leeds Invalid Children's Aid Society and to note the success which has attended the efforts of this body on behalf of the crippled and invalid children of the city. A devoted body of lady workers has for some years past maintained the oversight of these afflicted children, visited and instructed them in their homes, raised funds for sending many of them to convalescent homes, and for providing surgical appliances, i.e., crutches, splints, special boots, as well as lending invalid chairs, etc., to those needing such assistance and who otherwise could not obtain it. Over two years ago the education authority opened its first special school for the education and training of the crippled and invalid children of Leeds, mainly through the operations of the Invalid Children's Aid Society, whose responsibilities have since increased rather than diminished, and whose members continue to take warm interest in a large number of crippled children not able to attend the special school. It should be mentioned that this society also provides a good mid-day meal to all the scholars attending the special school, and those parents in a position to pay are charged with the bare cost, viz., 2d. per dinner. A workshop for scholars whose school career has terminated at sixteen years of age was recently opened in Leeds by this society with the object of training each child in a suitable trade or other occupation whereby it may become wholly or partially self-supporting in after-life.

SUGGESTIONS.

21. I am of opinion that co-relation and co-ordination of the medical charities for the sick poor of the city is needed with a view to a general all-round increased efficiency and to the prevention of:—

- (a) Overlapping and intercrossing medical relief,
- (b) Waste of effort and funds in organisation and administration; and to
- (c) The concentration of action in the appeals for public subscriptions, etc.

22. Whilst appreciating the valuable work done by Poor Law guardians in giving medical assistance, it would appear to be desirable to separate the sick poor from all taint of pauperism, and this could not be possible if the work (particularly the out-patient portion) were undertaken by boards of guardians, although it is no doubt necessary that an infirmary should still continue to be attached to each workhouse.

23. Furthermore, to hand over the control and management of the various medical charities to public bodies would, in my opinion, be objectionable and undesirable for several reasons. It would sooner or later have the effect of entirely eliminating the voluntary services so willingly rendered by public-spirited citizens and medical men, it would lessen public activity and interest in the work, it would largely increase officialism, and it would impose an enormous additional burden upon local rates. It may fairly be assumed that if the medical institutions were publicly controlled, the services of the medical profession could not be expected gratuitously, as at present, whilst the best medical skill would not be available, as it would not be possible to afford the salaries and fees required by the leading specialists and members of the medical profession, and thus second-rate men would be appointed.

24. It is suggested, therefore, that the various medical charities in the city be placed under the control of a strongly representative and influential voluntary committee to organise and to unify its varied operations. Authority might be given to the City Council by means of fresh legislation, if necessary, to support financially the work of such a voluntary committee as mentioned, and also to afford any information or assistance in its power. It may here be noted as one instance of public support being given to private charitable agencies, that the Leeds City Council contributed last year £2,000 towards the work of the Leeds Association for the Prevention and Cure of Tuberculosis.

25. At the present time I believe the utmost is being done by the medical charities of Leeds to give medical relief, and there is no doubt that the city is well served in this respect, although at the same time the medical relief is necessarily limited, and any development of work is liable to be retarded through a lack of funds. As a member of the Leeds Education Authority, I am fully alive to the fact that there are from time to time in the public elementary schools a number of children reported to be suffering with bad eyesight, needing suitable glasses, and whose parents are too poor to provide them. Any of the institutions having an ophthalmic department are quite willing to assist, and have rendered all the assistance possible in prescribing free of charge suitable glasses for patients, although they could not afford the large expense in providing such glasses, whilst the education authority has no power to spend money out of the rates for such a purpose. The difficulty has recently been temporarily bridged over by one of the leading opticians of the city offering to supply free glasses to necessitous cases within a specified time, but this is too important to be left entirely to the mercy of private charity, and if reasonable financial support could be given by the public authority in this respect, it is believed there would be no appreciable lessening of private efforts on behalf of the eyesight of children, whilst at the same time any provision of medical aid for the deserving poor would not be interfered with.

APPENDIX No. LXXXI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. J. H. KAYE, J.P., MEMBER OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE POLICE COURT MISSION AND LABOUR HOME, HUDDERSFIELD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I am a member of the Committee of the Police Court Mission and Labour Home which was established in Huddersfield about six years ago, and as a Justice of the Peace for the borough of Huddersfield I have had many opportunities of seeing the great amount of practical good which this charity has done, and is still doing, not only to the poor of Huddersfield but also to strangers, wayfarers, who happen to come to this town. We were very fortunate in securing as Police Court Missionary, Mr. Grundy, a man who has had several years' previous experience in the Church Army, and I attribute much of our success to the tact and ability he always shows in the important work he has to perform.

2. I wish to deal principally with the work of the Labour Home, but before doing so I should like briefly to refer to Mr. Grundy's work as Police Court Missionary. His first duty every morning is to visit the police cells, and years of experience enable him easily to decide which are ordinary "goal birds" and which are first offenders, and it is naturally to the latter that his sympathies at once go out. After a quiet talk in the cells, he follows the case when it is before the magistrates, and if a conviction follows he is often the first to greet the prisoner at the prison gates on the morning of his release, this being obviously a time when he most needs a helping hand, and it was principally for this purpose that the Huddersfield Labour Home first came into existence.

3. We commenced by renting a house at 30, Ramsden Street, as a Labour Home and lodging house, but we have accommodation for only thirteen men, in addition to the part reserved for Mr. Grundy and his family. In the yard at the back of the house we have a workshop, which we use chiefly for chopping firewood and making it into bundles for sale; and we also make a patent firelighter, for which we find a ready sale.

4. The work of the Labour Home may be divided into three categories, viz:—

(1) Men who are for the time being unemployable, and whom we take into the home, and keep for several weeks until they are able to manage for themselves. We have had sixty-eight such men during the last twelve months.

(2) Working men on tramp (as distinct from the habitual tramp), to whom we give supper and a bed ticket for the night.

(3) Householders or residents of Huddersfield or neighbourhood who are temporarily out of work. These we employ as often as possible at the rate of 2s. 6d. per day.

5. As regards men of the first category, of whom, as I have said, we have had sixty-eight resident in the home during the past year. At the end of an average stay of eight weeks they left us with the following results :—

- 19 situations were found for.
- 13 left to seek work.
- 2 were emigrated to Canada.
- 5 left giving no reason.
- 5 were restored to friends.
- 3 transferred to other homes.
- 1 sent to hospital.
- 7 dismissed.
- 13 in the home at end of year.

6. Out of these sixty-eight men at least eight had committed crime, but this is no disqualification provided of course we are satisfied there is a real desire to make a "fresh start" in life. I will give only one example of what a stay of a few weeks in our Labour Home has done for a young fellow whom I saw and spoke to only a few days ago. I give the report in the man's own words :—

"During the early part of 1906 I was tramping from town to town in the North of England seeking work. I reached Huddersfield last Good Friday in a sorry plight, my clothes in rags, my boots worn out, and without a copper in my pockets. Mr. Grundy took me into the home, kept me a few weeks. I chopped wood and did other jobs according to my strength, which increased every week, and besides my food and lodgings I thus earned a little extra, which I spent in fresh clothes and boots. When I left Huddersfield I went to Liverpool and obtained a situation as steward on board the Cunard Steamer "Umbria," which I still hold, and last Friday whilst the "Umbria" was in Liverpool I obtained a couple of days leave in order to come to Huddersfield to see Mr. Grundy and those who befriended me when I was so down on my luck."

7. In dealing with the second category, "working men on tramp," care is of course necessary, to prevent the habitual tramp, the work-shy, from imposing upon us ; and the task we demand, viz., chopping wood for two and a half hours, is our best safeguard, for the ordinary tramp won't work, if he can possibly help it, whereas the genuine working man on the road seeking work gladly accepts our terms of two and a half hours' work, which entitle him to supper and a bed ticket for the night—on no account is any money given. We have helped 262 men in this way during the last six months, and expect even more during the next six months.

8. As regards the third category—residents of the town and district who are temporarily out of work. For these we find employment as often as possible, paying them 2s. 6d. a day, this helps to keep the wolf from the door, and not being an extravagant wage it keeps within the men a "divine discontent," so that they are keenly on the look out for a better job outside. Of this class we have generally about half a dozen at work at most seasons of the year.

9. As I have stated before, we rent a house at present as a Labour Home, which accommodates thirteen men, but we are so satisfied with the results (as a whole) of our work during the last six years, that we have decided to spread our wings, and for that purpose we recently purchased a group of eight cottage houses and a large garden, in a central position, which we intend to use as our new Labour Home. It is intended to erect a large workshop in the garden, and the houses can easily be adapted for the uses for which they will be required. The purchase money and alterations will cost about £3,500, and we have already collected £2,700, and fully expect to obtain the balance shortly.

10. The one difficulty ahead of us is the question of working expenses, for, during the last year, even with our present small house, with its accommodation for only thirteen men, our expenses have exceeded our income by over £100. This deficit will undoubtedly grow larger by leaps and bounds during the next year, unless we can tap fresh sources of income, for obviously the new larger home will need more money than the comparatively small home does.

11. Board of Guardians.—We recently approached the Huddersfield Board of Guardians and laid our case before them, pointing out that many men in our third category had been sent to us by their own relieving officers and by members of the board of guardians themselves, and we asked them to allow us a donation of at least £100 a year from the public funds, for obviously we relieved many cases which would otherwise have had to be dealt with by the guardians. The members of the board of guardians gave us a sympathetic hearing, and promised to consider the case most seriously, and I believe I am right in saying that they are making enquiries as to their powers in this direction.

12. Relief of Distress.—I am of opinion that the work in the third category of our Police Court Mission and Labour Home is a "working model" of a desirable method for the relief of men temporarily out of employment.

13. I am strongly of opinion that the work of the Police Court Mission and Labour Home in its second category is the proper method for assisting genuine working men who are tramping the country seeking work. I consider it is most undesirable to mix the habitual tramp and the genuine working man, as is now done in the casual wards at workhouses. By our system a man performs his two and a half hours task, by which he earns his supper and a bed, and he is thus ready for turning out to seek work early the following morning, whereas a man who seeks a night's shelter in the casual ward at the workhouse has to perform his allotted task the next morning, and he cannot leave the workhouse until nearly mid-day. This is far too late as a rule to seek work for that day, so that many a man I believe drifts with the stream and becomes a tramp against his will in the first instance.

14. In my frequent journeys about the country by motor car I have often been surprised to notice the enormous number of regular tramps there are wandering about. I am very strongly of opinion that these men ought to be swept into labour colonies and compelled to work. Germany, Belgium, Holland, and Denmark have all dealt with this problem in a practical fashion, and surely if a careful study were made of the best continental methods a scheme suitable to the requirements of our own country could be found.

15. For the assistance of genuine working men who are on the road seeking work, I would have a labour yard situated as near the centre of each town as possible. This yard could be under the control of a retired soldier of tried capacity and character, or a retired police sergeant, and the first duty of a tramp would be to apply to the chief constable or sergeant in charge of the police office in each town, and if he satisfied the officer as to his bona fides he could then be sent to do a certain amount of work, stone-breaking or other similar work, by which means he would earn his supper and a bed, and in this manner, as I have before explained, he would not be herded with the habitual tramps at the workhouse, and he would, moreover, be at liberty to leave at daybreak the following morning, this being the most likely time for him to secure a regular job.

APPENDIX No. LXXXII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE AS TO THE SUPPLY OF MEALS TO POOR CHILDREN IN THE CITY OF LEEDS, BY COUNCILLOR KINDER, J.P., CHAIRMAN OF THE LEEDS EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. Free or assisted meals for school children have been supplied in Leeds at intervals during many years. The education authority have on all occasions been in close touch with the arrangements. It will probably be sufficient to refer to the steps taken since the appointed day under the Education Act, 1902.

2. In the autumn of 1903 the Education Committee sanctioned arrangements whereby Dr. Hall, with the aid of friends and school teachers, began his experimental feeding of school children. At first one light meal was supplied daily to sixty children (from about five to eleven years of age). Afterwards the number was increased to 100, and two meals a day were supplied. The average daily cost of the two meals was 2½d. per child. Whole meal malted bread, skimmed milk and cocoa, with margarine, etc., were supplied at breakfast. The dinner was varied, and consisted of meat or fish, or tripe, or suet pudding with bone gravy, potatoes, rice, beans, onions, and malted bread.

3. Dr. Hall took both a benevolent and scientific interest in the work, and no doubt effected considerable improvement in the physique of the children.

4. For an extension of the work the Education Committee provided and fitted up a large dining room in the St. Peter's Square Council School playground, and provided gas for the cooking stoves.

5. On October 26th, 1904, a resolution was passed by the Education Committee to facilitate arrangements for supplying meals to poor children all over the city, and thereupon schools were freely placed at the service of the organizers of the Leeds Children's Relief Fund, and teachers willingly gave their services; teachers and scholars also made up garments and collected funds, and there was a very earnest spirit of co-operation all through the school system of the city to cope with the distress arising from lack of employment. During the year 1904-5, 323,000 dinners were given from the fund initiated by the Lord Mayor, besides, of course, large numbers of garments and boots, which were supplied by friends and teachers. The sum of £1,721 was raised, and at the close of the session a balance of £105 was handed to the Education Committee for the following year. (See report herewith.)*

6. In April, 1905, a special meeting of the Education Committee was held to consider the necessity of taking further steps, and at that meeting a return was presented of the number of underfed children throughout the City. It was resolved that the Lord Mayor be recommended to convene a meeting of voluntary workers with a view to considering the question of providing meals for underfed school children, the cost to be defrayed by voluntary subscriptions, the school attendance officers to be empowered to make enquiries from time to time as to the circumstances of children so that only necessitous cases should be dealt with.

7. Shortly afterwards the Local Government Board issued "The Relief (School Children) Order, 1905," addressed to the guardians of the poor. This to some extent changed the position and accordingly, in September, 1905, the Chairman of the Education Committee convened a conference of representatives of the four boards of guardians having jurisdiction in Leeds as to the best means of carrying into effect the Relief (School Children) Order; that conference met in the Education Offices on October 9th, 1905, and it was resolved that the initial information as to the necessity for free meals should come from the Masters and Mistresses of the public elementary schools through the Education Committee, and that the guardians should undertake to deal with certain cases and the Education Committee with other cases. The attendance officers of the committee were fully empowered to do all that was necessary, but when the order came to be worked the guardians were met with difficulties at various points. In the result, although they supplied 3,399 meals, yet the feeling of the Committee was that there were many cases unrelieved which the guardians were unable to deal with.

8. The Education Committee had received a balance of £105 from the previous year's fund, and this was supplemented by a further sum of £11, but the expenditure incurred was £128 in excess of this sum. Twenty-seven thousand seven hundred and fifty-four meals were supplied by the Education Committee and thus the grand total of meals supplied by education authority and Poor Law guardians reached 31,153.

9. On December 8th, 1906, the Education Committee were again in conference with the Poor Law guardians, with the result that the arrangements for the winter session of 1906-7 have been initiated by the education authority, and the guardians have agreed to co-operate as far as necessary. The Lord Mayor of the city, Mr. Joseph Hepworth, generously placed the sum of £500 at the service of the Committee for the feeding of children.

10. The passing of the "Provision of Meals" Act has however, largely changed the conditions, and it will be the fault of the local Education authority if underfed school children are not provided for and wage-earning parents compelled to pay in certain cases if compulsion be needful.

11. The question of establishing school canteens at suitable centres will be brought before the Education Committee in due course.

12. It ought also to be mentioned that the Education Committee are the managers of two Day Industrial Schools, and that at these schools the Committee have received a number of voluntary cases from extremely poor families, on the parents undertaking to pay 1s. per child per week. The supply of three good meals a day has been of great benefit to the children in attendance, who compare favourably with the children attending the ordinary public elementary schools. Although the industrial school children are largely drawn from the neglected classes of the population they take a good position in school competitions for swimming, etc., and are particularly smart in school drills and exercises.

13. The result of the continuous feeding of school children at St. Peter's Square Council School may be regarded on the whole as satisfactory. The children fed appear to be happier, more genial, and consequently more responsive to school work. Of course it has frequently happened that exceedingly sharp children have possessed ill-nourished bodies. The following are the results of the personal observation of the headmaster in St. Peter's Square School during the last three years:—

"For the past three years a number of scholars attending this school have been fed daily (i.e., on school days), and I have no doubt in my mind of the great benefit both physically and mentally to the children thus fed.

"I have known scholars through sheer fatigue regularly fall asleep in the afternoons, but, after a course of systematic feeding, this weariness has passed away, and the scholars have been much brighter and have worked with much more alertness and energy.

"The improvement in cases of emaciated and weak children has been most noticeable in several instances, and both teachers and parents have acknowledged the great improvement both in bodily and mental vigour after a few weeks of good, wholesome food.

"As a further proof, although a side issue, I may point out that many of the scholars attending this school find it a necessity to go into the workhouse for some months during the year. They return to school clean, strong, healthy scholars, very much improved in physique and mental activity after their stay in that institution, where they were well and regularly fed; and it has made me feel very sad on many occasions to see the gradual degeneration as they fell into their old ways of living from hand to mouth. I have remarked on this change many times both at Sweet Street and St. Peter's Square.

* Not printed.

"From the moral stand point also I thoroughly believe the feeding has done good.

"I have noticed that many scholars who did not join in the games of the other scholars, but used to stand about and slink in corners, now, after being well fed, are more active and buoyant and take pleasure in the games of their schoolfellows."

14. It appears from the foregoing statement that the efforts made to feed children have been sporadic and not on a carefully systematised plan covering the entire city. The new Act provides a constitutional method of dealing with cases of difficulty without allowing the neglectful parent to escape his responsibility. With careful administration it ought to be possible to meet all cases of real necessity.

15. Careless and neglectful parents should be made to suffer for their misdeeds. Parents otherwise industrious, but reduced by want of work to a state requiring temporary assistance should be helped without any taint of pauperism attaching. The children under any circumstances should not be allowed to suffer.

16. In conclusion it may be mentioned that in the cookery centres and in the Domestic Economy courses in the schools generally, instruction is given in the preparation of food and food values.

APPENDIX No. LXXXIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. W. LONGBOTTOM, SHEFFIELD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. At your request I will endeavour to write a brief statement on the subjects enumerated.

2. As a general practitioner I have opportunity of observing the work done amongst the poor and generally consider it good; particularly the removal of infectious diseases and their treatment in the city hospitals. The inspectors do their work tactfully and good results should come from the instructions now being given by the lady inspectors on infant feeding.

3. The use of diachylon as an abortifacient has been common amongst the poor and the recent action of the medical officer, which resulted in convictions against midwives for selling pills, is sure to have a very salutary effect.

4. The education committee has recently appointed a medical officer and his visits to the schools should do good, but in my opinion the forms sent to parents should state the nature of the child's ailment, as otherwise poor people hesitate about the trouble and expense of going to a doctor.

5. A very weak point is that no sanatorium is provided for consumptives, consequently cases remain in overcrowded dwellings and terrible consequences follow.

6. I will give one instance. A workman named B., living at 105, F. Street suffered from phthisis, and remained at home until he died. I tried to persuade the widow and family to leave the house but did not succeed.

7. At 107, F. Street M. lived (Mrs. M. being the sister of Mrs. B.), and a great deal of intercourse between the families existed. At the time of B's illness no other person showed signs of phthisis, and I feel sure that, had he been promptly removed and the house thoroughly disinfected, no other case would have been likely to occur; but this was not done, consequently in those two houses I can trace five other deaths from tuberculosis directly to the first focus, viz., B. One of the deaths was that of a child who was no relation but was taken into nurse: this child developed tubercular meningitis, although all the other members of its own family were, and have continued to be, healthy.

8. I have met other cases, but this comes to my mind most forcibly, as Mrs. B. died on January 4th, 1907, and Elsie M. to-day, January 9th, 1907.

9. Some of the B. family are married and have children and they are likely to establish foci in other parts of the town, as already some are phthisical and they are squabbling about the division of the bedding on which so many of their race have already died.

10. In the windows of these consumptive-stricken cottages bread, tripe, and other eatables have been exposed for sale during the whole time. Another feature is that the children have been insured and I should like most emphatically to express the opinion that infantile insurance amongst the poor is wrong and distinctly brutalises the people.

11. The child, E. M. had been insured by more than one person, and the way they came to ask for certificates strongly suggested the carrion crows I have seen crowding round some dead bullock left behind from the team. The whole thing is revolting and in my opinion it is high time something were done to stop it.

12. The medical assistance given by the Sheffield The Poor Guardians is good. The medical officer can order anything from the union dispensary and can order food when necessary. District nurses are available to assist in the homes of the poor. Ambulances are provided to remove non-infectious cases requiring hospital treatment to the union infirmary, a thoroughly up-to-date institution. Infectious cases are removed to the city hospitals.

13. The Queen Victoria Jubilee District Nurses, the Samaritan Societies attached to different hospitals, the Neighbour Guilds and other voluntary organisations are doing excellent work, but there is still need for more district nurses.

14. The hospitals provide to a large extent for the poor who do not come under the Poor Law, but some system of investigating the financial position of applicants would lessen the overcrowding and enable the really suitable cases to gain admission more easily. I frequently meet cases of well-to-do people taking advantage of hospital treatment.

15. These are very numerous and in my opinion would be far more satisfactory if they recognised that medical men are working men and are entitled to fair remuneration for their services. The amount paid by these clubs to medical men is generally 3s. per annum per member, and as the doctor provides all medicines this does not give a living wage to the doctor, hence the work is often unsatisfactory.

16. There is a class which is too proud to apply for Poor Law assistance, but not well enough off to pay for medical attendance in emergency, and I feel strongly that some provision should be made for this class. At present in the event of sudden illness or accident everything is left to the chance that some charitable medical man will work and provide medicines and dressings for nothing. If a street accident occurs a policeman may take the injured person into the nearest surgery, but no one is responsible for payment. If sudden illness occurs in the night the nearest doctor is called, but no one pays, though a life may be saved.

17. Surely some provision should be made by the public: why should all this charity be demanded from a hard-working profession? It should be possible for the necessitous poor to apply to the local police station and get an order for the attendance of a medical man who would be paid out of some public fund for emergency cases.

18. I see no reason why the whole work of public medical assistance to the poor should not be handed over to the city council, but feel strongly that nothing should be done to prevent charitable and voluntary effort for hospitals.

19. If the administration of the Poor Law were handed over to a committee of the city council the entire question of medically assisting the poor could be co-operated more satisfactorily and more economically.

20. I do not think the health of the community does seriously suffer owing to the insufficiency in amount or quality of the medical assistance available for the poor.

APPENDIX No. LXXXIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. D. LORD, SOLICITOR, MEMBER OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS, BRAMLEY UNION

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I have been a member of the Bramley Union Board of Guardians for nearly six years.

2. The Union is situate in a working-class district.

3. A great number of persons applying for relief in this union are those who have been brought to that position by circumstances over which they have had no control, but at the same time there is a great number who are solely to blame on account of their careless and improvident way of living, as I have known cases where the husband has been in receipt of good wages up to a few weeks before the application for relief, and immediately misfortune overtakes the family they have no course open to them but to apply to the union for relief. I know one case, a person who is now an inmate in our workhouse previously received about £10 per week as wages at one of the forges, and immediately his health gave way, on account perhaps of age, he was compelled to go to the union for relief.

4. With regard to the cause of pauperism, in my opinion a great number of the paupers inherit their pauperism. I mean by this if enquiry were made into their antecedents it would be found that their father or mother or grandfather or grandmother died in the workhouse or otherwise were in receipt of relief at the date of their death, and such persons have previously lived simply from hand to mouth.

5. I agree that drink is to a considerable extent responsible for a deal of the pauperism, but there are other causes in my estimation which are equally as responsible; for example, improvidence, being trained badly in childhood, which means when the children grow up to manhood or womanhood they are satisfied with just a bare existence, and when misfortune overtakes them they have only the union to apply to for relief, having had no idea of providing for a rainy day.

6. If it were possible to elect business men or men who have retired from business to act as guardians I think these are the men who should act as guardians, and not a servant or a working man; my reason for this being that I know at the forthcoming election in March there will be a considerable number of working men known as "Labour men" placed in the field as candidates in the union of which I am a member; and though my opinion is that one man is as good as another in certain places, yet I think that an ordinary artisan is not such a person as should be appointed to distribute the ratepayers' money amongst his fellow men, for this reason. The chances are he lives in a small house and pays 4s. to 6s. per week, clear of rates, and so far as he is concerned it does not affect him what the poor and the other rates amount to. He is paid for every hour he spends as a member of the board he is elected on, and therefore he is a good attender; and from experience I know that the principle of these labour representatives is to vote for the largest sum in relief that can possibly be given to any applicant, no matter what the circumstances are, and, as you are aware, a small body of men sitting in committee distributing relief can ignore what the relieving officer may suggest and give the applicant what they think fit.

Now I contend that guardians are appointed to relieve destitution. They are not a philanthropic institution, and they are appointed to administer to applicants such relief as in their opinion will relieve their destitution; but I find relief is given otherwise if our friend the Labour candidate has his way.

7. Then a word as regards lady candidates. The female sex may be more tender hearted towards the poor, yet in my opinion lady members on a board of guardians are not necessary, my reason being that, with the help of the master and matron, the nurses, and the relieving officers, the guardians can get to know all the requirements of the female applicants and inmates and remedy their requirements no matter how delicate they may be.

8. As regards the administration of relief in the Bramley Union I am satisfied that the system adopted at the present time is a wrong one, viz.:—guardians of W. district taking the applicants for relief for that particular district, and the guardians for A district taking the applicants for their particular district.

In my opinion the guardians for their own particular locality in certain cases may act too generously with the applicants for relief, whereas if the guardians elected by W district heard the applicants for relief from the A district and vice versa they would hear the report of the relieving officer and, if he were a competent person, they would get full particulars from him and they could then hear the applicant's version of the case and administer relief accordingly, and this mode of procedure would remedy another fault. A man may have done wrong and his wife and children may be destitute, but that is no reason why they should suffer; and my opinion is that guardians who were really strangers to the applicants would administer the law, that is, would relieve the destitution, and that only.

9. There is another wrong impression which in my opinion certain guardians seem to have, and that is with regard to test-labour. If an able-bodied person under sixty years of age applies for relief he is given in all probability test-work and according to the regulations laid down by the Local Government Board he has to work five days each week from say 9 o'clock to 5 o'clock. Now what is the sum which should be paid to that man for his five days' work? and this is where I differ from several guardians at the Bramley Union. I say he should be paid sufficient to relieve his destitution, and it should not in any way be recognised that the pay is given to him for what work he does, because we do not want to find him work, we want him to find work himself outside, and I say that I know for a fact that in several cases of test-labour at Bramley Union men have been paid so much that they have been satisfied with the sum they were getting and never troubled to find any work at all, and in all probability if their circumstances were carefully gone into it would be found that the money they received from the relieving officer never went into the home at all, but that the wife was working, very likely charring, and the children were existing as best they could on the relief in kind given by the relieving officer and by friends and neighbours, and I am of opinion that with regard to test labour some very serious alteration should be made. I suggest relief in kind only be given, except in special cases.

10. Also with regard to deserted women. In my opinion, though I do not say none are deserving, so as to meet every case no deserted woman should be relieved outside and if anything be done they should be taken inside the workhouse, as in seven cases out of ten the deserted women so called are in communication with their husbands, unknown to guardians and relieving officer, and the guardians are imposed upon.

11. In my opinion it would be very unwise to appoint every chairman of guardians a Justice of the Peace.

12. Some alteration of the law relating to "Settlement" should be made. There are many difficulties in the present system and the expenses incurred are in some cases very heavy. The time which is spent by guardians and clerks on settlement cases is amazing, and I trust the Commission will take this matter into their serious consideration.

13. As regards tramps. In my opinion the tramps should have isolated cells and in all unions tramps should have the same diet. If tramps could be transferred to a colony for a period of time and as they showed signs of improvement to be given better work and encouraged to adopt a different life it might be the means of stamping them out altogether.

APPENDIX No. LXXXV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. CHARLES LUPTON, HON. TREASURER OF THE GENERAL INFIRMARY, LEEDS, WITH REFERENCE TO THE MEDICAL ASSISTANCE OF THE POOR IN LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The chief agencies in Leeds for assisting the poor with medicine and surgical treatment or advice are :—

(1) The Sanitary Authority, i.e., the Leeds City Council which undertakes the provision of infectious diseases hospitals, and provides for the accommodation of patients suffering from smallpox, typhoid, scarlet fever, diphtheria and measles.

They have a large and well equipped set of hospitals worked on modern line.

(2) The Leeds Board of Guardians and the Hunslet Board of Guardians.—Two Poor Law unions both within the City of Leeds—which each have large hospitals (the Leeds hospital containing I believe 800 beds) which afford provision for persons suffering from chronic complaints which incapacitate them from earning their livelihood, and for persons suffering from old age, and which also deal with a considerable number of other medical and surgical cases.

(3) The General Infirmary at Leeds, which affords medical and surgical assistance both to persons in Leeds and to persons who come from a wide area round Leeds. This hospital has both in-patients and out-patients and deals with persons of all ages and sexes.

(4) The Women and Children's Hospital, which affords medical and surgical assistance to women as in-patients and to a small extent to children as in-patients, and has a considerable department for women and children as out-patients.

The patients of this hospital are drawn from Leeds and a considerable area of country round.

(5) The Leeds Public Dispensary, which has a large out-patient department and also attends patients at their own homes ; its patients are drawn from Leeds.

(6) The Leeds Maternity Hospital, which maintains a small lying-in hospital for poor women, and also attends patients at their own homes.

(7) The Cookridge Convalescent Hospital provides a home for workpeople and others who require a period of rest after illness of a non-infectious character.

(8) The Meanwood Convalescent Home for Children provides a home for children of poor parents who require rest and change after illness of a non-infectious character.

(9) The Leeds Workpeople's Hospital Fund, which is mainly a collecting agency for the other voluntary hospitals and institutions, but which also maintains two convalescent homes for men and women respectively, and is shortly to add a convalescent home for children. The benefits of these homes are chiefly confined to the families of the subscribers to the Workpeople's Hospital Fund.

(10) The Leeds District Nursing Association, which provides gratuitous nursing for the poor in various districts of Leeds.

(11) The Leeds Tuberculosis Association, which maintains two hospitals for patients suffering from tuberculosis in its various forms. These are largely supported by grants from the City Council and other public bodies.

(12) There are numerous workmen's clubs for providing medical and surgical assistance to their members.

2. My knowledge of the medical assistance of the poor in Leeds has been chiefly derived from my connection with the General Infirmary at Leeds, and I therefore propose to devote my statement chiefly to the work of that institution and to points which have arisen in connection with it.

3. The infirmary possess a central hospital with accommodation for 436 in-patients, in which 397 beds are always kept made up and ready for immediate use, and a well arranged out-patient department which compares favourably with any out-patient department which I have seen. The infirmary also maintains two semi-convalescent hospitals, which are situate in the country about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the infirmary proper.

4. These two hospitals contain between them eighty-eight beds, which are always full, and they may really be classed as part of the infirmary wards, as the patients who are sent there are all in the earlier stages of convalescence, and quite unfit to be sent to their own homes.

5. A fully qualified resident surgeon is always kept at these hospitals and the hospitals have a full staff of nurses who are drafted to them from the infirmary staff.

6. New in-patients to the number of 6,760 were admitted to the infirmary during 1906, which, with the 292 in-patients remaining in the hospital at the end of 1905, make 7,052 in-patients treated during the year. In the same year, 1906, 39,666 new out-patients were treated, and 2,860 out-patients remained under treatment at the end of 1905, making 42,526 out-patients treated during the year.

7. The Returns for 1906 are not complete, but in 1905 when we had 45,000 patients, 17,000 were men, 15,000, women, and 13,000 children.

The in-patients in 1906, were divided as follows :—

Medical	-	-	-	-	1,235
Surgical	-	-	-	-	4,290
Ophthalmic and aural	-	-	-	-	920

6,445

8. In 1905, 906 of these patients spent part of their time in the two semi-convalescent hospitals, and a larger number have gone there during 1906.

9. The patients, especially the in-patients, are drawn from a very wide area, which includes all Yorkshire, North of Leeds, and a great part of the county to the south. A few come from even more distant places.

10. In 1905, 3,796 in-patients came from Leeds and its townships, and 2,649 in-patients from places outside. Of the out-patients, about six-sevenths come from Leeds and its immediate vicinity ; the remaining one-seventh or about 6,000 from the wider area above indicated.

11. The patients are drawn almost entirely from the poorer labouring classes or from persons of the lower, middle and artisan classes.

12. In July, 1897, the infirmary board began a system of enquiry into percentages of the persons who applied for help and the immediate result was a large decrease in the number of out-patients treated, as is shown by the following figures :—

Out-patients treated in year ending December 31st, 1896, 37,623.

Out-patients treated in year ending December 31st, 1897, 34,957.

13. These enquiries are made upon the lines shown on the accompanying sheets. (See Appendix LXXXV. (A) and (B)).

14. Cases suffering from destitution are referred to the Poor Law authorities, but the receipt of out door relief is not considered a bar to treatment in the infirmary.

15. Since this systematic investigation has been carried on, a considerable number of cases of fraud have been discovered, and many persons have no doubt been deterred by it from coming to the infirmary, but the chief effect has been to reduce the number of trivial cases treated.

16. The efforts of a single charity in this direction cannot be very effective from a public point of view, because in the absence of combined action patients who are refused at one institution as ineligible may be accepted at another.

17. It is well worth consideration whether some joint system of enquiry as to out-patients, cannot be undertaken by the several institutions. This would also prevent persons from attending as patients at several institutions at the same time, as they sometimes do.

18. There is not the same danger of fraud in the case of in-patients. Owing to the great pressure on the accommodation, trivial cases cannot obtain admission, or if admitted are speedily sent out; and the remaining cases are generally further enquired into before any grave operation is performed.

19. It may be noted that in spite of the serious character of the operations constantly being performed the average period for which in-patients remain in the hospital is short, the average for the year 1905 being only 19·46 day.

20. I am not of opinion that there is any overlapping of moment between the work done at the infirmary and that done at the hospitals for infectious diseases which are carried on by the city council as the local sanitary authority.

21. Since the recent extension of the city hospitals of this class, the Leeds Infirmary has refused to take patients suffering from diphtheria in any but the most urgent cases; and have also been able to pass on to the city hospitals other infectious cases which were formerly a source of great trouble and difficulty.

22. There may be some overlapping between the work done at the infirmary and the Poor Law hospitals, but I think that investigation would show that this is not of importance.

23. I am not of opinion that it would be either expedient or possible to hand over the work done by the infirmary to either: (1) The Leeds City Council; or (2) the Poor Law authorities.

24. As mentioned above, the patients who resort to the infirmary are drawn from a wide area, of which the Leeds City and the areas constituting the two Poor Law unions are only small parts; and it would be unfair to expect that the ratepayers of one of these areas should undertake for the ratepayers of the others, the work which is now done for them by the infirmary, whilst it would be a public calamity if such work now done by public benevolence were stopped.

25. Again it would be difficult if not impossible for any public body to command the services of men similar to those who now hold the honorary medical and surgical positions at the infirmary; and even if their services could be obtained it could only be at great cost to the community.

26. Owing to the high reputation of the infirmary and its close connection with an important medical school now part of the University of Leeds, a band of physicians and surgeons has grown up in Leeds who devote themselves to hospital practice.

27. The consulting work which comes as a direct consequence from their association with the hospital, leads to their establishing large private practices, and they tend to maintain their connection with the infirmary to the great advantage of the patients.

28. The subscribers to the infirmary realising the great assistance which such men can render to a hospital, and recognising the great share which they have had in working the infirmary up to its present position, have given them a much larger share in its management than would be possible under municipal management.

29. If the funds needed for the maintenance of the institution were produced by rates the doctors would become paid officials instead of persons who give their services, and as such entitled to share in the management of the charity.

30. It should be remembered that the infirmary draws a considerable portion of its income from the very classes who benefit from its operations, the workpeople having contributed £6,395 directly towards its funds in 1905, besides a good deal of other money which cannot be traced so directly to them but which really comes from their class.

31. There is every indication that this sum will be increased in the future, and that the gifts are accompanied with a growing feeling that only those who can fairly claim such assistance should be allowed to receive benefit; therefrom.

32. If the infirmary were thrown upon the rates this feeling would disappear and much greater claims would be made upon the infirmary, whilst its present means of support would be largely withdrawn, as it must be remembered that the subscriptions of the well-to-do classes and those of the workpeople would stop at once if the infirmary was once taken over by a public authority.

33. But while this is the case, and whilst it is difficult to see how any satisfactory arrangement can be made by which the work of the infirmary should be transferred to a rate-supported institution, it is worth considering whether the experience of dealing with infectious diseases should be confined to the small class of doctors who look after municipal hospitals, or whether some steps should not be taken to spread the advantages of the experience which is constantly being accumulated there.

34. I am of opinion that benefit might ensue from a closer combination than exists at present between the various voluntary agencies for giving medical assistance to the poor.

35. There is no doubt that the infirmary and the Women and Children's hospital, which are not 100 yards away from each other, are both doing substantially the same class of work and for the same class of people, and it would seem wiser that some arrangement should be made by which they should respectively mark out some particular part of the field as their own. The same remarks apply as above indicated to the out-patient departments of the infirmary, the dispensary, and the Women and Children's hospital, and I believe that some combined system of enquiry into the circumstances of the out-patients receiving help from these three institutions could not but be of advantage to all concerned.

36. I would also call attention to the position of maternity work for the poor in Leeds. This is now carried on by three agencies:—

(1) The infirmary maintains an external department by which about 600 confinements are attended each year at their own homes. The honorary obstetric physician of the infirmary is the head of the department, and he is assisted by a fully qualified resident obstetric officer and by a number of students.

This work is successful so far as it goes and of great advantage in giving training to the students, but it fails to supply opportunities of clinical observation and teaching.

(2) The Women and Children's hospital which has a small but well-equipped department for maternity cases, to which in-patients are admitted, but it has no external department. There are some difficulties in the way of admitting students, and the small number of cases which can be treated rather limits its usefulness.

(3) The Leeds Ladies' Maternity Hospital takes both in-patients and out-patients, but it has no resident surgeon, only a resident midwife; students are admitted.

37. No one of these agencies seems entirely satisfactory by itself, and it would seem worth considering whether the whole system of maternity work in Leeds could not be better adjusted than it is at present.

38. I would also point out that in the future it will become more and more necessary for each voluntary hospital to have access to properly equipped pathological departments, X ray departments and the like, and that the cost of separate provision of the kind for each hospital will be prohibitive.

39. It seems to be desirable and I think it would be possible to arrange a combined system of working the several institutions, which would effect economy and increased usefulness while maintaining the individuality of each institution—a matter of no small importance in connection with charitable undertakings.

40. I am not of opinion that the health of the community in Leeds suffers owing to the insufficiency in amount or quality of the medical assistance at present available for the poor; but I have endeavoured to indicate in the foregoing statement some points where I think changes could be advantageously effected in the existing arrangement.

APPENDIX No. LXXXVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. PETER MACGREGOR, HON. SURGEON, HUDDERSFIELD INFIRMARY, ETC.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I have been in practice in Huddersfield for close upon thirty years and have an intimate knowledge of the operative and poorer classes of society generally. I was for a few weeks, many years ago, surgeon to the workhouse hospital at Crosland Moor and am still deputy for the present workhouse surgeon, Dr. Wilson.

2. I am of opinion that in any amendments of the Poor Laws the guardians should be relieved of a good deal of their present duties, and have more freedom in dealing with matters that more properly appertain to them in their character of guardians of the poor.

Vaccination

3. I am of opinion that the guardians should cease to have anything to do with the carrying out of the laws relating to vaccination, and that the sanitary committees of corporations and county councils should become the authority with their medical officer of health at the head of the department.

Registration of births and deaths.

4. I am also of opinion that the registration of births and deaths should be under the control of the sanitary committees and that the medical officer of health should be the nominal head of this department also. There are many reasons for making this change, but it is enough to point out that the only people who are interested in those statistics and for whose benefit alone they are compiled are the sanitary authorities.

Medical agencies.

5. The medical agencies which exist in the borough for the relief of the poor are the sanitary committee. The general infirmary and the Poor Law hospital and the Poor Law district medical officers, and the convalescent home at Meltham.

The Sanitary Committee.

6. Under their local Acts the sanitary committee remove to their hospital at Mill Hill all the so-called group of zymotic diseases except such as are certified as efficiently isolated and nursed in their own homes. Measles are also notifiable, and an attempt was made to deal with them by removal into hospital, but this has now been abandoned.

Midwives Act.

7. The sanitary committee with their medical officer of health superintend the operations of certified midwives under the recent Act, but whilst the Act demands that under certain circumstances the midwife must send for a medical practitioner, it makes no provision for the remuneration of the practitioner called in. These cases occurring amongst poor and usually dirty people, medical men are very chary at turning out at all hours of the night to perform disagreeable duties for which they get neither thanks nor remuneration. I am of opinion that the Poor Law medical officer for the district should be the medical man to whom the midwife sends for assistance, and that his fees should be paid by the sanitary committee.

The infirmary.

8. The most important institution in the borough for the medical assistance of the poor is the infirmary, which is maintained solely by voluntary subscriptions. We admit all nominally poor people, paupers and non-paupers, freely to our out-patient department and into our wards.

9. We supply medicines, surgical dressings, cod liver oil, flannel and everything except surgical instruments and appliances free, and in exceptional cases, where the surgeon certifies the parties as too poor to pay for their surgical appliances, we provide those also, but we always endeavour if at all possible, to get the patient to pay part or whole of the cost of surgical appliances.

Guardians' donations to infirmary.

10. The guardians, two years ago, made us a grant of £100 per annum; and both before and since making this annual subscription we have freely admitted paupers to all the benefits of the institution and have willingly admitted cases from their hospital to have important operations performed.

The Poor Law hospital and district medical officers.

11. The sub-division of the town into districts for the Poor Law medical officers is most arbitrary and inconvenient, both to the medical officers and to the poor, and stands in need of revision from time to time, as the centres of population shift.

12. The Poor Law hospital is a modern, well-staffed, well-appointed institution, which is not half as useful as it might be. Poor law hospital.

13. The beds are all practically occupied by old, decrepit and incurable men and women in the last stages of physical and mental decay.

14. I would strongly urge that the chronic and incurable cases be segregated in a block to themselves, and that provision should be made for the reception and treatment of acute cases sent in by the district Poor Law medical officers.

15. I am of opinion that this would necessitate the appointment of a resident house surgeon who would act under the supervision of a visiting medical officer.

16. I am opposed to the erection of an operating surgical theatre in Poor Law hospitals, and consider that surgical operation can be more efficiently performed in the infirmary and that the payment of a handsome subsidy by the guardians would mean not only a saving of thousands of pounds annually to the ratepayers but a distinct gain to the poor.

17. We have practically no medical clubs in Huddersfield, but I have had experience of their working in other districts and am opposed to them on principle because in my opinion it means a sweating of the medical profession on the one hand and a perfunctory and inefficient performance of duties on the other. Medical clubs.

18. The last important institution we have for medically assisting the poor is the Meltham convalescent home, an institution erected and endowed by the generosity of Mr. Charles Brooke. All poor people, convalescent from sickness, accident or surgical operations, are received here for a term of three weeks, or longer in special cases, on the request of the medical attendant. Meltham Convalescent Home.

Cases of pulmonary phthisis are not admitted.

19. In my opinion the medical agencies for assisting the poor in this town are complementary, and the co-operation between them is highly beneficial and by no means overlapping, and I am further of opinion that it is impossible to hand over to one authority the whole work and duty of medical assistance to the poor and for these reasons :— Question of the whole medical care of the poor.

(a) The pauper class, i.e., those in receipt of Poor Law relief are not the only class whose needs have to be considered.

(b) There is a class above them independent and self-respecting who would bitterly resent being called paupers and who are yet urgent objects of charitable medical assistance.

(c) Unskilled workers with broken limbs, children with diseased joints, men, women, and children with urgent surgical ailments, gladly and gratefully enter voluntary hospitals to which many of them have contributed their mite, but would bitterly resent the loss of independence and degradation of being made paupers.

(d) There is still another class who, although poor in the usual acceptation of the term, yet stand in need of voluntary medical assistance and would never dream of accepting it from the Poor Law authorities.

(e) The great complexity and attention to detail, essential in major modern surgical operations, make them not only expensive but incapable of performance in cottage homes and in those of small shopkeepers, clerks, etc.

(f) For this class, then, equally with the really poor, the existence of voluntary hospitals is a vital necessity.

and 20. I am of opinion that the guardians should aim at maintaining the family life and that widows of good character left with young families should be treated generously in the matter of outdoor relief so that in the future the children may become strong and capable citizens.

21. I am of opinion that drastic methods should be adopted in dealing with the habitual tramp class, and I would strongly urge that the children should be detained by the Poor Law authorities and the parents compelled to contribute towards their support, failing which the local authority should be reimbursed from the State.

22. I am further of opinion that during epidemics of Habitual small-pox the vagrant class should be compelled to submit tramps and to vaccination or re-vaccination, as the case may be, and smallpox. that the medical officer of health for the district should have power, under an Order granted by a Justice of the Peace, of forcibly detaining cases of a suspicious character or cases which had come from a suspected area, in quarantine.

APPENDIX No. LXXXVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. F. L. MACKENZIE, DISTRICT MEDICAL OFFICER, HUDDERSFIELD UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. My experience as a general practitioner in this district extends over a period of twenty years and as medical officer for the Lockwood district of the Huddersfield Union since 1894.

2. My district has an area of 1,454 acres and a population of 17,071. The population is chiefly artisan, the great majority being workers in the woollen mills, with a considerable percentage of mechanics, quarry men and out-of-door labourers. Under ordinary conditions it may be said there are no unemployed people who are able and willing to work.

3. Putting out of account the medical assistance given to the poor by Huddersfield Infirmary in its in-patient and out-patient departments, and that provided by the corporation in the removal of all cases of infectious disease to its sanatorium, the whole work devolves upon the medical men in the district.

4. There is no visiting in this district done by medical officers belonging to the infirmary or any other institution, nor are there any medical clubs. Those who are unable to pay for medical attendance are either attended by me as medical officer under my contract or they represent so much bad debt to my fellow practitioners and myself.

5. The large number of people who are on the borderland of being "poor" in relation to medical assistance, pay the private collectors of the doctors in small sums (from 6d. upwards) with greater or less regularity.

6. This system of course involves large nominal debts on the part of the people in many cases, but I am not aware that it is a source of anxiety or worry, as no unreasonable pressure is used and such debts are constantly cancelled by ill health or death.

7. By an arrangement between the board of guardians and the board of the infirmary, emergency cases involving surgical treatment may be removed direct to the infirmary by the relieving officer. There is no provision for maternity cases in any institution in Huddersfield except the workhouse.

8. Amongst the poor most of the work is done by midwives. Doctors, as a rule, refuse to attend unless previously engaged to do so, except when requested by a midwife.

9. The number of cases attended at home by me on a relieving officer's order is small—six or eight a year.

10. Augmenting the purely medical assistance are various nursing agencies. Victoria nurses attend parish patients and others alike and a nursing sister is attached to Lockwood Parish Church and one to Rashcliffe Parish Church, both of which are in this district.

11. No distinction is made between parish and other patients in their work.

12. From the foregoing it will be seen that in this district the questions of co-operation and overlapping hardly arise, unless it be to a small extent on the part of the nurses.

13. Whilst under the conditions which exist here there are obvious possibilities of failure on the part of the poor to obtain medical help; as a matter of experience I have no reason to suppose that any considerable number have suffered in this way.

14. The difficulty here is not with the honest poor, but with the very considerable section of improvident, who are not on the one hand entitled to parish assistance nor to the consideration of private practitioners on the other. How these are to be provided for in fairness to others I do not know; the guardians clearly ought not to help and the doctors' only defence is to refuse to attend.

15. How one authority or agency can fairly help such people I fail to see, and yet they must have medical attendance. Speaking generally, I should say the poor in this district have sufficient and capable attendance.

16. Much work is done by the general practitioners which goes unpaid for, but the poor do not suffer, and I think the Commission would find confirmation of this by enquiry amongst the people.

17. Considering the importance of nursing in the treatment of the poor, it appears to me that much help could be given by nurses whose duty it would be not merely to visit but to remain for some time with the sick poor, particularly in the night.

APPENDIX No. LXXXVIII.

STATEMENT* OF EVIDENCE BY MR. FREDERICK WILLIAM MEE, CLERK TO THE GUARDIANS, HUNSLET UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

Local Information.

1. I have been concerned in Poor Law administration in the Hunslet Union for over sixteen years, having been clerk to the guardians for over nine years and previously assistant clerk.

2. The Hunslet Union comprises seven townships—two in the City of Leeds and five in the West Riding. It is 12,120 acres in extent—had a population in 1901 of 83,002, and has a present rateable value of £373,499, and an assessable value of £368,233. The population has increased in thirty years from 46,271 or 79 per cent. The township of Hunslet, with its 1,244 acres, has 69,064 inhabitants, or 55½ per acre. The rest of the union has 13,938 persons on 10,876 acres, or 1½ per acre.

Constitution of Board of Guardians, etc.

3. The board is twenty-four in number (increased in 1902 from nineteen); fourteen represent city townships and ten West Riding townships. Eighteen are elected as guardians and six as rural district councillors.

4. They occupy between them property rated altogether at £729 net, giving an average of £30 7s. 9d., although three are not occupiers, and one does not pay rates direct.

5. Eleven of them are also owners of property within the union.

6. During the year 1905–6 the total number of attendances at board and committee meetings was 1,672, being 78 per cent. of possible attendances and an average of seventy for each guardian.

7. The total number of meetings was 173.

Changes in Constitution of Board.

8. The board retire as a whole every third year.

9. At the election in 1904 nine new members were returned out of twenty-four. One new member had been elected in 1903, and five new ones had been returned at an extraordinary election in 1902, so fourteen out of twenty-four had, when the present board came into office, less than two years' experience.

10. In 1891 (the last election under the old system) six out of nineteen were new members; in 1894 twelve out of nineteen had no experience; in 1898 ten out of nineteen had only one year's experience; and in 1901 five out of nineteen had less than two years' experience. Since the Local Government Act, 1894, there has been only one general election (1901) where a majority of members with experience was returned, although on only one occasion (1904) has there been any burning question before the electors.

11. When the present board was elected the average experience in Poor Law administration was three years. The average has now gone up to six years, but after the next election it is certain to go down again.

Interest in Elections.

12. The following figures relating to the townships or wards where contested elections for the office of guardian have taken place will indicate the interest taken by the electors:—

	No. on Registers.	No. Voting.	Per- centage Voting.
1904 General Election -	15,029	5,787	38·5
1902 Extraordinary Election.	7,507	3,131	41·7
1901 General Election -	8,363	2,425	29·
1899 Casual Election -	5,547	1,374	24·7
1898 General Election -	12,814	4,484	35·
1894 General Election -	12,119	4,719	38·9

13. The only figures I can give showing on similar lines the interest taken in elections under the old system have reference to a poll in October, 1890, whether guardians should be elected triennially, or not, when 5,304 out of 13,976 filled up their papers, or 38 per cent.

14. I think this illustration of the limited public interest in the work of guardian boards accounts in a fair measure for the changes in the constitution of the boards. To be a representative of the public and to have a voice in the distribution of thousands of pounds annually is naturally an attraction and suggests visions of honour and renown, but I fear in many cases the unostentatious work of the board room and committee room becomes humdrum and dry, the workers tire and the first opportunity is afforded for some one else to undertake it.

15. I consider that to secure continuity of policy and steadiness in administration it is essential to maintain a majority at all times of experienced representatives by the compulsory retirement of guardians by thirds each year, or by the constitution of a bench of aldermen elected by the board, and containing men of experience in Poor Law administration, charitable work, and hospital management and representatives of friendly societies and trades unions to the number of, say, one-third of the elected guardians, as in the case of municipal corporations, or, perhaps better still, by both means.

Social and Industrial Conditions.

16. The population is almost entirely industrial, and there is a considerable proportion of skilled artisans and their families.

17. The principal occupations are:—

Males.—Engineers, boiler-makers, coal miners, railway workers, glass blowers, steel workers, quarrymen, tailors, shoemakers and printers.

Females.—Tailoresses, shirt and blouse makers, paper bag and box makers, confectioners, domestic servants, and charwomen.

18. The engineering industry is the principal one in Hunslet; it comprises the making of locomotives, steam ploughs, boilers, pumps, hydraulic machinery, motor waggons, machine tools and in fact almost every class of machinery, and at ordinary times gives an employment to some 9,000 workmen. Of these about 85 per cent. are skilled, and 15 per cent. unskilled. The standard rate of wages of fitters and turners is 34s., and of blacksmiths 35s. per week of fifty-four hours, and a considerable amount of overtime at extra rates is often called for. Fitters are also sent all over the country and out of the country with machinery, and receive special working out allowances. The unskilled men earn as a rule not more than £1 per week, but in busy times can earn 30s. weekly. Of the skilled engineers, the following are the approximate numbers belonging to trade societies with superannuation funds:—

Amalgamated Society of Engineers	-	1,160
Boiler-makers' Society	-	550
Machine-makers' Society	-	350
Tool-makers' Society	-	46
Total	-	2,106

19. In the Amalgamated Society of Engineers the weekly contribution averages 1s. 9d., and except in the few cases where through sickness or other causes they run out of benefit very few members of this society seek relief.

20. The society men of advanced years are not allowed to work at less than the standard wage, and so when they are not worth that wage they lose employment and fall upon their society.

21. On the other hand the non-society man, when finding himself unable to command a higher wage, is at liberty to sell his labour for what it is worth, and in a good state of trade is able to keep off the rates.

22. The same risks obtain in the case of unskilled men and they lose their work at an earlier age than formerly, and, their trade society being only a fighting one, there are no out-of-work or old-age benefits, and unless supported by relatives they must seek Poor Law relief.

23. Coal mining gives employment to over 3,500 males. A good quality of coal is obtained and a fair proportion finds a market near at hand, but employment is somewhat precarious, especially since the introduction of the "Iron Man," and for months together miners have only worked at some of the pits for three days per week. In summer time, too, there is less work than in winter. There has, however, been a great improvement in output recently, and many collieries are now running full time. As a result miners are at present doing very well, and in some pits 65 per cent. of the men are earning £2 per week and upwards.

24. We have the Leeds goods station of the Midland railway in our union and have large sidings and plant of that and the North Eastern Railway Company, and consequently a large number of railway workers reside within the union. Many are transferred from other parts of the country, and as they often bring their parents with them we get quite a number of people belonging to other unions. There are several chemical works in the district where suitable workmen can command a good wage.

25. The steel works employ a different class of men to the engineering works. Many of them earn good wages, but spend a great proportion in drink, and though their families are generally well fed and nourished they are often on the brink of poverty. The labourers in these works are of the same type as the navy—strong and vigorous and able to do a big task of work—and to spend a big share of their wages. The risk to life and limb at these works is great, and there are frequently widows and orphans to provide for out of the rates, which, with the exercise of a little thrift, might in many cases have been avoided.

26. In the tailoring trade female labour has a tendency to displace that of males, and the competition of Jewish workmen does not tend to keep the rate of wages up. Female labour is also prominent in the printing and paper and cardboard box making trades, but it does not very much supplant male labour at present.

27. Most of the females living in the district and working for wages are engaged as weavers, finishers, etc., of cloth, tailoresses or hat and cap makers. In cloth weaving good hands can earn 15s. to £1 weekly, and an experienced tailoress can make 16s. per week of forty-eight hours, while a girl of any energy can earn 7s. or 8s. weekly after a few months' experience. For the best houses there is generally a good offer of labour, and the best class of girls are selected. Except in the case of a few houses who both make and retail, the wholesale tailoring is very much a season trade, and although big wages can be earned in busy times, there is a deal of slack time.

28. Whether a large proportion of females go outside the union to domestic service I rather doubt, but at the last census in four out of seven townships there were more males than females.

29. There is comparatively little employment of married women except as charwomen occasionally, and a healthy tone prevails on this subject generally.

Experiments in Administration.

30. My board were among the first to adopt cottage homes for children. They are on the grouped system.

31. An opportunity has now presented itself for using one of the homes as a receiving home, and it is not intended for the future that any children other than infants under twelve months and sick cases shall enter the workhouse.

32. A new workhouse was opened in October, 1903, with accommodation for 456 inmates. It is arranged on the pavilion system, and has well-equipped infirmary blocks, lunacy block, vagrant wards and separate single room cottages for aged couples. It is, I believe, the only workhouse without accommodation for children.

33. In relief administration the whole arrangements have recently been re-organised, the staff of relieving officers has been increased to four, more effective supervision has been provided for, and the case paper system is to be adopted.

34. An equally important change to be brought about in April next is for the ordinary relief committees to be constituted on a rotary plan, so that except the chairman, no guardian will sit on a committee at two meetings in succession.

35. Hitherto the board has divided itself into three committees, meeting in rotation once a fortnight; such committees are not always evenly balanced and some may be much more generous in the distribution of relief than others, and I am hopeful that the new system will result in more uniformity in practice.

36. It has been found that the giving of medical orders for an unlimited period has led to abuse, and the relieving officers have been directed in every case to make the order terminable within three months.

37. Difficulties have been experienced in regard to the apprenticeship of boys. A wide field of opportunity is opened out for boys of talent in the engineering works of Hunslet, but for want of authority to place lads as outdoor apprentices, and the decay of the system of indoor apprentices, the guardians could not avail themselves of it for the boys under their care. On March 9th, 1899, it was decided to form a Working Boys' Homes Association to take the care and oversight of lads sought to be placed out to a trade to which they could not be apprenticed.

38. Sixteen boys have at different times been under the care of the association, the highest number at one time being ten.

39. During the three years ending March, 1906, the total cost of food, lodging, clothing, sick society contributions and pocket money for boys and management expenses was £792 6s. The boys earned £415 3s. 2d., leaving the net cost £377 2s. 10d., towards which the guardians subscribed £240, and the balance was raised by private subscriptions. The average weekly cost per boy during that period was: gross, 12s. 0½d.; nett, 5s. 8½d. With one exception the boys have been orphans, deserted, or under the control of guardians. The trades to which they have been placed are:—engineers, four; wheelwrights, three; joiners, two; gardeners, two; painter, one; plumber, one; brickmaker, one; blacksmith, one; and engine-cleaner, one. Two changed their occupations; one died; one enlisted; one went to Canada; four are now maintaining themselves; and nine are still under care. Out of the sixteen, eleven are reported as doing well.

40. Children with undesirable relatives and special cases are placed out by the guardians direct at a distance. Six boys and one girl were so placed during the same period as indoor apprentices and many girls have gone into domestic service.

41. I think it desirable that the provisions of the General Consolidated Order should be extended so as to enable guardians to bind lads as outdoor apprentices and to provide for their maintenance during the apprenticeship, instead of handing them over to another body to be placed out as servants rather than apprentices.

42. In January, 1899, my board circularised other unions on these lines, and 147 replies were received. Seventy unions, or 48 per cent., were in favour, two against and seventy-five neutral. Of the unions with a population between 50,000 and 150,000, 63 per cent. were favourable, and of the unions over 150,000, 84 per cent. were in favour.

43. We have also adopted a system of classification for the inmates of the workhouse as follows:—

Class A.—"Aged and infirm over sixty years of age who have resided in the Hunslet Union for a period of not less than twenty years without relief, whose character and conduct during that time will bear the strictest investigation, and who, through no fault of their own, have been unable to provide for old age.

Class B.—"Inmates who are found after investigation to fall short in one or two respects of the requirements of Class A, together with those found to have been of fairly good character and conduct before entering the House, and whose character while in the House has been good.

Class C.—"Inmates not considered suitable for either Classes A or B, and those who are on probation with a view to being promoted to one or the other class, as opportunity occurs, or their continued good conduct whilst in the House justifies.

44. The scheme has worked admirably, the only difficulty I find being in the natural reluctance to put cases into the lowest class and the tendency to put them up at the first opportunity, even when the character prior to admission has been bad.

Forms of Relief.

45. The view I endeavour to impress upon my board is that out-relief should not be given except to thoroughly deserving cases, and that it should only be given to supplement other sources of income, but that where it is given it should not be more than sufficient in amount to maintain the standard of comfort possible to a labouring man with a reasonable family out of an average week's wages except in case of sickness.

46. In almost all other cases, and especially where there is any doubt, I advise a workhouse order, and in the majority of instances my advice is followed. In many cases workhouses have been made so comfortable for the aged and infirm that there is little hesitation nowadays to enter one, and I fear that as a consequence for some able-bodied men the workhouse has its charms and a workhouse order is not such a test of destitution as it should be.

47. Very few workhouses have such a generous diet for able-bodied as is the case in our institution. They are allowed non-distinctive dress even to work in, have a whole day's leave of absence once a fortnight, and are seldom refused an extra day's leave when asked for on the plea of seeking work, even in the cases of feeble-minded men who have no chance whatever of obtaining it. They also have an extra day's leave every bank holiday week, and any inmate over sixty is allowed a fortnight's "Holiday" in the summer-time. A custom has also grown up of recent years of giving several days' leave of absence at holiday times, and at Christmas last thirty-seven inmates were given leave for two to seven days, but none of them wanted to go until the feasting in the institution was over. Men who have been punished for previously returning drunk have been given as much as four days' leave (thereby enabling them to get drunk repeatedly, but to return sober) so as "to save unpleasantness." There is a resolution that men and women shall go out on different days because of abuses, but this overnight leave enables both sexes to meet outside more freely than before.

48. A lady has been in the habit of distributing gifts in money to the inmates every Christmas for many years past, and I fear that in the case of the able-bodied it proves an additional attraction. A man with, say, a wife and four children coming in a week before Christmas would receive 4s. from this lady, and from the guardians a better Christmas feast than he would obtain outside, and be at liberty to go out as soon as he chooses afterwards. Needless to add the prospect pleases.

Classes of Persons applying for Relief, and Causes of Pauperism.

49. The following figures are taken from the Weekly Returns and show the indoor poor on the first Tuesday in October in each of the last six years :—

50. The new workhouse was opened in 1903, and these increases have taken place in spite of the fact that the guardians never offer the workhouse if avoidable."

51. The not able-bodied and temporarily disabled men have more than doubled in number in five years. The occupations of those chargeable on October 2nd last were :—

Engineers, moulders, bricklayers and joiners	32
Bakers, shoemakers, grocers, etc. - - -	25
Coal-miners - - - - -	12
Labourers in various trades - - -	83
Furnacemen and glassworkers - - -	8
Clerks, etc. - - - - -	12
Total - - - - -	172

52. Of all the men only five were married and the workhouse master informs me of the remaining 167, with the exception of the sick and insane, a fair proportion are healthy enough to earn sufficient to keep themselves outside.

53. Of the children in the cottage homes twenty-seven in 1906 belonged to able-bodied inmates as compared with ten in 1901, and twelve, or 22 per cent., of such children were illegitimate, as compared with seven, or 11 per cent., in 1901.

54. The following figures are from the Returns to Mr. Bagenal and show the number of outdoor poor (exclusive of lunatics in asylums and vagrants) relieved during the half-years ended Lady Day in each of the last six years :—

55. The fifty-seven paupers chargeable through desertion in 1906 include fifteen wives and forty-two children. In five cases the wives have separation orders. Relief to this class, also to the families of prisoners, is contrary to our own rules. I fear that the facilities for obtaining separation orders has much to do with the increase of desertion cases.

56. A practice has sprung up lately of men seeking to place sickly wives in the workhouse hospital because of the so-called difficulty of getting a nurse, but no encouragement has been given them.

Class of Persons seeking Election as Guardians.

57. With some notable exceptions the class of men seeking office as guardians nowadays seem to be those with some axe or other to grind, some particular hobby or interest to ride or watch, or who regard it as a stepping-stone to something higher.

58. Some guardians evidently regard it as an attribute to be "chummy" with paupers and to cultivate the good opinion of applicants for relief, also to be on such terms of intimacy with subordinate officers as in my judgment to make discipline and good administration somewhat difficult.

Particulars as to Administration of Relief.

59. I enclose a diagram* showing the ratio of increase of population, pauperism, rateable value, common fund expenditure and separate expenditure since the formation of the union in 1869. I prepared the original of this five or six years ago, and since that time it has been extended annually and hung in a position where every guardian may see it.

60. I also append a statement showing the in and outdoor pauperism and ratio to population, and the expenditure on in-maintenance and outdoor relief and its relation to population and rateable value in each quinquennial year since 1871. (See Appendix No. LXXXVIII. (A).)

61. The ratio for in and outdoor paupers of 1·9 per cent. of population compares favourably with 2·4 for England and Wales, as does 2s. 6¹⁰/₁₀₀d. per head of census population for cost of in-maintenance and out-relief show creditably when compared with 3s. 9¹/₄d. on estimated population for the whole country.

62. This favourable position I attribute entirely to the large proportion of thrifty artisans, to the profitable employment open to females, and to the sturdy independence as well as the means which has in the past prompted many men and women to help their poorer relations without resort to the Poor Law.

Family Ties and Responsibilities of Relations.

63. I fear that of late there has set in a loosening of family ties and a diminished appreciation of the obligations of relationship either by blood or affinity.

64. Fathers seem less concerned about their children, and the children in turn fail to appreciate any duty to their parents, and so things go on.

65. The following figures show our dealings with new cases of liable relatives of paupers during the year ended Michaelmas, 1903:—

* Not reproduced.

Number of separate cases dealt with	-	-	93
Number of relatives dealt with	-	-	185
Sons ordered to pay whole cost	-	-	1
Sons ordered to pay part cost	-	-	48
Sons excused payment	-	-	25
Sons ordered to keep parents	-	-	45
Sons ordered to pay parents direct	-	-	53
Grandfather ordered to repay	-	-	1
Other relatives ordered to contribute	-	-	12

66. In addition to these cases numerous others arose in which a notice from the relieving officer was sufficient to bring sons to their senses without the cases coming before the guardians.

67. Over half the recorded cases were disposed of without the parents becoming paupers by a show of apparent authority.

68. I consider that the provisions of 43 Eliz., c. 2, Sec. 6, should be extended to grandchildren, as they are often of greater ability, and are generally under greater obligation than grandparents. I also think that a married daughter possessed of separate estate should be liable for maintenance of her parents as well as of her children and grandchildren, and that an illegitimate child should maintain its mother.

69. Justices should be empowered to make orders under 43 Eliz., c. 2, Sec. 6, on the application of the person in need.

70. Sec. 5 of the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1873, should be amended so as to enable justices on the application of the guardians to adjudge the paternity of bastard children and make orders upon the putative father without the evidence of the mother when through death, insanity, or other sufficient cause, her evidence cannot be obtained.

71. Three years ago six very young children were within two months thrown on the funds of this union, and the guardians were precluded from obtaining orders on the putative fathers solely through the death of the mothers. In one case the parents had cohabited many years, and but for the brutality of the man the mother might possibly have been alive now.

72. My board circularized other unions at the time on the above lines; 260 unions replied, 201 supported our views, six were averse, and fifty-three took no action.

Settlement Laws and Non-Resident Relief.

73. In a union like this there are constant changes of residence, and numerous enquiries have to be made into settlements.

74. During 1906, forty-five cases were transferred to other unions by friendly acceptance and three by justices' order. Fifty-nine paupers were transferred, and six took discharges.

75. The indoor paupers were removed, and most of the other cases were transferred to the Non-Settled Poor Account.

76. The cases transferred to other unions represented a cost of £21 4s. per week, or £1,102 per annum, and the cost of enquiries and removals was £22 19s. 1d. £17 10s. 5d was recovered under orders.

77. On January 1st, 1907, we relieved eighty-two persons through other unions, and seventy-eight on behalf of other unions.

78. During 1906 we expended on non-resident poor £391, and advanced to non-settled poor £525.

79. Through some heavy cases having been removed, from other unions we have only gained about £300 on the settlement work of 1906, but in previous years we have had such a number of cases belonging to other unions that but for the law of settlement our expenditure would have increased by £800 to £1,000 per annum.

Suggested Reforms (in addition to those before mentioned).

80. That the grants in respect of officers' salaries be in proportion to actual expenditure, and that they should only be awarded on condition that the services are efficient (as the grants for industrial training are now awarded), and that the statutes and orders are observed by both guardians and officers. (In 1888 the Hunslet Union in proportion to its size was considerably under-staffed. The present system is an inducement to keep a staff insufficient and inefficient.)

81. No guardian should be eligible for election to a paid office under the board of which he is or has within the previous twelve months been a member.

82. The appointment to a paid office or the giving of relief to any near relative of a guardian should be subject to the sanction of the Local Government Board.

83. Subject to restriction in all points where uniformity is essential and to a general delimitation of their powers, I think more discretion might be given to guardians in unimportant matters such as the non-resident relief of a woman removing after her husband's death, or the allowance of currants for buns on Good Friday and so forth.

84. I consider that the cost of maintenance before confinement of pregnant women who become chargeable should be recovered from the responsible men.

85. Compounding for poor rates should be abolished and every occupier be compelled to pay his own rates. Taxation should go with representation. The cost of collection and the amount of leakages would be greater, but the saving of the 25 per cent. allowances would in most cases, I think, meet the extra cost, while the increased interest taken by ratepayers, and the direct pressure all round of an increase in rates would tend towards greater economy and efficiency, and less silly sentiment.

86. I also identify myself with Nos. 3, 5, and 11 of the suggestions made by my board:—

(3) Conferences.—The restrictions as to the class of conferences upon Poor Law subjects to which the guardians can send delegates should be removed.

(5) Settlements.—The injustice of settlements being extinguished in many parishes through the omission of county councils to provide for their preservation and otherwise should be removed.

(11) County Rate.—Guardians as payers should have right of appeal against county rate assessment.

APPENDIX No. LXXXIX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. SAMSON GEORGE HAYDOCK MOORE, MEDICAL OFFICER OF HEALTH, COUNTY BOROUGH OF HUDDERSFIELD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I am a Doctor of Medicine, and hold a Diploma in Public Health.

2. Prior to obtaining an appointment in the public health service I had experience in lunacy at the County Asylum, Rainhill, and in Poor Law work, as resident medical officer at the Leeds Union Infirmary, as well as general medical and surgical experience as house physician and house surgeon.

3. The only way in which the poor are medically assisted by the Corporation of Huddersfield, in the ordinary acceptance of the term, is when they are removed to the isolation hospital, where they receive medical treatment for infectious diseases only.

4. The Huddersfield scheme against infant mortality does not contemplate the provision of medical advice or medicine by the Corporation in the ordinary sense of the term. The idea underlying the Huddersfield work for the preservation of child-life is to enable the mother to keep her infant healthy, to take this help to her in her own home, and to encourage her to keep the infant in the home without extraneous help of any kind. The fact that skilled medical advice is deemed necessary to enable this to be done is rather incidental from the present point of view. Medical assistance in the Poor Law term involves the idea of pre-existing sickness. We desire to maintain health and thus avoid the very need of medical attention.

5. I cannot give an account of the Poor Law methods in Huddersfield, though I have every reason to believe them to be excellent of their kind.

6. There are many voluntary organisations in Huddersfield, first and most important of all being the infirmary, which is large, well equipped, and well staffed, and together with its auxiliary convalescent home at Meltham does an admirable work. How far it overlaps and supersedes the institutions maintained by the board of guardians is perhaps a proper subject for enquiry by the Commission.

7. While on the one hand there can be no doubt that both classes of institutions are maintained by the wealthier for the benefit of the poorer, and therefore both participate in the like nature of charitable institutions (that the Poor Law institutions are maintained by compulsory charitable contributions and the others by voluntary charitable contributions does not seem to have any inherent bearing on the problem, since the recipients of the benefits of both are alike objects of charity), there can be no doubt on the other hand that different classes of individuals are served by the two classes of institutions; individuals who would most hotly resent the imputation of pauperism are yet not ashamed of accepting help from voluntary infirmaries and hospitals. This aspect of the case is very wide-reaching and of very great importance. It introduces one naturally to the question of classification of recipients of aid, whether charitable or State.

8. Many people receive assistance, and particularly medical assistance, in large general hospitals and in special hospitals, who are very far removed from what one understands by the word "pauper," and at the low end of the scale are the unfortunate beings of very low mental and physical equipment, born, it may be, in the workhouse, who spend their days on the verge of pauperism, resorting to workhouse infirmaries on any serious illness, and to the parish doctor for more trivial ailments.

9. There is another class whom I would designate "the criminally pauper." Members of the criminal class, broken down, out of credit with their associates, have nowhere to turn but to the Poor Law authorities, and many of the inmates of the workhouses and workhouse infirmaries will be found to have been convicted by the police for serious or minor offences. The Commission would obtain valuable evidence on this point from experienced workhouse masters, especially men in medium-sized towns, who have held their positions for a long number of years.

10. Obviously these different series of recipients of assistance need to be carefully classified, and to be dealt with according to their several necessities. For the worst class—the work-house or labour colony—they should be forca's. For the struggling shopkeeper, or clerk, or artisan, stricken with sudden illness, it may be such as can only be adequately dealt with in a special hospital, appropriate treatment in such special hospital. For the chronic invalid it may be the mother of several fairly well-to-do, respectable and self-respecting families, assistance such as can be given by the Victoria Nurses, or the village nurse.

11. The present system has grown up haphazard. It is an evolution from mediæval times. All the functions needful were discharged by the monasteries up to the time of the Reformation, and the Poor Law as it exists to-day can be clearly traced as an outcome of legislation that was rendered necessary by the abolition of the nursing brotherhoods and sisterhoods suppressed at that period. That it is imperfectly adapted to the complexities of modern civilisation I believe this Commission will be abundantly satisfied.

12. I believe that the best way out of existing difficulties would be to give some State recognition and some legal powers to the present voluntary infirmary boards which are established throughout the country in all large towns. They are composed without exception of men of the highest standing in the several communities, and if they could be maintained of their present character, and the whole medical relief of the poor in large communities be entrusted to them, and if such boards could receive authority to requisition from the Poor Law boards such funds as might be required to supplement their present resources, very great benefit would result in many directions.

13. The health of the community certainly does not suffer owing to the insufficiency in amount or quality of medical assistance at present available for the poor, unless in the term "medical assistance" be included special foods for invalids and a sufficiency of simple plain nourishing food for the poor at all times.

14. The vaccination laws are at present exercised by the Poor Law side of the Local Government Board. Under normal circumstances this arrangement works well, but in times of small-pox prevalence is apt to lead to delay; but the very essence of success in dealing with small-pox is promptitude—promptitude in isolation of the patients, promptitude in disinfection, and promptitude in vaccination of contacts. Everything which militates against promptitude ought to be obviated. Moreover, vaccination is naturally a function of preventive medicine, and I believe that if it were removed from the Poor Law authorities some of the objections to it would disappear. There is a deep rooted objection in the minds of English people to have anything to do with boards of guardians; they (wrongly in this instance) conceive that some stigma attaches to it. I believe that enormous benefits would be given to the community in the way of more efficient protection against small-pox if vaccination were placed in public health departments, and if every medical practitioner were constituted a State vaccinator.

APPENDIX No. XC.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. J. W. O'NEILL, GENERAL RELIEVING OFFICER.
HUNSLET UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

Some account of the social and industrial conditions in your union ?

1. Population at Census 1901, 83,002. (Should estimate present population at about 92,000). Area, 12,120 acres. Partly urban and partly rural. The population may be said to be almost entirely of an industrial class.

2. The chief industries within the city are engineering, machine and tool making, woollen and linen weaving, iron forging, blast furnace works, glass bottle making, and ready-made clothing (the latter a comparatively new trade).

3. There are also many other small industries, viz.: boot manufacturing, cabinetmaking, oilcan making, cardboard box making, lock making, rugmaking, sweet manufacturing, blouse and skirt making, etc., etc.

4. Formerly the flax trade employed a great number of girls, but it has almost entirely disappeared.

5. In the out-townships, coal mining, stone quarrying, brewing and farming, are the main industries.

6. During 1904-5 trade was generally depressed, but for the past year it has revived and most trades are now doing well, the building and glass bottle trades excepted.

7. Many of the children of the poorer classes on leaving school take any kind of employment they can get and never learn a trade.

8. As a rule, the children of the artisan class learn trades, males as mechanics, etc., and females tailoring, weaving, etc.

9. Particulars of any peculiarities or experiments in Poor Law administration ?

None; except close supervision over those in receipt of relief, and strict investigation of the circumstances of new applicants.

Case paper system is in operation since Lady-day last, 1907.

10. Views as to the respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief ?

Outdoor relief should be the exception, not the rule. No form of relief is so liable to abuse, even when most carefully administered, and should be given only to persons of proved good character, whose surroundings are in every way satisfactory.

11. When out-relief is given to persons whose characters are "shady" or doubtful, others of a similar kind try the same "experiment" they have nothing to lose, and, if successful, have attained the height of their ambition, and so the evil spreads.

12. Yet we have guardians regularly saying, "It's so much cheaper to give a little matter out than force people into the 'House.'"

13. Many of the outdoor paupers would be much better in the workhouse, where they should be classified according to character and conduct.

14. In my opinion, if out-relief was given only to persons of proved good character and thrifty habits, there would be no serious reason why they should not retain their rights as citizens.

15. Medical relief ought to be curtailed as much as possible.

16. Classes of persons applying for relief ?

Generally speaking, aged people, majority aged widows, widows with children, men (with families) who, having been temporarily incapacitated and made no provision through a friendly society or otherwise. An occasional member of a friendly society whose sickness benefits have been reduced or exhausted, and sometimes out-of-works. Women deserted by their husbands, women having separation orders from their husbands, and where the husbands have disappeared.

The above may broadly be said to be the classes who apply for out-relief.

Several of the old people apply to make sons pay towards their maintenance.

17. Those generally admitted to the workhouse are old and young of both sexes, whose characters are bad or shady. Old people whose friends, for various reasons, can no longer do with them at home. Others, owing to illness, and no proper means of being treated at home. Unmarried women for confinement, deserted wives and children, persons mentally or physically defective. Men, either unemployed, or unemployable.

18. The causes of pauperism ?

Many causes operate. The greatest is intemperance, bad behaviour, immorality, slum and insanitary surroundings, thriftless habits of many of the labouring and other classes, making no provision against sickness, through a friendly or other thrift organisation. Low wages and irregular employment of many of the labouring classes. Difficulty of finding employment by men advancing in years—(perhaps owing to the operation of the Employers Liability Act). Keen competition in trade, and labour saving machinery no doubt help to drive the unskilled out of employment.

19. The class of persons seeking election as guardians ?

Generally speaking, small tradesmen, shopkeepers, and others; a few educated gentlemen.

Recognised qualification, to be a good hearted person.

20. Particulars as to administration of relief in your Union ?

Three committees for out-relief are appointed annually and sit fortnightly in rotation. A permanent relief committee is also appointed, and sits every four weeks to revise new cases dealt with by the ordinary relief committees.

They hear all applications for relief, and after the relieving officer has given his report, and interviewing the applicant, the case is adjudicated upon.

Temporary cases and new cases are (if out-relief is given) relieved for a period not exceeding four weeks, and no case is put on the permanent list except by the permanent relief committee, after being visited and reported on by the General relieving officer.

Widows with children are granted relief for periods not exceeding three months.

Old and infirm cases are granted relief for periods not exceeding six months.

When the period for which relief is granted has expired the application has to be renewed, and the applicant appear before the committee for further consideration of the case.

At the end of each half-year every case on the outdoor list is revised by the permanent relief committee.

21. Any reform in law or practice suggested to you by your experience ?

That the Central Authority (Local Government Board) issue rules for the administration of out-relief, and make it obligatory that they be obeyed. Result, uniformity of administration throughout the country.

22. Orders of guardians on sons, and other liable relatives should be a legal order, and amounts accruing thereunder recoverable on application to Petty Sessions, on proof of means.

23. Parents should have the right of applying to the justice (or county court) to compel sons to contribute towards their maintenance, without having to become paupers.

I believe that if such was the law the pauper list would be reduced.

24. Classification of outdoor poor as follows:—

(a) Persons over sixty-five years of age who have led thrifty respectable lives, and who did all in their power to provide for old age through a recognised thrift agency or otherwise, and whose surroundings are satisfactory.

(b) Widows with children, men with families who, through sickness or otherwise are unfit to earn their own livelihood. Persons under sixty-five years.

(c) Deserted wives, etc.

Class (a) to retain the franchise for all elections except guardians.

25. More duties in connection with the Lunacy Act ought to be thrown on to the police. At present the only duty they recognise in connection with the Act is when they find a lunatic wandering at large.

26. The appointment of all responsible officials, in my opinion, ought to be on the Civil Service system, and pay regulated according to rank and responsibility. All appointments to be open to those most suitable.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. F. M. OSBORN, HONORARY SECRETARY OF THE SHEFFIELD BOYS' WORKING HOME.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The funds for the upkeep of the Sheffield Boys' Working Home are obtained from:—

- (a) Subscriptions
- (b) Legacies
- (c) Profit on sale of firewood
- (d) Boys' earnings.

2. The effect of charity on the boys is, it is hoped, not harmful. Our motto is, "We help those who try to help themselves," and we try to live up to it. We have no Poor Law out-relief."

3. In the case of the "Boys' Working Home" there is no co-operation between charity and the Poor Law, and I do not feel competent to say what the possibilities of extension are.

APPENDIX No. XCII

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. WILLIAM PAGE, LATE SUPERINTENDENT OF TEST LABOUR, LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

The Classes of Persons Applying for Relief, i.e., Test Labour.

1. Outside labourers, who chiefly from the slackness in the building trade are compelled to seek relief.

The majority of these men are fair workers and deserving of sympathy. They are generally on the look-out for work and stay no longer than circumstances compel them.

2. Men who have a decided objection to be up and at work by 6 a.m. They prefer to lie in bed and have a day off when they think it desirable.

These men would be on test labour the whole year round if allowed to do so. Some will do a little haymaking or potato picking during the season, others follow race-meetings or act as "crow" for a street bookmaker in some low class district, or odd jobs here and there occasionally. They have no desire for regular employment.

3. A case in point is that of one H. K., who had been on test more or less for eighteen months prior to March last. About that time he received from the late Alderman C. B. a letter of introduction to the manager of the Whitwood Collieries, near Normanton, requesting him to give K. employment at the pit such as he was capable of performing.

4. K. had the letter in his possession eight days before it came to my knowledge, and when I asked him why he had not attended to it, he told me that he had been to Normanton and seen the under-manager, and he would let him know later when to start. He told a similar story to the guardians and the relieving officer of his district, and when inquiry was made it was ascertained beyond a doubt that K. had not been there at all.

5. The manager stated in his letter of reply that if K. would go he would give him work, and I was requested to inform him to that effect. I did so, yet he was unwilling and would not go.

He has not had test labour granted since.

6. On another occasion I received a message about noon at the yard for a man named B. requesting him to go to Farnley Ironworks, as there was work awaiting him.

7. I gave him the message and he absolutely declined to go, his excuse being that he was not going to walk four miles to Farnley and four miles back. His test labour was discontinued and he took advantage of an order for the house, and being a widower his children went into a home.

8. Here you have two specimens of the starving poor. Men who usually compel their children of tender years (six to twelve) to attend the yard in all weathers to carry home the bread they receive.

9. Men who have frequently appeared at the police courts for various offences and drift about between the workhouse, the gaol, and the unemployed. They are the scum of the town, and when not in prison or on test labour they are usually found loafing about the streets or in the workhouse.

10. I may mention an instance where a man named L., married, and having a family, had a prostitute living at his house. L. told me that to him she was "a good sort," as she supplied him with sufficient money to provide him with tobacco and drink and always paid for his admission to a certain music hall which the woman herself frequented, and he was not going to quit her purposely to remain on test labour. There is no doubt that L. on his own statement, although married, was simply bully for the woman living at his house.

11. No doubt there are men of this class who would feel somewhat safer on test labour or on the unemployed, if only with the idea of shielding themselves from a prosecution for living wholly or in part on the proceeds of prostitution.

12. The majority of the men I refer to in Pars. 2-8 and 9-11 have very little furniture in their homes. Cases of ejection under a magistrate's order are of frequent occurrence for non-payment of rent. They obtain credit wherever they can, chiefly from small shopkeepers in the district, and the Scotch packman often comes in for a share of their patronage. Only recently a man named S. of No. 5 district showed me a County Court summons he had received for non-payment of 16s.6d. for goods obtained, as he alleged, by his wife from a packman, and that he had found in his house twenty-five pawn tickets relating to goods obtained in a similar manner and pledged by his wife.

13. The County Court does not trouble these individuals. One or the other will attend on the day of hearing and satisfy the officials that the husband is out of work and on test labour, and no order is made for payment. Even should the defendant fail to answer the summons, and an order for payment be made in his absence, and subsequently a warrant issued for his arrest, it is not executed so long as he is on test labour.

14. There we see sympathy and leniency extended to an undeserving class of men, and indirectly encouragement for them to apply for and remain on test labour.

15. I am in favour of test men being classified, just as I would classify and make distinction between the deserving and non-deserving poor in the workhouse, by obtaining through the local police the particulars of their antecedents.

I make this suggestion from the fact that during the time I have been here, I have seen cases where apparently respectable deserving men, above the ordinary type of labourer have been granted test, and seldom have they stayed more than one or two days. I remember a case where a man left the yard immediately he saw the class of men he probably would have to work with.

The Causes of Pauperism.

16. Drinking, betting, thieving, idleness and prostitution.

17. Men, skilled and unskilled in labour living up to and beyond their means year after year, with no thought of thrift and when no longer able to work are in immediate want.

18. Neglect of the breadwinner of a family to become a member of a sick or friendly society when in regular employment, and when overtaken by sickness he is compelled to apply for relief.

19. In cases where the husband is suffering from consumption and in receipt of out-relief month after month, or maybe year after year, and is at the same time increasing the number of his family.

20. The Workmen's Compensation Act in my opinion has a tendency to increase pauperism.

21. An instance of this occurred recently at Crewe Works on the London and North Western Railway, where, according to the Press, from 90 to 100 of the older hands were discharged, the majority having little or nothing to subsist upon.

APPENDIX No. XCIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. NORMAN PORRITT, CONSULTING SURGEON TO THE HUDDERSFIELD INFIRMARY.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I am a native of Huddersfield and well acquainted with the town and people. I have been in practice here since the end of 1880. For more than twenty years I was honorary surgeon to the Huddersfield Infirmary, to which I am now consulting surgeon. Before my appointment to the honorary staff I was the senior house surgeon; before that senior assistant house surgeon at the General Infirmary at Leeds; and before that was for two years resident assistant to the late Thomas Scattergood, Esq., surgeon to the Women and Children's Hospital and dean of the Medical School, Leeds.

2. My experience has been derived chiefly from my connection with the Huddersfield Infirmary, and I can best comply with the request of your Commission if I state briefly the work of that institution and bring out as I proceed the points germane to your inquiry.

3. The Huddersfield Infirmary has four departments: An in-patient; an out-patient; a casualty; a home visiting or dispensary department.

4. The In-patient Department.—The in-patients are drawn from an area with a radius of ten miles in some directions and five miles in others. They comprise the respectable poor, the working classes, and, above this rank, those who, suffering from long illnesses or requiring serious operations, either from want of means or insufficient accommodation, cannot have the skilled nursing and the requisite medical and surgical attentions their cases require in their own homes. I have no doubt that a number of this last class of patients could afford the doctor's fees and could be adequately nursed and attended in their own homes, but it is so convenient and saves so much trouble to send the patients to the infirmary that some who might safely remain at home go there. Hence beds are occupied by those who cannot be called poor, and unless the number of beds in the infirmary is ample there may be none left for those who should have the first claim—the poor.

5. This occurred not unfrequently during the enlargement of the infirmary some years ago when, part of the building being pulled down, the number of beds was correspondingly reduced.

6. As illustrating this tendency to make use of the infirmary for patients who are not poor, I may mention that some years ago a member of the honorary medical staff proposed that patients able to pay should be admitted on payment. A majority of his colleagues, however, successfully resisted the proposal on the ground that the infirmary was intended for the poor.

7. Although, according to the last Census the population of Huddersfield shows a decrease, the number of patients treated at the infirmary increases. During the year ending June 30th, 1900, there were 1,080 in-patients, and 32,029 attendances by out-patients, as compared with 1,382 in-patients and 37,212 attendances by out-patients in the year ending June 30th, 1904. Owing to the curious practice adopted by the Infirmary of counting twice and more a patient who is in the infirmary longer than three months, the in-patient figures are artificially inflated, but will suffice for purposes of comparison.

8. This increase in numbers is probably due to the fact that the workpeople contribute so largely to the support of the infirmary. The report for the year ending June 30th, 1906, shows that workpeople's subscriptions alone (£2,201), amount to more than a quarter of the total income for the year (£8,620). When the other contributions of the workpeople from co-operative societies, clubs, friendly societies, and outdoor musical festivals, are included, the contributions of the working classes are perhaps a third of the total income of the infirmary. Now it is unreasonable to suppose that those who contribute so handsomely, and all honour to them for doing it, should not get something back in return; and it seems to me that there is a danger, especially in times of pressure on the beds, that the deserving poor may be elbowed out by those who do so much to supply the infirmary with money.

9. The Out-patients.—These attend on stated days and there are among them many who would otherwise be patients of the parish doctor. During the year ending June 30th, 1906, there were 37,406 attendances. The bulk of them, however, are drawn from the working class, and doubtless there are some—what proportion it is difficult to say—who could pay medical fees for private attendance.

10. The Casualty Patients.—Are the wounded hands, broken arms and collar bones, and minor injuries and the same remarks apply to them as to the out-patients.

11. The Home Patients.—These are visited in their homes by the house-surgeons within a radius of a mile of the infirmary. Their number depends upon the bias and popularity of the house-surgeons. A few house-surgeons cultivate this department, but the general tendency is to keep down the numbers on the list. The chief use of this department is to do the work of the parish doctor. The bulk of the cases seen are fit subjects for the parish surgeon. Here there is real overlapping.

12. It appears to the writer that it would benefit the sick poor to establish in the town a provident dispensary and as far as possible keep a purely charitable institution like the infirmary for the benefit of those who could not afford the modest contributions required by a provident dispensary. There would be no difficulty in securing medical and surgical officers, and the posts would probably be a stepping stone to appointment on the infirmary staff. Between such provident dispensary and the infirmary there should be close co-operation and the staff of the dispensary should have power to send into the infirmary such cases as could not be satisfactorily treated at the homes of the patients. The work of the provident dispensary would comprise seeing patients at the dispensary and visiting them at their homes. Such an institution would relieve the infirmary of a large number of cases and keep the infirmary more nearly to its legitimate work of succouring the sick poor.

13. The possibility of handing over to one authority the whole work of medical assistance to the poor seems beset with difficulty. But there is room for more co-operation in the matter of destitute patients in the infirmary. They are practically paupers and if they die the infirmary may be charged with the cost of their burial. To prevent this they are removed to the union hospital and although in many cases this may be desirable, there are some cases where from his condition, it would be better that the patient should not be moved. If it were obligatory upon the guardians to bury those who die in the infirmary without means or friends, the guardians would be spared the cost of nursing the cases in their own hospital, plus the expense of the funeral. The board of the infirmary has consistently set its face against the admission to the infirmary of those who are destitute. Although the cases are referred to the union authorities I am sure in some instances the practice is not unattended with hardship and in some cases even danger. The union hospital is on the outskirts of the town, at the top of a long hill and it must be a struggle for some of the wretched invalids to reach it in addition to the inevitable red-tape formalities to be gone through before getting admission. My impression is that if the dread of the cost of a possible funeral were not before their eyes, the infirmary board would open its doors more readily to those who are sick but have the misfortune to be destitute. It seems to me they are more to be pitied than many of those who flock to the infirmary in such numbers and are accorded treatment without question.

14. The infirmary board does admit pauper cases, but they must be recommended by the guardians and an undertaking given as to their removal and burial in case of death. The guardians subscribe £100 annually to the infirmary, and cases which cannot be dealt with in the union hospital are admitted to the infirmary on their recommendations.

15. I think the health of the community suffers by reason of lack of attention to the sick poor, in the case of phthisis and by reason of the inadequate provision made at the Meltham Convalescent Home for convalescing surgical cases. There is no recognised attempt to deal with phthisis. With the exception of the out-patient department of the infirmary there is no refuge for these trying cases but the workhouse hospital and they will not go there unless absolutely compelled.

16. The Meltham Convalescent Home was generously built and endowed by the late Charles Brook, Esq., as a Convalescent Home for the Huddersfield Infirmary. Whilst it has been of invaluable service its usefulness is crippled by the remarkable refusal of the management to admit any surgical case requiring change of dressings. Although a qualified surgeon regularly visits the institution, many working men, to whom the health-giving breezes of the moors would hasten the return of health and quicken the healing of their wounds, are denied its privileges because, perhaps, a piece of gauze needs applying or a bandage needs adjusting. In this respect this otherwise excellent institution is altogether behind the times, out of date, and unlike any other convalescent adjunct to an infirmary with which I am acquainted.

17. On the whole, however, I think the sick poor in this district have adequate attention.

18. The figures I have quoted are from the reports of the infirmary.

APPENDIX No. XCIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. WILLIAM PORTER, PHYSICIAN TO THE ROYAL INFIRMARY, SHEFFIELD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. My only experience of medical assistance of the poor is in connection with the Royal Infirmary in Sheffield, at which institution I hold the office of physician.

2. The subscribers' recommendation system is adopted there, and is the only check we have upon improper applications. It is a very inadequate one, and a considerable number of our patients there could not be classed among the very poor.

3. What is wanted is some better means of investigating the circumstances of applicants for medical assistance, and some scheme by which those able to pay something towards their treatment should be able to do so.

4. Personally I should not like to see such institutions as the Sheffield Infirmary and Hospital handed over to municipal control and management.

5. Certainly I should not say, so far as I am able to form any opinion, that the health of the community suffers through insufficiency in amount or quality of the medical assistance available for the poor in Sheffield.

APPENDIX No. XCV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. J. T. PRENTIS, SECRETARY OF THE HUDDERSFIELD INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY, LIMITED.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The Huddersfield Industrial Society is a trading society; it is in no way connected with friendly societies; and it gives no relief to members.

2. For your information I may say that during the past twelve months our receipts for goods sold have amounted to £382,000; we have freehold and leasehold property worth considerably over £100,000; a membership of 13,436; and share capital, £188,257.

3. At the present time 553 members have £100 each, invested in the society; 965 between £50 and £100; 4,277 from £1 to £50; and 7,641 £1 or under.

4. Each member on entering the society has to agree to take at least one share of £1, but can, if he wish to do so, take any number up to 100.

5. The profits made by the society are divided among the members in proportion to their purchases during the quarter, and usually amount to 3s. in the £.

6. We give annual subscriptions to the following:—

Manchester Eye Hospital - - - -	3	3	0
Bradford Eye and Ear Hospital - - -	2	2	0

7. It is impossible to give any idea with respect to the wage limit of members, as they consist of persons from the highest class to the very poor.

APPENDIX No. XCVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. HAROLD SENIOR, MASTER OF THE HUNSLET UNION WORKHOUSE.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I have been Master of the Hunslet Workhouse for the past eighteen months and was Assistant Master for the previous three years. This comprises the whole of my Poor Law experience.

2. There is a system of classification in vogue at this workhouse which has proved to be very successful and is a commendable experiment.

Class A.—Aged and infirm over sixty years of age whose characters bear the strictest investigation, but have been unable to provide for old age. This class are allowed extra comforts in the way of furniture and leave of absence each day.

Class B.—Inmates who fall short in one or two respects of the requirements of Class A. These people are allowed fewer privileges than Class A.

Class C.—Inmates not considered suitable for either Class A or B, but if their continued good conduct whilst in the house justifies it they are promoted to a higher class. These people are on the same level as the able-bodied as regards leave of absence.

3. The effect of this classification is in keeping the best behaved people together, and giving a better control of the worst class of inmate who aspire to a higher classification.

4. Cottages for deserving married couples who require some attention and therefore are unfit for out-relief, are to be recommended.

5. Making rugs for use in the workhouse I have found to be an excellent means of utilising the labour of the infirm inmates, and at the same time using up materials that would otherwise be of no real value.

6. Vegetable growing is another feature which is worthy of great consideration. This work can only be done, of course, where there is land adjoining the workhouse premises or an entirely separate colony for able-bodied male inmates, the latter I should strongly recommend. Land cultivation is of far more value than stone-breaking as task-work, and the latter should not be used except in extreme cases. From a financial point of view it has proved to be a success, and much labour can be used. At the same time it might be a means of teaching and giving the younger men a taste for agriculture.

7. The following is a list of the trades of men who were in the workhouse during the half-year ending Lady Day, 1906 :—

Labourers (general)	-	-	-	-	-	155
Moulders, fitters, etc.	-	-	-	-	-	21
Horse drivers and grooms	-	-	-	-	-	9
Boot makers	-	-	-	-	-	15
Joiners	-	-	-	-	-	3
Failors	-	-	-	-	-	3
Miners	-	-	-	-	-	14
Painters	-	-	-	-	-	3
Mill hands	-	-	-	-	-	4
Bricklayers	-	-	-	-	-	2
Glass workers	-	-	-	-	-	2
Other trades	-	-	-	-	-	19
Clerks	-	-	-	-	-	3

8. Out of 253 men who passed through the workhouse, only ninety-eight had ever learned any trade. The majority are iron foundry labourers. A great many are physically and mentally degenerate, caused probably by their early social conditions and lack of training. During a roll-call which took place at this workhouse about twelve months ago, seventeen men out of a batch of nineteen that were interviewed had never been married, or had anyone dependent upon them.

9. Another feature is the number of pregnant unmarried women that pass through the workhouse. Out of forty-five pregnant cases during the years 1905 and 1906 thirty-one were single women.

10. With the amount of machinery now in use in the various works, men who are upwards of fifty years of age cannot easily obtain employment, owing perhaps to the Workmen's Compensation Act, and the older men being less able or willing to adapt themselves to new conditions. Men who at one time were members of trade unions run out of any benefit owing to being unable to keep up payments through sickness and other causes. In some cases men who lose time through drinking are eventually discharged on that account. That class of workman is thoroughly unreliable and is not often given a second opportunity by the same employer.

11. Under the present favourable conditions the able-bodied men and women have no dread of entering the workhouse. The excellent dietary and comfortable dormitories provided for them are an inducement rather than a deterrent, taking into consideration the general conditions the majority of them live under when outside. The allowing of too much liberty has also a bad effect upon indoor relief, especially in the case of able-bodied men and women. I have had many cases where leave of absence and all other privileges have been stopped because of some misdemeanour, where the subject of this punishment has taken his discharge rather than undergo the confinement. The expectation that people will be provided for is no doubt the cause of a great deal of the present improvidence in the country.

12. Opportunities should be given to the proper class of men with families to seek work. No fixed law can be carried out on this point, as each case would have to be dealt with on its merits.

13. There is an increase in the small tradesmen and workmen seeking election as guardians, who, to some extent, live in the same atmosphere and do business with the applicants for relief and may be somewhat biased in their judgment of their cases. Men who are better educated and in higher positions, such as heads of large firms, who are continually in touch with the people, would probably judge a case from a broader standpoint, being less dependent on the opinions of the industrial classes.

14. Something might be done with reference to the appointment of relatives of guardians to Poor Law appointments. These appointments are in some degree detrimental to the good administration of Poor Law generally, through the private influence brought to bear upon the officers.

APPENDIX No. XCVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE AS TO CHARITIES AND VOLUNTARY EFFORT, BY THE LORD BISHOP OF SHEFFIELD.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. An account of the endowed charities of the City of Sheffield will be found in the report made in 1897 to the Charity Commissioners.

2. The tendency of out-relief as administered is to lower the self-respect of the recipient, whilst "a Charity" is usually a tribute to respectability.

3. My experience of those engaged in Poor Law methods has been good. At the same time the large powers exercised by paid officials demands careful supervision.

4. Co-operation between charity and the Poor Law is now being extended in Sheffield by the introduction of the Elberfeld system, which commenced on January 1st. It has been favourably received by both the civic and Poor Law authorities.

5. To substitute charity for out-relief would be difficult. For instance, in the Isle of Man up to 1888 there was no Poor Law, and the relief was voluntary charity. But the system broke down, and in that year a permissive

Poor Law was established, and was largely, though not, I believe, universally adopted.

Co-operative, Friendly, and other Societies.

6. It is, I think, improbable that friendly societies could at present undertake the provision of old age pensions. If a State system of old age pensions was introduced, friendly societies would have to adapt themselves to changed conditions.

7. Further co-operation between friendly societies and hospitals would, I think, be welcomed by both.

8. I do not think friendly and thrift societies progress much. Neither co-operative nor P. O. Savings Bank figures seem to show any increase at present. On the other hand the Sheffield Savings Bank shows this year a large increase in deposits; and, though an old established bank, it claims 1906 as a "Record year."

APPENDIX No. XCVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. WILLIAM SINCLAIR, PRESIDENT OF THE SHEFFIELD FEDERATED HEALTH ASSOCIATION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I should like to say that, in my opinion, two outstanding defects of our Poor Law administration are:—

(a) That it fails to recognise the economic and moral advantages of preventive measures.

(b) That relief is given entirely through paid officials.

2. From the enclosed report* you will see that the Sheffield Federated Health Association is mainly an educative association, and consequently its efforts have been confined almost entirely to preventive work.

3. Of this work the lectures on "Motherhood" (see enclosure)* bear most closely on the interests of the poor. They have called forth the highest praise from all who have heard them, and I am strongly of opinion that if every girl were compelled to attend a similar course of instruction, either in our day or evening schools, it would do a great deal to reduce that waste of infant life which disgraces our civilisation, and to improve the physique of all children who survive, and hence render their working lives longer and more efficient.

4. Dealing further with this preventive side, I should like to suggest that the work done by Education Committees, in caring for the physical welfare of children, should be considered by your Commission, and, in order to enable you to see what is actually being done in Sheffield I enclose a copy of the Sheffield Education Committee's Regulations, and also other documents dealing with the question. (See pp. 30-34 of Regulations.)*

5. Since the issue of these Regulations the committee has appointed a medical officer, who visits the schools and examines the children. A record of each child's physical condition is kept by the teacher (see card enclosed),* and, when weakness is discovered, a circular letter is sent to the parents, advising them to obtain medical treatment for their children.

6. In cases of parental neglect the medical officer communicates with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and, in cases of poverty, with the lady inspectors of the Sheffield Corporation, who visit the homes and advise the parents.

7. In carrying out this admirable work the chief difficulty occurs in securing prompt and effective action in cases where parents are unable to pay for medical treatment.

8. Difficulty is sometimes experienced in obtaining hospital recommendations, and thus valuable time is lost. It would be a great gain for such children, both physically and educationally, if arrangements could be made whereby head teachers might send them direct to the hospitals, when it was ascertained that their parents were unable to pay for medical treatment.

9. From all this, as well as from the "Education (Provision of Meals) Act," passed last session, and from the clause in the recent Education Bill, making medical examination of school children compulsory, it is evident that the tendency of the present time is to throw on education authorities work which, a few years ago, if undertaken at all, would have been put in the hands of boards of guardians.

10. The reason of this is that our ideas of education are growing and widening. We are realising that the mens sana can only exist in the corpore sano, and that even from a mere economic point of view it will pay us, as a nation, to rear healthier human animals.

11. Administratively considered, all this means that there is a tendency for the work of education authorities and of boards of guardians to be linked more closely together, and the question arises whether it may not be advisable in the near future to place the care of education, and of the deserving poor, in the hands of one and the same authority. All education authorities possess staffs of attendance officers, who are continually going round their districts, and are thus gaining a great deal of information regarding the circumstances of the poor.

12. During the recent distress in Sheffield the committee which provided free breakfasts for poor children received the greatest possible help from these officers, and our school clothing guilds find their assistance equally valuable.

13. Personally, I have for some time been of opinion that we should secure more economical and more humane administration if the deserving and undeserving poor were dealt with by two separate and distinct authorities, if tramps, loafers, criminals, etc., were left to the care of the police and a new strong combined authority were called into existence to care for the well-being of:—

(a) The young in their preparation for life's work.

(b) The old, who have done their share of life's work, but who now require a helping hand and a sympathetic voice.

(c) All those who, owing to disease, accident, or other misfortune, are unable to earn a decent livelihood.

14. This division of responsibility would discourage all tendency to idleness and loafing on the one hand, and, on the other, would remove the taint and sting of pauperism from deserved State aid.

* Not printed.

APPENDIX No. XCIX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. THOMAS SMITH, BARRISTER-AT-LAW, CLERK TO THE ECCLESALL BOARD OF GUARDIANS, EX-MEMBER OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE COUNCIL OF THE ASSOCIATION OF POOR LAW UNIONS, MEMBER OF THE PARLIAMENTARY AND GENERAL PURPOSES COMMITTEE OF THE NATIONAL POOR LAW OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION, AND SECRETARY OF THE YORKSHIRE POOR LAW CONFERENCE.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The Union, with a population of 179,699, comprises but few large works, the greater portion being of a residential character, the northern portion being the home of the Sheffield working man, whilst the west end comprises the residential portion of the wealthy classes of Sheffield. There is also a considerable tract of moorland and rural district under the jurisdiction of the Norton Rural District Council, of which authority I am the clerk.

2. The increase of population during recent years has been amazing, partly due to the abolition of the poor property in the neighbouring union of Sheffield, the occupiers of which have migrated into the Ecclesall Union.

3. The figures of paupers in receipt of relief bear out this statement:—

Year.	Indoor.	Outdoor.	Total.
1902 - -	706	1,007	1,713
1903 - -	938	1,238	2,176
1904 - -	991	1,286	2,277
1905 - -	1,056	1,377	2,433
1906 - -	953	1,303	2,256

4. It will also be seen that the period of bad trade, from which it is to be hoped the city is now recovering, has had, to a great extent, its effect upon the numbers of pauperism.

5. The number of lunatics in the workhouse on January 1st, 1902, was 115, in the asylum, 251, as compared with 127 on January 1st, 1906, in the workhouse, and 301 in the asylum.

6. The expenditure on in-maintenance and outdoor relief in 1903 was £26,006 9s. 8d., and in 1906 £24,258 10s. 8½d. the cost of in-maintenance having decreased per head per week from 9s. 10d. in 1902, to 7s. 11½d. in 1906.

7. The rateable value of the union in 1903 was £640,783 16s. 8d., and in 1906 £691,054 18s. 3d., of which £2,692 consists of Government property, £9,202 10s. that of railway property, whilst the guardians receive a sum of £144 13s. 7d. half-yearly, being Government grant in aid of guardians' expenditure.

8. The occupations of the people are principally cutlers, carters, hawkers, labourers, charers, servants, and many returned as being of no trade.

9. The union was constituted on January 21st, 1837. The number of guardians now is twenty-six, of whom five are rural district councillors. The guardians, with one exception, are all resident in the union, and there are no co-opted members or lady guardians. Elections are held triennially. The elections are generally contested, and from 33 to 50 per cent. of the electors vote.

10. The departure from the strict administration of the Out-door Relief Regulation Order with regard to the employment and payment of able-bodied men, has been found to work satisfactorily in this union.

11. Apprenticeship.—Very great difficulty has been experienced in placing boys to suitable trades, and the Local Government Board have, in some instances, allowed boys apprenticed to the better trades to lodge with a widow in receipt of outdoor relief, and for periods of a year at a time, outdoor relief has been sanctioned in order to supplement the earnings of the apprentice, and so enable him to obtain lodgings under the supervision of the guardians, and in this way remain independent of the workhouse for his home outside the workshop.

12. Appointment of Nurses.—The Local Government Board have sanctioned a scheme by which the necessity of reporting each new appointment of charge nurse and probationer nurse is dispensed with. The Local Government Board, in such a case, limit the number of charge nurses and probationer nurses to be appointed without such appointments being reported to them for sanction.

13. Hospital Administration.—The Local Government Board have sanctioned a departure from the existing regulations by which the matron is relieved of that portion of her duties relating to the hospital, and the superintendent nurse is held responsible for the administration of the hospital, subject to the paramount supervision of the master. (Date of Order first issued, October 6th, 1899.) Personally, for the avoidance of friction, I think it preferable either to adhere to the Orders, or to have entirely separate administration.

14. District Nursing.—We have had experience both of having district nurses entirely under our own control, and also of subscribing to the Sheffield branch of the Queen Victoria Jubilee Institute for Nurses. I think the latter plan much the more desirable one.

15. Relief Committees.—We have an Order dated September 30th, 1905, from the Local Government Board, sanctioning three guardians forming a Relief Committee, the chairman to sign the Relief Order Books, and submit same to the guardians at their next meeting.

16. I think I can safely say that the majority of my board are mainly in favour of outdoor relief. There is no actually fixed scale of outdoor relief, but I can say that the amounts according to the classified scale differ but little. I strongly recommend the "House" for all cases except the aged who can look after themselves, or have someone to attend to them, the thrifty, those who can be medically treated in their own homes, widows with young children. I do not consider the dread of entering the workhouse so great as in the past; particularly so is it the case of the hospital. If anything, I should say that the workhouse test is not applied as often as I should like to see it.

17. The classes of persons applying for relief can generally be summarised as follows:—

- (a) Old or infirm men and women.
- (b) Cases in which the husband is temporarily absent; e.g., prison.
- (c) Deserted wives and families.
- (d) Pregnant women.
- (e) Loafers.

18. The causes of pauperism are:—

- (a) Old age or approaching old age, with no provision made for a rainy day.
- (b) Sickness.
- (c) Widows left with several young children.
- (d) Cases unable to obtain employment owing to the Workmen's Compensation and Employers' Liability Acts.
- (e) Drink, thriftlessness, and gambling.
- (f) Imbeciles and epileptics unable to obtain work.
- (g) Bodily defective.

19. The Local Government Act of 1894 had considerable effect on the social status of gentlemen seeking the office of guardian.

20. When I was appointed in 1901, out of every two members of the board, one at least was a magistrate. To-day the chairman of the board is the only one who enjoys that distinction. For all that, I do not wish to infer that the guardian elected to-day does not carry out his duties in the same earnest and careful manner as his predecessors did, for I think he does. In matter of regular attendance, owing to the fact that his public duties are not so multitudinous, he is inclined to outstrip the guardian he has succeeded, in his number of attendances, but is he regarded in quite the same light by the applicants themselves, is he not often rather too much of their own class, and somewhat likely to be biassed in favour of those whom he knows? For how often do we hear the expression, "Mr. Chairman, I know all about this case," and sometimes it is to be regretted that such knowledge does not coincide with that of the relieving officer, who has made his own inquiries into the case.

21. Members chiefly gain their seats by their allegiance to one or other of the political parties, but I am glad to say that it is on rare occasions that a vote taken at a board meeting resolves itself into an entirely political one.

22. I should like to add that the addition of members of friendly societies has been of the greatest assistance in the relief work of the board.

23. We have, at present, no lady guardians. I think it would tend considerably to a maintenance of continuity of the policy of the board for a third of the members to retire annually in lieu of the triennial elections now in force.

24. Particulars of Administration of Relief within the Union:—

(a) Relief staff. Superintendent of outdoor relief (who is also inspector under the Infant Life Protection Act, and collector for the whole of the union), three relieving officers, warrant officer and two case-paper clerks.

(b) House staff. Master and matron and subordinate officers.

(c) Hospital staff. Medical officer, resident medical officer, superintendent nurse, nursing staff, and wardmaids.

(d) Cottage homes. Superintendent and matron, foster fathers and mothers.

25. Applications for relief can be made on Friday or Saturday, or urgent applications at any time. These applications are considered by a committee of not less than three guardians, on Wednesday morning. Relief is then ordered for periods ranging from one week to six months, according to the urgency of the case or the age of the applicant. Discretionary orders are confirmed. Orders for the House are only given for a definite period, at the expiration of which time the applicant appears before the committee. Relief is distributed at pay stations at fixed periods.

26. Brief Headings of General Reform:—

(a) Detention of unmarried mothers after birth of first child, for a period of at least twelve months.

(b) Removal of all children from workhouse precincts.

(c) Removal of sane epileptics from the imbecile wards. I was for a time clerk to the joint committee appointed to consider the advisability of adjoining unions combining for such a scheme, but the scheme died a natural death.

(d) The extension of the Medical Relief Disqualification Removal Act to cases of direct admission for medical treatment to the hospitals of any union workhouse, or any hospital maintained directly at the expense of the poor rate, or on an order of, or recommendation by, a registered medical practitioner, so that such persons so admitted, or of whose families members may have been so admitted, to any workhouse hospital, or hospital maintained directly at the expense of the poor rate will not, by reason thereof, be deprived of any right to be registered or to vote, but will be regarded as if they had merely received for themselves or any members of their families such medical assistance outside the workhouse hospital as would have entitled them to the provisions of the Medical Relief Disqualification Act, 1885.

(e) The adoption of the case-paper system, and the abolition of the Application and Report Book. I find the former to have been of the greatest assistance in the working of the union.

(f) I think something should be done to amend the law with regard to the obtaining of certificates of exemption from vaccination, in order that more uniformity of administration might be obtained.

(g) That the disease of tuberculosis should be made a "Notifiable" disease. This has been effected in this city by a clause in a recent Corporation Act.

(h) That considerable modification, and not abolition, of the law of settlement and removal is much needed.

(i) That one-third of a board of guardians to retire annually would be found more effective than a triennial election. The latter have been known to alter the entire policy of the board in the space of a short time.

27. Minor Reforms:—

(a) That the question of the payment of the conveyance of guardians to and from institutions under their care and control, should be finally settled, and made uniform.

(b) That the basis of grants obtained from county councils and the Local Government Board under the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, should be revised quinquennially.

(c) That the Poor Law could be efficiently worked by a less number of guardians.

(d) That guardians should not, as is so often the case, sit and hear relief cases, for, and from, their own district.

(e) That power should be granted to guardians to remove any destitute persons so living as to be a danger to themselves, also those who refuse to enter the workhouse, merely on the grounds of an inherent desire to do so.

(f) The abolition of school cards, and the substitution of inspection by guardians' officers of the register of the Education Committee.

APPENDIX No. C.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. FRED R. SPARK, J.P., LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. As the founder of the Leeds Workpeople's Hospital Fund in 1886, and still the Chairman, the following brief history of that movement may be of interest to your Royal Commission.

2. Up to the establishment of this fund the workpeople of Leeds contributed to the Leeds General Infirmary about

£1,800 per year. This amount was for the most part voluntarily given, as there was no special agency for collection. At an annual meeting of the Infirmary Board and Governors, I expressed a belief that by organizing a large committee of working men, elected from every ward in the City, the contributions from workpeople might be very largely increased. This suggestion was heartily approved.

3. The leading men in trades' unions, friendly societies, etc., were called together. A committee was at once formed; and afterwards public meetings were held in every ward and district of the city, at which committees were elected. Each of these ward committees elected its chairman and hon. secretary. Together, these officers, numbering thirty-two, formed the Executive Committee.

4. The first year's working of this committee resulted in more than doubling the contributions from workshops within the City Boundary. There were still hundreds of work-places from which no contributions were received towards the Hospital Fund. These were reported to the executive, and formal application was made to employers asking permission to hold meetings in their works, to explain to the workpeople the objects and benefits of this new organization. Some employers readily assented, others at first refused.

5. In many cases where meetings were held the men themselves raised objections. Strong feeling was shown by workmen, and opportunity was taken to exhibit this, against the system of fines for what they called "minor offences" in the works, which fines were handed over to the medical charities by the employers. This, too, was used as a retort upon our advocacy of "purely voluntary contributions."

6. The movement, however, went on by "leaps and bounds," so that in the course of (say) ten or eleven years, we were enabled to give to the infirmary £5,000; and to the other medical charities large sums. (See Par. 17a.)

7. The collection of this large sum—nearly all in pennies and half-pennies—entailed a vast amount of honorary labour, and ultimately necessitated the employment of a paid secretary, who devotes the whole of his time to the work. This paid employment, when first proposed, aroused some bitter opposition in the Committee, on the ground that the purely voluntary character of the movement would thereby be destroyed. A year or two elapsed before the actual necessities made the appointment of a paid secretary inevitable.

8. Up to about this period neither the enthusiasm nor the work showed much diminution. But here was all this large amount of money collected by the workpeople's committee and yet they had no adequate voice in the spending of it, or in the management of any of the different medical charities. They were allowed, it was true, to have one representative on the boards of the charities, and several workmen were, as "governors," invited to attend the annual meetings by virtue of the sums given out of the fund.

9. Ominous demands were occasionally made for "more power" over the spending and distribution of the work people's fund. Some friction arose between certain workpeople and the infirmary, the former sometimes claiming as a "right" to be specially treated in that institution by reason of their subscriptions. The fund itself at this time became stationary.

10. To meet these difficulties, and to infuse new life into our movement, my proposal to establish a Workpeople's Convalescent Home entirely under our own management was warmly taken up. The benefits of this home were to be confined exclusively to regular subscribers (weekly or fortnightly) to our fund. This new departure, however, was met by serious, if not furious, opposition by some medical men connected with the Leeds medical charities. The scheme was regarded by them as subversive of the principle of charity; and that money was being collected for one purpose, and expended for another.

11. But at a largely attended meeting of workpeople, the proposal to establish for ourselves a Convalescent Home was unanimously and most heartily adopted. This first-purchased and first-established Convalescent Home for men is situated at Horsforth, a few miles from Leeds. Another Convalescent Home for women is established at Ilkley. From this new movement a rapid increase in our fund resulted, and we have now doubled the size of the home for men.

12. When fully occupied, it is calculated that we shall be able to give about 2,000 Leeds workpeople, annually, restoration to health. In my opinion more than one half of these will thus be saved from a complete breakdown requiring their admission as in-patients to the medical institutions. What a saving, then, to those charities!

13. The workpeople who subscribe to our fund of course vary greatly in the amount of their weekly wages. As a general principle we seek to obtain from those receiving under 10s. per week, one half-penny per week; and those above that sum, one penny.

14. As some of our workmen subscribers receive from £100 to £200 per year, the question is often raised: Are these people eligible for relief at the infirmary? Can they be regarded as poor? If any one of them is rejected by the infirmary enquiry officer, then complaint is made to our committee, and threats are uttered that the works where the complainant is employed will withdraw subscriptions from the Fund.

15. The money qualification for relief at the public hospitals is a question of vital importance, and is one which in my opinion must be seriously dealt with in the near future. As I have shown, there are working men, and members of the middle classes, receiving from (say) £100 to £200 per year. In the case of any of these requiring a serious operation this is the position—he is not poor enough to be admitted into the infirmary, and he is not rich enough to pay a medical man's usual fee.

16. Gladly would he pay according to his means, could he be admitted to the infirmary, where every known appliance, surgery and nursing skill, are obtainable. This, however, he is not allowed to do, and he is, so to speak, "between the devil and the deep sea." The result frequently is that a patient may live on for a time, and then succumb, when, in all probability, under a successful operation, his restored health would have rendered him a valuable asset to his country for many years.

17. My view is that paying wards in hospitals, or paying hospitals, are a necessity of the day. I believe that many of the professional men attached to our medical charities are opposed to this policy, though I have not been able to gather upon what reasonable grounds.

(a) Herewith is appended the amounts given out of the Leeds Workpeople's Fund up to 1906:—

18. The enquiry officer attached to the Leeds Infirmary reports monthly to the board the result of his labours. There are many objections to this enquiry—especially by those who contribute to the Workpeople's Fund, or who claim to do so—and it is no uncommon thing for some of these grumblers to be no subscribers at all.

19. Leeds poor working people are sensitive, and do not like these inquiries which often are made of their neighbours. It is characteristic of women, on applying to our medical charities, to dress themselves in their best. The enquiry officer "spots" these, naturally perhaps, and seeks to show their ability to pay a private doctor. Offence is thus often given, and our Workpeople's Committee have to intervene, and sometimes to suffer for this.

20. As to No. 3 of the subjects on which the Commissioners seek opinions, it may be stated that many years ago I was approached (as the then Chairman of the Hospital for Women and Children) by the infirmary chairman, who held the view that an amalgamation of the Institutions would be beneficial. The objections I then felt, and still feel, are that those who subscribe to both institutions now, would certainly not double their subscriptions to the one institution if an amalgamation took place; neither would the committee-members and the honorary medical men of the smaller charity labour for the one extended charity as they do for their "pet" institution. In the one they are important members—in the other they would be "door-keepers."

APPENDIX No. CI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. ARTHUR SYKES, LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I have had no practical insight into the working of the Poor Laws as a guardian, nor connection with friendly societies; and the suggestions which I venture to offer are based on knowledge gained during several years actually spent in a factory, and since increased by more or less intimate relation with working men in one of the poorer wards of this city.

2. I have also had considerable experience as hon. secretary and treasurer to various Charitable Organisations; but I fear that my views rest chiefly on an academic foundation, having studied somewhat deeply social problems and economics in writers on all sides of the questions involved.

3. The problems of crime, intemperance, unemployment and poverty, together with causes and remedies, are so intimately connected that it is impossible not to treat them as a whole; and, to my mind, that of "unemployment" is by far the most important. (How far the present acuteness of the malady is connected with the fiscal question is debateable, and does not, I suppose, come within the purview of the Commission.)

4. In periods of "Bad Trade" and the consequent distress, I have good reason to believe (and think that the better class of working man will agree with me) that the proportion of "The Unemployable" is much larger than is generally thought to be the case.

5. In such circumstances the unemployed may, I think, be divided into three classes, proportioned as follows:—

(a) The really deserving, 30 per cent.

For the relief of this class voluntary effort would always furnish ready and ample means.

(b) Cases due more or less to improvidence and other avoidable causes, 30 per cent.

Voluntary effort combined with legislation already existing would also suffice for dealing with this class.

(c) The remaining cases are, I believe, to all intents and purposes to be classed as "unemployable," 40 per cent.

(In times of "Good Trade" the proportion of this class to the whole is, of course, larger still.)

6. For dealing with this class fresh methods and legislation are necessary, for it is, undoubtedly, the source of an enormous proportion of the crime, vice and intemperance which exist. I would propose a system of detention combined with compulsory employment to which the stigma of the gaol should not (and, I believe, would not) be attached.

7. These "Labour Colonies" would, undoubtedly, involve a large expenditure to establish, but in a very few years, I am convinced, they would prove themselves to have been very remunerative undertakings owing to the consequent reduction of habitual crime, intemperance, insanity and disease. Though such methods necessarily interfere with the "liberty of the subject," and are supposed to be "un-English," I fail to see how they differ from Factory Acts, Employers' Liability Acts, Compensation Acts and other legislation to an increase of which public opinion of to-day unanimously points. In fact, it seems to me impossible to deal otherwise with those who through ignorance cannot, or through vicious propensities will not, help themselves.

8. The question of compulsory insurance is one which is more or less closely connected with the above-mentioned scheme. The policies should be paid for partly by the operative and partly by the employer, with grants in aid if necessary, from the Exchequer. Such a system would, I believe, go far towards the solution of the "Old Age Pension" problem. In the very fact of the individual contribution (however small in proportion to the actual expenditure involved and benefit received) lies, I believe, the whole secret of the value of the remedy.

9. Such is, undoubtedly, the case in the administration of hospitals, dispensaries and kindred charitable organisations.

10. The genuine working man feels, I believe, strongly in this matter, and resents equally with the well-to-do the abuse of charity in all its forms which is practised by the worthless and unprincipled among his fellows.

11. The records kept by the suggested "Labour Colonies," together with the "insurance tickets," would automatically furnish individual certificates which would be of the greatest use in dealing with cases of vagrancy and application for relief whether under the Poor Laws, or to charitable institutions. These certificates, too, would enable magistrates and guardians to deal equitably and efficiently with cases which involved doubt as to whether the subject were entitled to relief, or should be dealt with under the present penal code, or the suggested "Labour Colony" legislation.

12. It must be borne in mind that legislation in the form of Factory Acts, Employers' Liability Acts, Compensation to Workmen Acts, together with the large increase of taxation and local rating must in the future not only necessarily accentuate the problem of old age pensions, but also tend to diminish the flow of funds to purely charitable objects.

13. In my opinion it would be impossible by purely voluntary effort to provide such a system of pension.

APPENDIX No. CII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. WALTER TARRANT, MASTER, ECCLESALL BIERLOW UNION WORKHOUSE.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

Peculiarities in Poor Law Administration.

1. A system which is peculiar, I believe, to Ecclesall, and which has been recognised in this Union by the inspectors and auditors for the past thirty years, provides temporary work for able-bodied men.

2. Instead of this class being given orders for admission on application to the relieving officers' work (wood sawing or stone breaking) is found them, by which they can earn varying amounts according to their class.

3. The wood and stone are paid for by the hundred-weight, and single men are not allowed to earn as much per week as married men with children.

4. The wages thus earned are paid at the end of each day, and are paid out of either the firewood or stone accounts.

5. This system is a safeguard against actual want and enables the man to retain his liberty to seek more remunerative employment elsewhere, and he does not become disenfranchised.

6. It undoubtedly accounts for the comparatively small number of able-bodied men in this workhouse.

7. The following are the maximum amounts allowed to be earned and which were adopted by the Ecclesall Board, January 31st, 1877:—

	s.	d.
Single men	5	9
Married men with wife only	7	8
Married men with wife and one child	9	7
Married men with wife and two children	11	6
Married men with wife and three children	13	5
Married men with wife and four or more children	15	4

8. The number of men thus employed has fluctuated (with the trade of the city) from two to twenty, the average number being eight.

Respective Merits of Indoor and Outdoor Relief.

9. Outdoor relief for the aged poor I believe to be preferable to indoor where it is possible to obtain home life of a satisfactory class. The same care, however, would need to be exercised as in the boarding-out of children and I am convinced from the neglected and filthy state in which the majority of the aged cases are found on admission, that even liberal outdoor relief would not secure to the large majority of this class the care and comfort which they secure by being given indoor relief.

The Causes of Pauperism.

10. The causes of the pauperism of the inmates of this institution I believe to be:—

(a) Sickness and mental inability to earn a livelihood.

(b) Age.

(c) Drink.

11. I give below a classified list of the population of this institution on Saturday, December 29th, 1906:—

164 Imbeciles.

235 Sick.

39 Children in health.

355 Aged.

45 Men under sixty years of age, but the majority of whom are between the ages of fifty-five and sixty, and very few could be termed able-bodied.

58 Women under sixty.

Mothers of Illegitimate Children.

12. During the past five years there have been 229 births in this institution and 177 or 77·2 per cent. of these have been illegitimate children the mothers of whom for the most part are mentally weak and in many cases approaching the imbecile. Most of them on taking their discharge go direct to their old surroundings and associations, and return after a time to the workhouse pregnant or as lock cases. This class of women I believe should be placed under detention till there is a fair chance of the woman leading a respectable life on discharge; but I am of opinion that workhouses would not be successful places of detention or training. I believe it to be special work which would not be carried out with success in the wards of a large workhouse, where the inmates are constantly changing, and where it would not be possible to exercise the necessary personal supervision and influence.

13. The following women are now in the house:—

One woman, aged twenty-nine, with four illegitimate children; now pregnant.

One woman, aged thirty, with one illegitimate child.

One woman, aged twenty-eight, with three illegitimate children.

One woman, aged twenty, with one illegitimate child; now pregnant.

One woman, aged twenty-five, with two illegitimate children.

One woman, aged thirty, with one illegitimate child.

One woman, aged thirty-one, with three illegitimate children.

One woman, aged thirty-nine, with three illegitimate children.

Epileptics.

14. I am strongly of opinion that epileptics should be removed from the workhouse to colonies where suitable occupation (on the land where the condition of the patient permits) could be found and association with the imbecile class avoided.

Women of Vicious Character.

15. In all large workhouses there will be found a number of women who have led vicious lives and whose influence is extremely bad. A class of woman most difficult to control, and who are constantly taking their discharge, to return after short periods of absence, dirty, neglected and more depraved than ever. They are an evil element which should be, if possible, removed, but one hardly dares think of an institution with a population composed entirely of this class.

Classification of Inmates.

16. Classification as it exists at Ecclesall is as follows:—

The sick in hospital.

The imbecile and epileptics in the asylum wards.

The aged and infirm in separate blocks.

The children in the receiving homes and nursery.

The aged who are healthy and younger men and women in the wards of the house.

17. It has not been the practice to classify the inmates in accordance with the lives they have led prior to becoming inmates; but rather to consider their present needs and temperaments, and to so classify as to secure, as far as possible, the largest amount of comfort to the greatest number. The class which stands in greatest need of separate accommodation are the epileptics, who at present are in the quarters provided for the imbecile.

18. So much depends upon the class of inmate and what may be called the general tone of the whole establishment, that it would be hard to express an opinion which would be applicable to workhouses as a whole.

19. From my observation in this institution, I have formed the opinion that the effect of workhouse life on young men is utterly bad. The able-bodied, if allowed, become content, I might say callous, and lose self-respect and all sense of independence. I am strongly of opinion that men under sixty, certified by a medical officer as able-bodied, should not under any circumstances be given admission to workhouses, but should be dealt with as a distinct class. In addition to the enervating influence which workhouse life seems to exert on this class of man, there is always the need for able-bodied assistance in the manual work of an institution, and the danger is that these men may be given employment which does not induce them to seek work as wage earners and which requires steady application.

20. There is also the man who has some slight physical infirmity, who has perhaps, for many years, managed to make his living outside, but who, unfortunately, if once admitted, gradually becomes satisfied with the life, and in the end uses his slight infirmity to escape any real work, because the medical officer is unable or unwilling to certify him as fit. Life in the workhouse has caused him to lose what small amount of grit he had before being admitted.

APPENDIX No. CIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. C. W. THOMPSON, RELIEVING OFFICER, HOLBECK UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. This union is a residential district, chiefly of the artisan and labouring class. Some parts are occupied by very poor people owing to the low rents.

2. The industries in the district are, Monk Bridge Iron Works, iron foundries, engineering works, wholesale clothing factories, leather works, boot manufacturers, printing and bookbinding, coal mining and brickworks.

3. I am in favour of dealing liberally with the aged deserving poor whose condition has been brought about by no fault of their own. Providing they have a suitable home and are capable of taking care of themselves, or have some one to attend them in sickness or infirmity.

4. Also, I most strongly commend to your notice the care of young fatherless children whose mothers are leading a respectable life, as being worthy of a liberal allowance, as a child pinched of proper food often shows traces of it when grown up.

5. To those poor whose circumstances are due to their own indifference, careless, and extravagant mode of living, great care should be exercised before any out-relief be granted, whilst to those of vicious and intemperate habits out-relief should be refused and admission be given to the house.

6. In this district all sorts, good, bad, and indifferent apply for relief, whilst the chief causes of poverty are old age, sickness and infirmity, and loss of parent or parents, whilst gambling and intemperance is very active here.

7. The class of persons seeking election as guardians are various, chiefly tradesmen, managers, trades union and labour representatives.

8. All applicants for out relief must appear before the board or be represented if possible, and each case is considered and dealt with on its merits or otherwise.

9. At times we have several test men to deal with, but I find that if the task be strictly enforced, many of them will soon find other employment, whilst some who prefer a loose end should be given an order for admission to the house, and by so doing it produces a most deterring effect.

10. I am of opinion that the guardians should have power to detain in the workhouse destitute, sick, weak and feeble-minded persons who have no one responsible for their welfare, also that class of persons known as "ins and outs."

11. The greatest care should be exercised in granting medical out-relief, as I believe this to be one of the greatest temptations for creating pauperism.

12. It is also a serious drawback to the interests of friendly societies. It should be granted on loan, and, where possible, repayment should be enforced.

13. The Law of Settlement and Removal should be abolished or simplified, so that it can be more easily understood and worked. Disputes might be settled by the Local Government Board, whose decision should be final.

APPENDIX No. CIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. ALAN C. TURNER, SECRETARY, BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, SHEFFIELD, ETC.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. Sheffield is a badly paid medical town, owing greatly to two causes:—

(1) Medical men underselling each other.

(2) The men at the large works having to pay 1d. a week to either the hospital or infirmary, for which they say they have a right to go to one or the other.

2. It is a town where club practice seems to be a necessity, but as a rule club fees are so low that the medical men cannot do justice to the patients. The fees vary from 3s. to 4s. a member per annum. A large club at 4s. can pay, but at 3s. 6d. the doctor is underpaid. In Rotherham, the next town, which is part of the Sheffield Division of the British Medical Association, all club fees have been raised to 5s.

3. The working class in Sheffield is so cheaply attended that the doctors suffer by it. There are no wage limits to clubs—some of the clubs have juveniles, i.e. both sexes up to eighteen years old, at a rate varying from 2s. to 3s. per annum.

4. There is a society formed by some lay-people in Sheffield, who pay one or two medical men to attend all the members of it and do nothing else; the society, which was formed by canvassing among the various clubs, is barred by all the medical men in the town, and the medical officers of it are not met professionally.

5. My efforts to find out anything have been far from encouraging. I sent out 250 papers asking for particulars of clubs and friendly societies, and had only thirty answers.

6. I do not know if the Commission are going to enquire into midwifery and the working of the Midwives Act; if so there is one point which is very hard on many of the doctors, and that is that they are very often called in to help a midwife and then nobody pays them, and they seem to have no means of getting paid.

7. There is one other thing, and that is about the public vaccinator; it is not easy for the poor class general practitioner to get any vaccination unless it is done poorly and cheaply. The present arrangement of the public vaccinator going to the houses hits the other men very hard, as it lets the public vaccinator in to every house, and when he is not a perfectly straight man it means he has an entry into every house in his district, and, I am told, tries to get the families as his patients. The result is the other men do all they can to keep him out—e.g. either does it for nothing, which is a dead loss to him, or does one or perhaps two marks for 6d. or 1s., although most get 2s. 6d. for it.

APPENDIX No. CV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY COUNCILLOR C. H. WILSON, J.P., LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

Administration.

1. I am in favour of one authority in one area, subject only to the authority of Parliament.

2. There is overlapping in the matter of relief of distress, and consequent waste.

3. In the interests of good and improved local government I would transfer the duties of overseers and boards of guardians to committees of the borough and county councils.

4. The work would be done more efficiently and largely by the same men.

5. There would be no difficulty, if necessary, in increasing the numbers of the said councils, to enable them to discharge additional duties.

Effect of Charity and Out-Relief on Recipients.

6. I believe the effect of charity and Poor Law out-relief on the recipients is in both cases exceedingly harmful, varying only in degree.

7. Many families, having tasted pauper bread, never leave off applying for it. This has been found to affect several generations in succession. It is destructive of the incentive to work.

8. In the same way recipients of charity seem to have their sense of independence and robustness of view deteriorated. Instead of looking to their own efforts to sustain them and theirs, they unfortunately acquire the habit of looking to and depending on others for their sustenance.

9. There is very little co-operation between charity and Poor Law at present.

10. It is, I believe, not possible to substitute charity for out-relief, as it would involve setting up a costly machinery for its distribution. Consolidating the charities under one authority for each district so as to equalise payments, and prevent overlapping would be an improvement.

Old Age Pensions and Friendly Societies.

11. I do not think it is possible to provide old age pensions by friendly societies. They do not cover the population. Their voluntary pension funds have not been largely used. They may, however, supplement what is done by the State. The extra payment necessary to provide pensions by friendly societies is a great deterrent to members joining.

12. If old age pensions are to be provided it will have to be from a national fund operating through the borough and county councils. These bodies will be best for identification and distribution.

13. If pensions are provided there should be three grades:—

- (1) Thrifty people of good character who have brought up large families.
- (2) People who have worked and maintained their families and character, but not saved anything.
- (3) Those who have failed to satisfy 1 and 2.

Friendly Societies and Hospitals—Further Co-operation Possible.

14. Workmen mostly members of friendly, etc., societies in Leeds have subscribed to the principal hospitals.

15. The voluntary hospitals help now to deal with accidents and serious cases, getting men made well in the shortest possible time, and so saving the societies' sick funds.

16. Free medical State relief would free friendly societies from an average contribution of 4s. per member per annum, the amount paid to their various medical men now. This would mean a great strengthening of their degree of solvency, but it is doubtful whether this socialistic idea has any chance of being put into practice.

Friendly Societies Acts and Out-Relief.

17. Members of various societies are agitating for representation on the boards of guardians because of a suspicion that at times men who have tried to practice thrift in their societies are not allowed full scale of relief, the contention being that a man drawing sick pay for which he has subscribed from his hard earnings should not be penalised for his previous thrift, and so treated worse than a thriftless person.

Tramps or Vagrants.

18. The nation is looking to the Commission for relief from the tramp nuisance, caused by about 50,000 persons wandering about the country in England and Wales without visible means of subsistence.

19. I do not include the few honest workmen moving from place to place in search of work, but the habitual vagrant who spends his life in seeking work which he is determined never to find.

20. Of indescribably filthy habits, he does much to disseminate some of the most loathsome diseases. (Outbreaks of smallpox have many times been traced to vagrants.) He has been described as parasitical, entirely unproductive, and yet highly reproductive. Only by exceptionally drastic measures can this festering sore be removed from our midst.

21. I am in favour of compulsory detention for lengthening periods in labour colonies until there is either improvement or extinction by effluxion of time. I do not believe it is possible to reclaim vagrants. When under detention the single cell system should obtain.

Children of Vagrants.

22. The way in which juvenile casuals are utilised for begging and other purposes renders it, in my opinion, imperative that they should, after a given period, be detained pending inquiries, and eventually removed from the control of their parents if departure with adults would mean a continuation of vagabondage.

23. This separation of children from adults would seriously check that vilest class of vagrants, which practically lives on the misplaced sympathy of the charitably disposed, who cannot see behind the shivering child the debauched and rapacious parent.

24. If parents of juvenile casuals showed signs of improvement by settling down to honest work and furnished a suitable home, then, and then only, should there be any question of restoring their children to them.

25. The present system not only allows children to be improperly used as beggars, etc., but the perpetuation of the vagrant race is practically unchecked.

Poor Law Methods.

26. The following are some criticisms of Poor Law methods from the point of view of those engaged in charitable work :—

- (a) Test work. Not paid a living wage.
- (b) Disfranchisement for receipt of temporary relief considered a hardship by many.
- (c) Many able-bodied men forced into the work-house who should be free to look for work.
- (d) I am in favour of out-relief as helping to keep families together rather than to break them up.
- (e) A State system of old-age pensions better than either charity or out-relief.
- (f) After a soldier of the Army or industry has served with credit for his life, he has earned his recompense, and would get whatever pension was allowed as a matter of right.
- (g) Already several sections of the community are under the operation of the system.
- (h) Freely given Poor Law out-relief could never be superior to this.

Compounding.

27. A very necessary and politic matter, in my opinion, is the abolition of compounding in connection with the collection of rates. In other words, every man should pay his rates direct to the authority, and not in the shape of rent to the landlord. Why should a landlord be allowed as much as 25 per cent. for collection of rates and risk of empties? A greater check would be placed on extravagance, and greater interest would be taken by ratepayers in the affairs of their authority. The present system operates in the wrong direction.

Common Good.

28. I am in favour of setting up a "Common Good," as it is termed in Glasgow and other Scottish cities, with possible improvements.

29. This fund should be under the control of the city council, who should be authorised to hold property for the welfare of the inhabitants, and generally to be authorised to receive gifts and legacies from well-disposed citizens, and possibly later to control such charities as might be assigned to it by and under the direction of the Charity Commissioners.

30. From other particulars I am furnishing it will be seen that whilst large sums are raised and disbursed in Leeds yearly for charitable purposes, the channels worked in are narrow, spasmodic, and to some extent inefficient. There is a necessity for local co-operation in charitable work which is at present non-existent.

Unemployed Bureau.

31. As Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee of the City of Leeds for nine years, I had considerable experience of "unemployed."

32. A bureau was opened, temporarily at the start, but which has since been made permanent, for the registration of the persons residing within the city, and who for various causes found themselves without employment.

33. Registration was made in each case of the man's

- Name.
- Age.
- Trade or Occupation.
- Address.
- Ward.
- Name of last employer.
- Whether married or single.
- Number of children or other dependents.

34. A system of communicating with each man's last employer was carefully carried out, and by this means it was ascertained that there was each year placed on the register names of about 1,500 who were undesirables, and for which work was, generally speaking, never found. (They appeared to be very little better than the vagrants already referred to, and will also require drastic treatment.)

35. After experience it was found advisable to put men on various public relief works for three days a week each, of nine hours at 5d. per hour, thus making it possible for a man to earn 11s. 3d. each week he was retained on relief works.

36. Married men with families were given the preference. Next in order were married men without families, and, lastly, single men.

37. None were found work who had not lived in the city for a period of several months.

38. This system has been regularly acted upon for several years past, and (as a palliative only) appears to work fairly well.

39. The boards of guardians are no longer covering the field for relieving distress; see my remarks in paragraph 2.

APPENDIX No. CVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DAVID WILSON, M.D., DISTRICT MEDICAL OFFICER AND MEDICAL OFFICER OF THE WORKHOUSE, HUDDERSFIELD UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. I have been for twenty-six years medical officer of the workhouse and one district in this union.

2. The sanitary authority only attend cases of infectious disease which have been removed to the sanatorium under the Corporation, and this indifferently, whether the patient is rich or poor, no charge being made.

3. Attendance on sick paupers is on the lines laid down in the consolidated orders of the Local Government Board.

4. Voluntary efforts are restricted to the General Infirmary, where cases are admitted under a subscriber's order, which is supposed to be a guarantee that the patient is not sufficiently well off to pay for treatment at home or that in some cases the treatment could only be carried out in an Infirmary. This public infirmary is supported by voluntary contributions. The guardians of this union give £100 from the Poor Law funds that cases of paupers who require serious operations may be treated there. There are no public dispensaries or medical clubs in this town.

5. There can be no overlapping in the above agencies, and the co-operation between the Board of Guardians and the public infirmary appears to me to be very much one-sided, as I consider that the guardians have very much the better of the bargain at the expense of the general subscriber, as the number of paupers who are treated at the infirmary is very large. I have no statistics, however.

6. The difficulty of handing over to one authority the treatment (medical) of the poor as far as I can see is very great, in this district, as I believe there would be a refusal, say, on the part of the Town Council to have this added to their other business. They would probably inform you that they considered an "ad hoc" authority, such as the Board of Guardians as at present existing, to be the better way. This of course is only a personal opinion.

7. I personally would like to see only one authority for all administrative purposes, as we get a better and more intelligent class of members on the town council than we do on the Board of Guardians.

8. I think in this union the medical attendance on the poor is very satisfactory.

APPENDIX No. CVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. T. B. WREN, OF THE CHURCH ARMY, LEEDS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

Charities and Voluntary Efforts.

1. In describing the operations and effects of the charities of this neighbourhood my remarks are confined to those relating to men which have come under my own observation, viz., Homes for Men and Night Shelters; the former represented by the Church Army, who only admit men for not less than three months unless employment is secured earlier; endeavouring by this condition to put a check on vagrancy.

2. The three months period enables a man who is physically debilitated through privation to become employable again, and by a system of piecework is enabled to earn sufficient to be re-clothed, which is essential before seeking employment, and to pay his fare to a place where work is likely to be obtained, leaving a balance sufficient to support himself during his first week's work.

3. The moral effect of regular habits during the period mentioned is most marked.

4. Unfortunately a number of men seek re-admittance who can only obtain employment during certain seasons of the year.

5. We also have the undesirable, who for no apparent reason abscond from one Home to enter another or similar institution.

6. To remedy this I would suggest this class of man should be sent to a Labour Colony for a period of not less than three years by an order from a magistrate.

7. Seventy-five per cent. of the men are unskilled.

8. Whilst not wishing to depreciate the work of others I have repeatedly found men who have been demoralised by night shelters, which encourage them in idleness and vagrancy.

9. The respective effects on the recipients of charity depend entirely on the class of persons relieved, and in a lesser degree on the spirit in which the relief is distributed.

10. In the case of a deserving but unfortunate person who is temporarily embarrassed it is calculated to arrest hopelessness which so often overtakes them; judiciously given relief, with sympathy, arouses a new activity, the moral effect being incalculable; whilst preserving a person's dignity causing him to make efforts to retain his home.

11. In the case of permanent distress arising from ill-health or old age, the efforts of charitable societies are not justified; such persons should be chargeable to the State.

12. The out-relief of the Poor Law not only often saves a person's home but preserves them from the demoralizing effect of the workhouse.

Casual Wards.

13. Facilitates vagrancy and its attendant evils, demoralizes the genuine seeker of work; the latter being brought into contact with the worthless, and is detained too long, which mitigates his chance of obtaining work.

Workhouse.

14. No classification of inmates, the worn-out toiler is separated from his wife, and associates with the habitué of penal establishments. No provision is made to assist the inmates to be self-supporting, and his position is considerably worse by being out of touch with the outside world, and by its methods persons become unemployable.

15. The Poor Law and charities might co-operate by the former transferring its able-bodied inmates to the latter, where they would be self-supporting and also be in touch with the labour market; the persons sent could then be prosecuted should they return to the workhouse for failing to maintain themselves.

16. The rates would also be considerably relieved by this method.

17. I would suggest that outdoor relief be distributed through charitable societies whose agent, by periodical visits to the recipients' homes, would be able to advise them advantageously; the stigma of the Poor Law being removed.

APPENDIX No. CVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. BERNARD JOSEPH YOUNG, A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE AND A MEMBER OF THE SHEFFIELD BOARD OF GUARDIANS SINCE 1882.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—WEST YORKSHIRE.

1. The Sheffield Union embraces a little more than half the City of Sheffield, being that portion which consists principally of works, working men's dwellings and slums; and the single outlying agricultural parish of Handsworth which contains 3,600 acres, in parts of which is a considerable coal mining population.

2. The statistics of the union illustrates in a striking manner what may result from lack of inquiry and supervision and laxity in granting outdoor relief.

3. During the eight years ending March, 1880-1887, the average expenditure in the union was: indoor, £14,170; outdoor, £23,420. In the years ending March, 1888-1890 the staff in the relieving office was augmented and reorganised, with the result that by the year ending March, 1892, and without any other assignable cause, the figures were altered to: indoor, £14,800; outdoor £10,600, a reduction of nearly 55 per cent. without appreciably affecting the indoor relief.

4. The expenditure on out-relief for the ten following years to 1902 (some of them years of depression and trade disputes) shows an average of only £12,443; since which date to March, 1906, it has gradually grown to £16,626.

This is equal to an increase of 33 per cent., which can be largely attributed to the neglect of the workhouse test; but the more general application of the higher scale of relief in deserving cases adopted in this union since 1895 will account for it to some extent.

5. Out-relief may be given with advantage in cases where it can be shown that the recipients do not belong to the habitual pauper class, and then it should be given to a sufficient extent and the cases strictly supervised.

6. In other cases there can be no question but that the granting of outdoor relief is a prolific cause of increased pauperism.

7. The opinion often expressed that it is more economical to give to an applicant less in out-relief than the cost of in-maintenance is entirely erroneous, since this is more than over-balanced by the increased numbers demanding it.

8. I have never been able to discover that out-relief, however lavishly given, decreased the numbers entering the workhouse, but am of opinion that by thus educating people to rely upon the rates the indoor relief list is in the long run also increased.

9. A large percentage of pauperism is undoubtedly hereditary.

10. The greatest instigation to guardians to grant out-relief is, in my opinion, not the best interests of the persons for whom it is given, but consideration for the wishes and importunities of those whom the relief is not intended to benefit.

11. Where out-relief is given for the decrepit, the sick, and for children that are growing up, the circumstances under which they live, or the way in which they are being brought up, is frequently such that indoor relief would be much more to their comfort and advantage.

12. The opinions and actions of different guardians on the subject of out-relief are so divergent that under existing systems uniformity of treatment cannot be looked for.

13. The following are abundant sources of pauperism:—Sickness of or accident to the bread-winner.

Hereditary reliance upon the rates for assistance.

The conversion of private firms, having a personal interest in their employees, into Limited Liability Companies.

Agricultural depression.

The squeezing out of employment of the less efficient hands by reason of the requirements of workmen's unions as to a standard rate of wages.

Employers Liability Acts.

Youthful and improvident marriages.

14. The law under which the 4s. grant made to guardians towards the maintenance of lunatics is only payable in respect of those cases sent to county asylums should be amended so as to make the payment applicable to all certified lunatics. At present unions that make provision for the retention in their workhouses of harmless and incurable cases are doubly penalised (1) directly by the loss of this 4s. grant and (2) indirectly by their contributions through the county rate towards the cost of maintaining in the county asylum similar cases from other unions where practically no provision is made for the retention of imbeciles of any kind.

15. Magistrates should be empowered on an information, laid by the guardians, sanitary inspectors, or medical officers of health, that a person or child is incapable of taking care of itself and is being neglected by others, physically or morally, to make an order for its removal to and detention in a union hospital, children's home or workhouse, which order magistrates should also have power to vary on a representation that the circumstances were altered.

16. The restrictions on the liberty of indoor paupers should be very much relaxed to those who are not able-bodied and who conduct themselves properly.

17. A stipendiary guardian to deal with all applications for out-relief would tend to insure uniformity of treatment and the application of approved principles.

18. It frequently occurs that a scamp succeeds in getting into the position of having his wife and children in the workhouse and himself a free man outside, since he cannot in practice be prosecuted for allowing them to "become chargeable" if the chargeability technically existed before the neglect; or for "neglect" unless proof be forthcoming that he has means of supporting them.

The law should be amended so that his failure to enter and remain in the workhouse during the period of their chargeability, to there work for their maintenance, failing other means of supporting them, should be made a punishable offence.

19. When guardians have given relief in a case for whose maintenance there is some person wholly or partially responsible and the guardians obtain a magistrate's order upon such person to repay to them the whole or a portion of the cost, such person should, on allowing such repayments to fall into arrears, be liable to arrest upon warrant and to be dealt with as in the case of a maintenance order in an affiliation case.

POOR LAW INFIRMARY MANAGEMENT.

20. I have devoted a great deal of time and thought to this subject for twenty years.

21. I draw a distinction between the sick poor and the infirm poor; hence, to avoid misapprehension, I prefer the term "hospital" as the location of the sick.

22. The infirm poor, e.g., the senile and helpless—not the infirm, usually requiring medical attention or skilled nursing should not be made hospital cases. They can well be retained in a ward of the workhouse.

23. There is always a large and increasing number of sick poor requiring hospital treatment, who fail to obtain admission orders to the voluntary hospitals or whose cases are too protracted to permit of their remaining in such institutions, who otherwise are often not of the pauper class.

24. To restore a bread-winner or a wife or young person to health and work is the most effective and economical method of relief.

25. The sick poor should have entirely distinct treatment from other paupers and be under different officers.

- Hospital separate from workhouse. 26. Wherever possible there should be a Poor Law hospital which should be a separate establishment from the workhouse and should not be so contiguous as to have any direct communication therewith.
- Nurses. 27. All inmates of the hospital should be in the direct care of qualified and certificated sisters who shall have had not less than three years hospital training, and the number of each sister's patients should be so limited as to be strictly under her personal supervision.
- Night nurses. 28. There should be an efficient staff of nurses for night duty.
- Probationer nurses. 29. Probationer nurses may well be trained as assistants to and immediately under the supervision of a qualified sister; but care should be taken to select probationers of high moral character, strict integrity and as far as possible, from the more educated class, who are willing to come for little or no salary for the first year, and whose bearing will command the respect of patients of even the lowest character.
- They should be required to serve for a period of three years' training in the hospital wards and successfully pass examination by an independent medical expert before obtaining a certificate of efficiency.
- When a training in midwifery is also sought the probationer should be required to serve for a fourth year, during which this course should be taken.
- Nurses not subordinate officers. 30. Trained nurses should not be permitted to be treated as belonging to the same category as subordinate workhouse officers and subject to rules in common with them, as though they were servants.
- Value of Poor Law hospital training should be upheld. 31. More care should be taken to uphold the status and reputation resulting to a nurse from a training and qualifying certificate obtained as above in a Poor Law hospital, where there is a qualified matron and a resident medical officer so as to make such hospital available for the best class of probationers.
- Certificates should not be given excepting for efficient training. 32. The granting of certificates of training by union authorities to probationers who have served perhaps singly and for only two years under a "superintendent nurse" (possibly herself but indifferently trained) in a small workhouse, is derogatory of the best interests of the nursing profession and casts a detrimental stigma upon all nurses trained under the Poor Law, however efficient it may have been, tending thereby to deter the best class of probationers from entering at union hospitals.
- Other certificates should be qualified ones. 33. If nurses of this inefficiently trained character are necessary in order to staff small workhouse infirmaries, any certificate given to them should be distinctive from such a one as is given for general hospital training.
- There should only be one standard for training midwives. 34. For the same reason the suggestion that women trained under the Poor Law should be permitted to present themselves for examination for a Midwife's Certificate with a different (probably lower) standard of training than that proscribed by the Central Midwives' Board, would be seriously harmful to nurses trained in a properly constituted union hospital fulfilling the requirements of that board.
35. Good training makes much more for efficiency in a nurse than marks at an examination.
36. Pauper helps—excepting in so far as the patients can themselves assist—should not be employed in the hospital wards or in connection with the patients' food.
- Men and women sent from the able-bodied wards (so-called) of the workhouse to work in hospital wards are subversive of all comfort and discipline therein and the well-being of the patients. In exact proportion to their able-bodiedness they are found to be idle, ignorant, depraved, dirty and unscrupulous, noisy and gossiping.
- There is in practice no economy in so employing such persons since they require extra officers to superintend them, whilst by pilfering the patients' food and idle conduct they make comfortable berths for themselves which they are loath to retire from, and so unduly prolong their chargeability to the union.
37. A much better and truly economical method—since a saving in the outdoor relief list can thereby be directly effected—is to employ as charwomen, to do the necessary scrubbing in the hospitals during the forepart of the day, respectable widows who have families and who find it impossible to otherwise obtain sufficient employment to maintain them, and thus prevent the children becoming a charge upon the rates and familiarised with pauperism. Women of this class, selected for their good character, know that this employment depends upon their maintaining it and can generally be trusted to behave themselves.

Training the best test
Workhouse inmate labour for hospitals condemned.

Outdoor relief saved by employing respectable widows as hospital scrubbers.

ADMINISTRATION OF INFIRMARY.

38. The medical officer should control the admissions and discharges, the allocation of the patients, their medical treatment, and order their diets. He should be responsible for everything appertaining to the hygiene of the hospital and have authority to requisition what is needful in respect thereto; but he should be relieved of all responsibility for and not be expected to interfere in the domestic government and administration of the establishment or control of its officers excepting in the event of the well-being of a patient being directly involved. It should be part of his duty to give lectures to probationer nurses in all branches of their profession, including midwifery; and to set them test papers from time to time.

39. The matron, who should in all cases be herself a trained nurse, capable of instructing probationers in their duties, should be entrusted with the control and management of the nurses' home and of the nurses and probationers, with authority to select and discharge them, as also the hospital servants; and she should be responsible for seeing that the medical officer's requirements in regard to the patients are duly carried out.

The matron should also have the superintendence of the domestic administration of the hospital with the assistance of a steward in regard to the management of male officers, the admissions, discharges, funerals, supplies to stores, etc., and such other subordinate officers as may be necessary to keep the books and carry on the work of the institution.

APPENDIX No. CIX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. JOHN J. AFFLECK, MEMBER OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS, AND OF DISTRESS COMMITTEE, ETC., BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I have been a member of the Birmingham Board of Guardians for about twelve years. I have been twice chairman of the Workhouse Management Committee and served on most of the other committees, including the Distress Committee appointed last year.

2. I may say that Birmingham is not a union; it is a single parish with a special Act. The city of Birmingham is in two other unions—Aston and King's Norton. The parish of Birmingham is in the centre of the city and contains a good many slums and cheap lodging-houses from which we get a good many paupers.

3. Although the population of the parish is declining, yet the population of the workhouse is increasing. There are several reasons for this. In the first place our infirmary is very popular; people travel long distances to get into it. Another thing, our board are trying an experiment; they are trying to keep children out of the workhouse altogether. This is an impossibility on the face of it, for their mothers take them there before they are born. We have two houses, one for boys, the other for girls; these children go to the schools in the neighbourhood. They are better dressed and cared for than an ordinary working man can afford. This, in my opinion, is advertising and encouraging pauperism.

4. Other causes of pauperism are improvidence, intemperance, a growing desire for amusements, such as football matches, theatres, concert halls, etc. The Employers Liability Act, trades unionism, and a clause inserted in nearly all contracts now that the contractor must pay the trade union rate of wages. This prevents people getting employment if they get out after a certain age; consequently we have a good many what I may call "young old" men. I have nothing to say against trade unionism or the Employers Liability Act. They are both good, but they are slowly but surely helping to fill workhouses.

5. With regard to the merits of indoor and outdoor relief, it depends entirely upon the class of person applying. The most of our outdoor cases are old people or widows with young families. We should not think of sending old people into the House if they have friends or relations to stay with, nor should we think of breaking up the home of a widow. These cases we should relieve outside, but we should not give outdoor relief to go into a lodging-house, nor if they spent what they got in an improper manner.

6. The only alteration in the law that I can suggest at present would be an alteration in the dietary of the able-bodied. It is far too good, and we shall never get rid of them while they are fed so well. That is my experience. I was in London last week on guardian's business. I visited eight workhouses and took the opportunity to get the opinion of the masters about the able-bodied dietary, and found they were all of the same opinion.

APPENDIX No. CX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. THOMAS ALLESTREE AFFORD, RELIEVING OFFICER, NORTHAMPTON.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I was appointed relieving officer of the Saint Sepulchre district of the Northampton Union in December, 1896. In 1903 the guardians, in consequence of the enormous amount of distress, decided to establish "unemployed" works and until the discontinuance in June, 1906, I acted as "Pay Clerk" for the whole union in conjunction with my ordinary duties. I was brought in immediate contact with the circumstances and conditions of the men and their families.

Social Conditions.

2. Northampton is principally engaged in the boot and shoe trade.

The manufacturers are (scarcely without an exception) men who have risen to their present position in consequence of their own energy, perseverance, ability, and self-denial.

There are a few retired commercial men. The town is well supplied with doctors who invariably have their own private dispensaries, beside which there is the Victoria Dispensary and Medical Institute, attended by the leading gentlemen of the medical profession. The "heads of families," by subscribing sums varying from

2d. to 6d. per week, can secure in event of sickness medical attention for themselves or any of their children under the age of fourteen years.

The public institutions comprise the General Hospital, Weston Home, and Infectious Hospitals.

In a population of about 95,000 there are about the average number of other professional gentlemen.

The shoe operative exceeds numerically any other portion of the inhabitants. The better class are thrifty and industrious, but there is a large proportion who are careless, neglecting homes and families and addicted to pleasure-seeking.

The houses generally are well and substantially built with good sanitary arrangements. With exception of a few instances the streets are "through."

Courts would compare favourably with any other town of similar size.

Industrial Conditions.

3. The industrial conditions in the boot and shoe trade have materially altered since the introduction of machinery. It is computed that although the trade has manufactured more goods, fewer workmen have been employed. By experience the manufacturer has discovered that a man by devoting all his ability and energy to one particular branch becomes more efficient, and produces work nearer perfection, consequently older men's services have been dispensed with. Most factories have introduced the "team system" by means of which certain number of men combine to produce the particular part of shoe desired, and rate of work is regulated by slowest operative. It will be seen that the inferior workman is soon displaced.

Unemployed.

4. Machinery introduced into the manufacture of boots and shoes seriously affected the employment of labour. Numbers of operatives, especially "finishers," were discharged. A large amount of distress was apparent. Socialists organised demonstrations, and ultimately the guardians decided to open "Relief Works." Destitute men were set to work stone-breaking. System of pay varied. Eventually (as a deterrent) the "Unemployed" were confined to stone-yard the whole week excepting Monday (which day they were to devote to the purpose of seeking other employment) and paid according to number dependent. The maximum employed in one week was 299. "Heads of family" and minimum about twenty, when the board decided to close yard.

Merits of Indoor and Outdoor Relief.

5. It is questionable if the workhouse as now generally constituted is a fair test of destitution. An applicant qualifying for admission, his age, character, and past history should be determined for guidance of "master" re classification. The best inmates should have as far as possible any advantages the House affords; pleasant rooms, access to grounds. The worst characters should not be admitted to concerts or permitted to attend annual treats. Only destitute old people whose home condition and past character are good should be eligible for outdoor relief (the respectable poor). The applicant, whose past conduct has been indifferent should be offered the workhouse, but not receive more comforts than experienced in own homes; if so, what inducement for thrift? Inadvisable with either parent suffering from hereditary disease (physical or mental). Frequently parents with phthisis have children whilst on relief, and father or mother discharged from asylum, cohabit, produce offspring, and return to asylum. Deserted cases should not be left optional with board, often collusion. In temporary illness of husband removed to workhouse infirmary, and wife and family assisted outdoor. Every case has peculiar features of its own. There are some cases that could not be met adequately outside of workhouse.

Classes applying for Relief.

6. The applicants for relief comprise persons of nearly all classes. Instances of people whose parents were leading manufacturers and trade in Northampton have through altered circumstances been compelled to seek assistance from the Poor Law authorities (exceptional cases). Inquiries prove beyond dispute existing conditions through careless indulgence. The ordinary applicants come from the lower working classes, rarely from skilled labourers. Referring to the shoe operative, proportionately much greater numbers come from the "Riveters" and "Finishers" whose standard of home life and self-respect are probably lower than any other branch of the shoe trade. General appearance to and from work compares unfavourably with the smarter dressed "clicker." Their predominance characterizes the houses and districts frequented. The better class shoe operative is prudent, careful, and thrifty, but without doubt the majority lack forethought, self-denial, entertain the opinion no stigma attached to pauperism, foregoing no pleasures, disregarding provision against inability to work through sickness or other causes. Inheriting pauperism through several generations.

The Causes of Pauperism.

7. The causes of pauperism are chiefly :—

- (a) Introduction of machinery. "Altered method of production."
- (b) Drunkenness.
- (c) Improvidence, gambling, social clubs, sport.

(d) Early and indiscreet marriages. "Physically, mentally, and financially unfit." "Domestic arrangements."

(e) Lack of filial respect, and support.

8. It appears obvious when early marriages are contracted and children born, the parents' limited wage, every year increased responsibilities, handicapped throughout life, no separation of sex, even at later period; loss of refinement and modesty. (1) Cases have been brought under observation of wives under 20 years (twenty) with husbands of similar age, parents of two children. (2) Father dropsical, wife's father died of consumption; six children under thirteen, one idiot in asylum, another physically deformed. (3) Father blind, weak mind, one boy nine years; idiot; babe, six months, born since receiving relief. (4) Father died in asylum, son married, receiving outdoor relief; sister single, two children. (5) Man, "paralysis," three children born during time of having relief.

9. The adults in a family do not entertain sufficient respect for parents: in majority of instances absolutely refuse to render any monetary assistance. Callous indifference. No degradation in association with Poor Law Relief.

10. The Board of Guardians (Northampton) as at present constituted includes five licensed victuallers. There are six town councillors. Since the altered method of election the social standing of candidates seeking election has much deteriorated. The best men will not permit themselves to be nominated; would be unsuccessful unless running on popular lines. Insufficient interest taken by inhabitants in election. Votes obtained from many people on verge of pauperism.

Administration of Relief.

11. Not sufficient discrimination is made in the characters of applicants. Extenuating circumstances are found for insobriety, carelessness. Persons seeking relief approach guardians, who frequently champion the case, possibly with an "eye on town council ballot box." Liberal relief is given. Destitution rarely tested by offering workhouse.

12. The Poor Law as administered in Northampton is not calculated to place a premium upon thrift. Heads of families who have made no provision against illness, indulged in every pleasure, on falling sick and seeking relief are frequently granted 10s., sometimes 12s. per week. The prudent, thoughtful man (benefit society) who probably at times seriously inconvenienced to pay club for an amount, in event of illness, not exceeding that allowed by board, has also to contribute his portion of the rates for the maintenance of that section of the community who are idle and improvident. Relief should not approach club allowance. Deserted and phthisical cases should not be allowed outdoor relief. The drunkard and convicted thief compelled to enter "house." Temporary illness of husband, man offered "house"; wife and family if necessary relieved outside.

13. Although politics do not enter so much in dealing with applicants for relief, they exist to a large extent in appointment of officers, and doubtless to some extent in contracts, selection of tradesmen for supplying house. The strongest political party returned, elect chairman from own body (elections are contested on party lines). The board is popularly elected and, individual town guardians endeavour to retain the popular public opinion of their particular ward. The small tradesmen complain, but the people generally are satisfied. A member recently retired admitted financial losses in consequence of not being considered sufficiently generous in obtaining relief for persons in the locality he principally dealt. A present member stated he was obliged to vote for relief for certain people or close his house.

14. Problems should be approached from non-party standpoint.

15. Administrators of the Poor Law should be independent of public opinion = commissioners.

APPENDIX No. CXI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY REV. T. J. BASS, VICAR OF ST. LAURENCE, BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. Any qualifications which I may have for giving you information arise out of my experience. I was a curate for four years in Scotland Road, Liverpool, one of the poorest and worst parts of that city. I was employed under the Archbishop of Canterbury and established missions in thirteen police courts in Kent and Surrey. I put men into the courts whose duty it was to assist the magistrates, in cases arising out of poverty and other causes. I was, for four years, a Secretary for the Church Pastoral Aid Society, which gave large grants to maintain clerical, lay, and women workers in the poorest parishes in England. I was supposed to know the condition of the parishes in which these agents worked. I have been for ten years the Vicar of St. Laurence parish, Birmingham, stated to be one of the poorest in England, where sweating and unskilled labour predominate. I am on the local Committee of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and other public bodies which have to deal with the poor. I have written on the subject of housing and the condition of the poor, and have travelled in the interest of these subjects in France, Belgium and Germany. I am the present Vicar of St. Laurence.

2. I have formed several well-defined opinions arising out of my experience as a worker for twenty years.

3. The qualification for persons who desire to serve on Boards of Guardians is too low; the result is that men who lack the capacity, are elected on such boards and a better class of man as a result will not serve. Men with the smallest amount of education possible and little or no business ability or experience, are elected, and have to deal with very large sums of money in the public interest, amounts often running into many thousands of pounds. No business firm could possibly succeed in this way. Great financial questions which affect the whole community are settled by some who have a very limited capacity. These remarks do not apply to all members of Boards of Guardians, but to many within my own knowledge.

4. The amount of labour involved in doing duty on a Board of Guardians is considerable. The workhouses are often in remote places, and there seems to be no corresponding advantage to a man serving as a member. I note that in Germany civil advantages are given, and I would recommend the idea which might be worked out somewhat after this fashion:—Freedom from jury duty, freedom from a percentage of rates, or some other simple method, and the names of Guardians who serve for five or seven years placed upon a Civic Roll of Honour.

5. Under the present system of the Poor Law, Boards of Guardians are constituted as judge and jury, and also either plaintiff or defendant in cases of irregularity at Workhouses. This method has grave objections, which I will illustrate by a case in point. Three or four years ago I made complaint to the Local Government Board that the master of the Aston Union refused to admit, I think, five children who were suffering from cruelty. They were accompanied by a police officer and an inspector from the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The ground of refusal was that the police officer did not bring an order from the Relieving Officer. The master was shown a copy of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, which specifies a workhouse as a place of safety for such children, and at eight o'clock on a winter's night the National Society was put to the expense of driving the children and the officers over four miles to the house of the Relieving Officer to get an order which was quite unnecessary. The Local Government Board referred the case to the Guardians, together with the copy of my statement. I presented myself at the workhouse at the inquiry with another gentleman. Practically I was plaintiff in the case; neither myself nor solicitor were allowed to produce evidence, or ask certain questions relative to the case. The Guardians asked such questions as they thought proper, and came to a conclusion.

6. I hold it to be entirely in the interests of the public that when a charge is brought against any workhouse official the plaintiff ought to be able to be present and state his case, either personally or through a solicitor, that he should be there as a matter of right, and that every scrap of evidence that could be produced should be given, and also that the Local Government Board ought not to accept the evidence given and the conclusions arrived at in any case until the plaintiff and defendant shall have every opportunity given, either of confirming their case or clearing themselves.

7. I further suggest to you that the chairman of any Board of Inquiry should have associated with him always a legal gentleman, fully qualified, and capable of stating and giving advice as to matters of law and evidence. If this was done, some real value might be attached to the conclusions of Boards of Guardians, but at the present time there is little public confidence, and especially amongst the poor, in the conclusions arrived at. No other body that I know of, who is responsible to the Government, is allowed to conduct their inquiries in such a loose manner. A decision ought to be a judicial decision.

8. Again, from what I have seen I believe it to be against the interests of justice for inquiries to be conducted in workhouses; every pauper within the House should feel his absolute freedom to speak, apart from the presence or otherwise of his master or overseer, and the public ought to have the right of being present, that they may know what is done and, more particularly, how it is done. Ratepayers as a body are heavily taxed, and no Court of Inquiry ought to be to them as a Star Chamber.

9. Workhouse Infirmaries.—It is a fact that the poor are willing to go into the General Hospitals, but they have a shrinking from going into the workhouse infirmary; there must be reasons for this? It is not my place now to recall matters which have happened, but it would greatly tend to a better management of these places if it was laid down as a rule that a medical man should be appointed to serve on the Infirmary Committee and to give the benefit of his experience. If such a man could not be found who would act in a voluntary manner, then he should receive some remuneration.

10. The Local Government Board should insist on a sufficient number of qualified nurses being appointed according to the number of the patients. Some time ago, at the Aston workhouse, there was one probationer night nurse to every fifty patients, and there were fourteen night cases where repeated dressings were needed during the night. It was stated before the Board that the doctors were obliged to give opiates, to prevent what were termed accidents. I have not got the evidence before me now, but I believe there is still room for great improvement there.

11. The lamentable stories I have heard from some of these places make it, to me, a matter of little wonder that the poor dread the infirmary.

12. Again, it is a fact unworthy of our civilisation and our education that consumptive cases are allowed to mix with the able-bodied, or persons suffering from ailments, or, in other words, that a body of guardians whose view of life is often very limited should be in a position to order things to be done which are altogether contrary to medical and sanitary science. The supervision of the Local Government Board at the present time is much too limited, and more medical inspectors are needed who should pay surprise visits to the infirmaries.

13. I have frequently found that where surprise visits are paid to workhouses, the officials get wind of the fact beforehand and the whole effect of the visit is frustrated. No one but the inspector should know about a contemplated visit. He should be compelled under penalty not to divulge his movements directly or indirectly.

14. The duty of guardians should be to look after the poor and the poor only. The present system, whereby the office of Registrar of Births, Deaths and Marriages is left in the hands of Boards of Guardians, is most objectionable. Cases have been known where the office has been filled by the Guardians putting in workhouse officials; it is sometimes an easy way of shelving a man. There are other ways of securing much better appointments. It is very questionable whether, under the present system of appointment, the best men are got for the work.

15. As to the workhouse proper, there is a dread of it in the minds of the poor. Men who have lived honest and respectable lives, and in their declining years are obliged to seek the workhouse, shudder at the thought of being obliged to associate with those who have lived dissolute and disreputable lives. In all justice they ought not to be equally treated and compelled to consort together, yet the present system metes out the same conditions to each equally. The result is that the workhouse has had a stigma attached to it which is deplorable.

16. The first year I was vicar of this parish I saw fourteen deaths from common starvation. I do not say that they were registered as such, but they certainly died from cold, hunger and exposure—that was the primary cause. The people would not go into the workhouse. Had they been offered almshouses they would have gone in, because there is not the stigma attached to the almshouse there is to the workhouse.

17. I suggest that workhouses be divided into two sorts, as in Germany; one for those of good character, called by some other name than a workhouse; the other a house where the wastrel, the criminal and the vicious shall be associated with people of their own class, put on a different diet and given different work to do. If shame is to be associated in the public mind with rate-built institutions, let it be with these. It is a sad truth that in England "Virtue has not its own reward" in the matter of Poor Law. "Nor does Justice give to everyone his own."

18. As to outdoor relief, some boards of guardians make it a rule not to help with outdoor relief wives and families where the husband is in gaol. I have known cases where the wife and family have striven to maintain the home, and in the end have been obliged to go into the workhouse. When the man came out of gaol his home was gone and his chance of reformation very much lessened. I have known cases where, under such circumstances, men have, in desperation, again committed crime. Further comment on this is needless. I believe the home life of England to be invaluable. When a man loses his home he loses everything.

19. There is a tendency, where possible, to refuse outdoor relief to widows and children. This I have seen to work out badly. Where a woman keeps herself respectable and tries to maintain her children and to bring up a healthy progeny, the State ought to assist her with outdoor relief. When the State refuses this, the women and children are compelled often to do sweating work at a sweating wage to maintain life. The Guardians all unconsciously work into the hands of sweating employers to the detriment of a living wage. The result is sickness, physical degeneration, and sometimes crime. I have known women of this sort, pure and honourable, who in order to provide for their children have either become immoral or allowed their homes to become bawdy houses. Moreover, it is well known that it costs more to maintain a widow and her family in the workhouse than to keep them going by outdoor relief.

20. I do not think it will ever be possible to entirely substitute charity for outdoor relief.

21. Overseers of the Poor.—The magistrates now appoint these yearly, March 25th, on the nomination of the vestry of the parish. The result often is the same men are appointed, sometimes for fifteen years consecutively and they come to regard it as a life office. In my opinion no overseer ought to be allowed to serve more than a year, and then two years ought to elapse before he could be again nominated; this would give fresh life and vigor to the overseership. Moreover, the clerk to the magistrates should be authorised to advertise the vacant overseers positions, receive nominations from not less than five ratepayers, present these nominations to the magistrates and let the magistrates appoint from the nomination lists. The advertising should be effected three weeks before the appointments, and the advertisements should run for a full week in all the local papers. According to present custom ratepayers have little or no voice in appointments. Vestry meetings are called at inconvenient times, few attend. There should be a wider nomination.

APPENDIX No. CXII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. GEORGE BASTARD, RELIEVING OFFICER, LEICESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. Social.—Ample provision made, but I think seldom taken advantage of by the younger portion of those persons who have recourse to the guardians for out-relief.

2. Industrial.—Too much boy and girl labour, also married women, to be good for the town. Men in the prime of life are at a discount in some trades.

3. Great care should be exercised in the giving of out-relief, and where parents have been known to have been improvident and of drinking habits, indoor orders would be best, both in the interests of the people and the town.

4. Deserted women should (except in very exceptional cases) be always given orders for the House.

5. In my experience it has happened, when proving cases before a bench of magistrates, that the parties were not married (this, of course, could be got over by certificates, which is now done), but even then it so often happens that the women are in collusion with their husbands, who are sending them money at the same time as they are in receipt of relief. I could give from my own experience and that of other officers who have had such cases.

6. The classes of persons applying for relief are chiefly widows with families, aged persons with no one to help them, a percentage who never tried to make provision, but spent all as they obtained it.

7. The chief causes of pauperism are (a) that many poor persons have never had an opportunity to save for old age; (b) periods of bad trade; (c) displacement by machinery; (d) improvidence; and (e) the reluctance of sons and daughters to rise to their responsibilities towards their aged parents.

8. The classes of persons seeking election as guardians are married and single women, retired tradesmen, and Labour representatives.

9. The following is the method of administering relief in this union. Persons seeking out-relief come to the relieving officer, who takes particulars of age, residence, and those liable by law to help, visits their home, makes due enquiry into character and previous habits of life. Applicant then meets committee, when relieving officer gives his report and the committee decide what shall be done. Should outdoor relief be given, relieving officer pays weekly the amount ordered, making frequent visits and instantly reporting any irregularity found or any improved circumstances found.

10. The only suggestions for reform that I make are that guardians, in my judgment, should not take part in the granting of out-relief when it is to their own tenants, as it lends itself to what is not desirable.

11. I also think that in large unions a lady officer (one with tact) may be very useful in maternity cases and with feeble-minded girls.

APPENDIX No. CXIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. ROBERT H. BEST, MEMBER OF BIRMINGHAM DISTRESS COMMITTEE; CHAIRMAN OF THE WEST DIVISION OF THE CITY OF BIRMINGHAM AID SOCIETY; PRESIDENT OF THE NELSON STREET SUNDAY MORNING ADULT SCHOOL; CHAIRMAN OF A MANUFACTURING COMPANY; CHAIRMAN OF THE "MASTERS' TRADE ASSOCIATION AND CONCILIATION BOARD."

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. For the last forty years I have travelled regularly in Germany and have been impressed with the greater progress made in Germany than in this country during a similar period. I am not an expert in Poor Law administration, but hold views which are shared by large numbers of my fellow-citizens, and which answer many of the questions contained in your schedule.

Statements of Social Conditions contained in Reports: "The Brassworkers of Berlin and of Birmingham" and "The City of Birmingham Aid Society."

2. The facts upon which I have based those opinions are contained in the Report: "A Comparison; the Brassworkers of Berlin and of Birmingham," and my pamphlet, "The City of Birmingham Aid Society," which I beg to hand you per same post, and in which the passages which bear upon your questions are marked with blue pencil.

Pauperism and Unemployment.

3. With regard to the cause of pauperism and unemployment, one very important point is omitted from the Report, "The Brassworkers," in consequence of its having become a political question, viz., the question of free imports.

Free Trade and Protection.

4. In my opinion, a discriminating protection of the industries of this country is essential to the welfare of its workpeople. It is generally held that our working classes are suffering from an excessive supply of unskilled workmen. The remedy usually recommended for this is to educate youths and apprentices in secondary and technical schools, but, in my opinion, occupation for them in skilled handicrafts during their working time is of even more importance than the technical knowledge imparted to them during their spare time; the two, theory and practice are essential, and for this purpose the skilled handicraft trades must be preserved for the workpeople to practice in. From my experience as a manufacturer, I do not think that technical schools can in themselves create sufficient employment.

The Weak Spot in the Elberfeld System of Poor Relief.

5. With respect to my pamphlet: "The City of Birmingham Aid Society," and the description of the Berlin Armenpflegen, a word of caution is necessary. It was written with the object of stimulating Birmingham citizens to action by showing up in a rosy light some of the social conditions of Berlin; the report is quite true in the sense of a comparison, but for your guidance it is right to say that Dr. Muensterberg, the President of the Berlin Poor Law Board, does not share my rosy view of their conditions. On December 15th, 1906, he wrote me re my pamphlet:—

"As I have already said to you on a former occasion, your conception of our Berlin conditions is much too favourable. It is true that an ideal and a task is held up for our helpers in the manner you have represented. Unfortunately, however, this task is far from fulfilled in the extent which is necessary for a practical care of the poor. With this limitation I have no hesitation in confirming your report of it."

6. I am aware that Dr. Muensterberg has a difficulty in obtaining the services of a sufficient number of helpers of the right sort. I would therefore recommend the Commission to take the opinion of an expert like Dr. Muensterberg, and that he be either invited to come over and give evidence in London, or that certain questions should be formulated, and a representative appointed to visit him in Berlin, and obtain answers on the spot.

7. Hamburg is a city which is particularly worthy of examination because in Dr. Muensterberg's opinion, it is administering the Elberfeld system of Poor Law relief on model lines.

The Danish System of Poor Law Relief.

8. The Danish system of Poor Law relief, as described by Miss Edith Sellers is, I presume, familiar to the Commission. It seems particularly worthy of investigation on the spot, because according to Miss Edith Sellers, the principle of classification and discrimination has been developed in Denmark still further than in Germany, and with correspondingly better results. As will be seen from Miss Sellers' description, the relief is divided into five classes, besides that for old-age relief and for children.

9. I do not believe it is practicable to substitute charity for out-relief, but think that help for the respectable deserving poor should be found by charitable persons. I hold that a large amount of the present poverty is due to the social conditions under which the working classes live.

10. The rich should maintain those poor persons of unblemished character who are in need through no fault of their own; they should be helped from charitable sources without any stigma or penalty being attached to it.

11. Those whose character is not unimpeachable should be helped by outdoor relief with disenfranchisement.

12. The thriftless and lazy should go into indoor institutions for supervision with powers over their personal liberty.

13. The drunken and vicious should be confined in an institution of a penal nature, submitting to powers over their personal liberty.

14. The old and feeble should be cared for in institutions divided into three grades of character.

15. The aged of good character should be pensioned by the community.

Care of Children.

16. I am of opinion that the care of the children is the crux of the future situation. The provisions made for them and the greater expenditure in this direction by Germany and Denmark, are worthy of the most careful examination. For this purpose investigation in Germany and Denmark will naturally be the method adopted by the Commission.

17. I enclose herewith cutting from the Birmingham Daily Mail, January 29th, re Floodgate Street Council School children, containing definite figures. (See Appendix No. CXIII. (A).)

18. I look upon free breakfasts, and such societies as the "Prevention of Cruelty to Children, etc.," as being palliatives, and incapable of reaching the root of the evil.

19. The working class audiences that I have had the opportunity of addressing, and also numbers of individuals I have consulted, would undoubtedly approve of the children being taken out of the charge of brutal, immoral and neglectful parents, compelling the parents to support them, and if necessary to confine the parents in a penal establishment.

The Personnel of Guardians.

20. You will, I think, have a difficulty in obtaining faithful replies with regard to the personnel of our guardians unless such replies be treated as confidential communications. It is, I think, common knowledge that the method under which guardians of the poor are elected does not tend to bring forward those citizens who are best fitted and competent to administer such an important institution. The appointment by the municipality of a certain number of guardians to represent them who would at the same time be members of the City Aid Society or of Charitable Organisations, would be an assistance in bringing about more co-operative work.

Greater Co-operation of Existing Agencies.

21. I strongly hold that one important aim of the Commission should be to bring about a greater co-operation of the existing agencies for helping the poor.

The Registry.

22. A joint registry of the poor of the city in one building is, I think, of primary importance. In this registry, the records from all sources, police, guardians of the poor, City Aid, Distress Committee, Charity Organisation, religious and charitable bodies, should accumulate and provide that information which is essential before it is possible to efficiently discriminate between the poor of good and bad character.

Charitable or Municipal Hospitals.

23. As indicated in my Report, I have no doubt that the charities in Birmingham, such as the hospitals, fail in their work in comparison with the municipal charities in Berlin. The working classes have to go from one subscribers' house to another begging Hospital notes and have a constant difficulty in obtaining them, particularly in-patient notes. In comparison with the Berlin municipal hospitals, patients are hurried out to make room for those who are waiting their turn to come in. The out-patients are too numerous for the doctors to prescribe for efficiently. The diet, cleanliness and appointments are inferior to the Berlin hospitals. The demand upon the time of the subscribers in replying to applications for hospital notes is considerable, and in one case I am obliged to subscribe anonymously in order to avoid the numerous applications for notes which I am unable to grant.

APPENDIX No. CXIII. (A).

(Paper handed in by Mr. R. H. Best, Birmingham.)

BIRMINGHAM'S STARVING CHILDREN.

SIR,—Having seen the special article, "Birmingham's Starving Children," in your issue of Monday, I should like to give a few facts and figures connected with the subject, for the perusal of those, and I believe there are many, who think that the needs of the destitute children are met by existing agencies. Since the work of feeding the hungry scholars was transferred from voluntary agencies to the guardians of the Poor the destitute children of Birmingham have been immeasurably worse off. Up till Christmas, 1905, nearly all cases, if not quite all, were dealt with either through the generosity of Mr. G. Hookham, or the Free Dinner Society, the former providing free breakfasts and the latter free dinners, the children being at liberty to attend both meals if they so desired. Now what is the condition of affairs? On Thursday last, with the thermometer standing about 5 degrees below freezing point, I found twenty-seven children who had had no dinner, and 159 others had had so little that they would have been glad to go to the soup kitchen if it had been open. Yesterday (Monday, a day when food is, as a rule, more plentiful) the numbers were 29 and 128, and this in a school of less than 500 scholars. Prior to Christmas, 1905, we fed every morning 180 scholars and sent from 100 to 150 to dinner at the soup kitchen. Now, thanks to Mr. Hookham's kindness, we feed seventy-one fatherless and deserted children at breakfast; the remainder, about 100, who had breakfast and the larger number who had dinners, have to do the best they can, which, in some cases, means going without. In clothing, too, the children are equally destitute. I lately sent a list to the Secretary of the Police-Aided Association of 160 names of children whose boots and clothing were practically useless. I could easily have made the number 250, but being afraid of asking for too much, sent only the very worst cases. So far about thirty children have been provided with a complete outfit, and sixty-five others with boots and stockings, partly from the Mail fund and partly from the Police-Aided Association, so that at present there are nearly 100 children in this school whose boots are worse than useless, and whose "tattered and torn" clothing is such as to make them pitiable sights. These, Sir, are the bare facts, which your readers may ponder. Into the question of whose is the fault and whose the duty to alleviate the suffering I do not propose to enter. I see your special contributor will shortly deal with remedies, and as a schoolmaster of twelve years' experience among the "submerged tenth" of this great city I shall anxiously await his second contribution.—Yours, etc.,

T. W. COOPER,
Headmaster.

APPENDIX No. CXIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE* BY MR. J. T. BESTON, MEMBER OF THE BIRMINGHAM BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I have for twelve years been a member of the Board of Guardians for St. Stephen's Ward in the parish of Birmingham and have also for fifteen years acted as honorary secretary for the North Birmingham Relief Fund, a voluntary organisation which dealt with cases of temporary distress arising from sickness or shortness of employment and which is now merged into the City of Birmingham Aid Society. In response to your enquiries I have to observe:—

2. The special peculiarity of the social and industrial condition of the parish of Birmingham appears to me to be that the great majority of the actual residents in the parish are either unskilled labourers or workmen employed in trades which on the average pay very low wages, and that the bulk of the middle class, i.e., manufacturers and small masters who have their works in the parish as well as the more highly skilled and better paid artisans, prefer to reside in some other part of the city or in the suburbs such

* Owing to the death of Mr. Beston, this statement of evidence has not been revised.

as Handsworth, Moseley, King's Heath or Yardley, the result being that in the parish of Birmingham we have an excessive number of households where poverty is the normal condition—and the demand for Poor Law relief is out of all proportion in comparison with the other portion of the city and suburbs. Of the 10,000 houses in the Northern Division of the City (St. George's, St. Stephen's and St. Mary's Wards) there are probably not more than 200 used exclusively as dwelling houses which are rated at more than £12 per annum.

3. The guardians for the parish of Birmingham have during the past twenty-five years made various successful experiments in Poor Law administration, including:—

(a) The provision of cottage homes for about 450 children at Marston Green, about six miles away under the care of a superintendent, and in homes for about twenty children in the charge of foster parents—these homes are at present only occupied by the children of Protestants—the Catholic children being sent to the certified schools provided by the Catholic community.

(b) The provision of an infirmary for all destitute cases suffering from sickness, disease or accident, and at present also providing for epileptic cases and the milder forms of dementia or idiocy.

(c) And more recently the provision of a home in the parish itself for children (boys and girls) who are only temporarily in care of the guardians, but whom they desire to keep from association with the workhouse itself.

(d) While in conjunction with the adjacent unions of Aston and King's Norton the Birmingham Board are now developing a scheme for the separate treatment of the epileptics in their charge at a joint Poor Law establishment situate in the King's Norton district.

4. There have also been experiments in the workhouse itself in the creation of a "merit" class, giving some special privileges to all the inmates whose character and behaviour justify their inclusion in this category, while experiments in other directions, such as baking—by which all the bread used for the workhouse, infirmary, and the outdoor poor is provided—the making of gas used for lighting the workhouse and infirmary, and the pumping of the water used in the two establishments, which experiments have somewhat reduced the cost, and found employment for a number of the inmates of the workhouse.

5. In my opinion it is desirable, when aged persons of good character have to ask for assistance from the rates, that it should be given in the form of out-relief, provided the applicants are in sufficiently good health to look after themselves or have friends or relatives who will take an interest in them, and in the case of widows with young children it appears to me that, if the mother is of good character, honest, sober and industrious, it is best to leave the children in her care, granting such out-relief in money and kind as will adequately meet the necessities of each individual case, and encouraging the mother to have the children taught such trade or business as will be for their permanent benefit, but in the cases of aged persons of indifferent or bad character, and in the cases of children whose mothers are in the judgment of the guardians, either incompetent to manage their children or are known to be lazy, drunken, dishonest or immoral, it is in my opinion the duty of the guardians to send such aged persons to the workhouse and to place the children of such widows in the cottage homes or certified schools.

6. In addition to the classes specified above as applicants there are occasionally applications from young people between twenty and forty years who have either from lack of means or lack of will neglected to make any provision against sickness by joining a friendly society, or to meet the expenses attending the birth of their children. It appears to me that in all such cases careful investigation as to means should be made and, if possible, the recipient of such relief should be compelled to repay the value of the assistance given.

7. The causes of pauperism are somewhat difficult to define, but in my experience only a very small percentage of the applications for assistance from the rates arise from the unavoidable misfortune of the applicants or from causes beyond their control; in my judgment the main causes of pauperism are three:—

(a) Lack of thrift and the absence of any serious attempt to make provision for shortness of employment, sickness or old age.

(b) The habit of excessive drinking and consequent loss of character and employment.

(c) The desire of sons and daughters to evade the responsibility of maintaining their parents when past work and place this burden upon the community at large.

8. In making investigation of the antecedents of the inmates of the workhouse and of those persons receiving out-relief I seldom find the persons assisted have been members of any trade union or friendly society, or connected with any adult school or associated with any organisation for the promotion of thrift.

9. The persons usually selected as guardians in Birmingham and the district are mostly of the middle class, with some ladies and working-men representatives. Of the thirty-six guardians for the parish of Birmingham five are ladies, and five, including the present Lord Mayor, are also members of the city council. The lady members have given specially valuable service in connection with the training of the children at the Marston Green Homes. The lying-in wards and the general administration of the workhouse and infirmary, and while sometimes differing as to the details, the whole of the members, both men and women, have in my opinion an earnest desire to promote the comfort and increase the happiness of those persons who come under their care—and in doing this to have due regard to the efficient and economical working of the various institutions in their charge.

10. The administration of relief in the parish of Birmingham is dealt with by the various committees appointed by the guardians, and their proposals are as a rule sanctioned and approved by the whole board.

11. The Workhouse Committee deals with the management of the workhouse and the Summer Hill Home for in-and-out children, and also looks after the children in the certified Catholic schools.

12. The Infirmary Committee is responsible for the effective administration of the infirmary—including at present the epileptics—and also for the lying-in ward.

13. The Marston Green Homes Committee has control of all the arrangements for the feeding, clothing, educating and training of the children sent to the homes.

14. Out-relief is administered by four District Relief Committees and is supervised by a Central Out-relief Committee which includes members of the district committees and which take charge of relief given through other unions and public institutions, and is responsible for the medical out-relief and for the vaccination arrangements in connection with the parish, while it has for the past year been responsible for the breakfasts provided under the School Children's Order of the Local Government Board.

15. The Stores Committee deals exclusively with the purchase of provisions and necessaries, while the Finance Committee takes the oversight of all receipts and payments on behalf of the guardians and has the general administration of the parish offices in its care.

16. All questions of removal and settlement are dealt with by the removal committee.

With regard to reforms, briefly my suggestions would be:—

(a) That special pensions should be provided for the deserving poor.

(b) That the guardians should have fuller powers in dealing with cases needing help through temporary lack of employment.

(c) That they should have power to detain and, if necessary, to punish habitual tramps and vagrants. Locally:—

(d) That the whole city and suburbs of Birmingham should be formed into one union for Poor Law purposes.

(e) That such matters as vaccination should be transferred to the health authority.

APPENDIX No. CXV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. ISAAC BRADLEY, CORONER FOR BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I am fifty-four years of age. I was born in Birmingham, and have lived there all my life. I am by profession a solicitor, have had long and intimate experience of the public life of the city, have been coroner since 1897, and am a city magistrate. I am secretary of a large Nonconformist church, and am in various ways in daily contact with every grade of the middle, artisan, and labouring classes.

Charities and Voluntary Effort.

2. As to the operations and effects of local charities, I enclose a summary* of the medical charities of the city in the form of a booklet placed in the pews of all places of worship at the last Hospital Sunday collections. We have no other large charities.

3. I direct attention particularly to the statement on the outside cover that the total cases treated during 1905 was over 256,000. That number is equal to half the population of the city, and it is certain that if so many patients received relief in a single year, a much larger proportion than half of our people consider themselves entitled to resort to charity for their medical treatment. It is equally certain that a very large proportion of the patients affected by quite minor ailments could afford to engage private medical attendance.

4. Taking as an example the General Hospital (the largest we have), on pp. 4 and 5, I should say that the 5,283 in-patients were probably all proper cases for hospital treatment, for the reason, if for no other, that the resources of the institution do not permit the relief of in-patients in any but urgent and special cases. But of the 61,652 out-patients, I am convinced from long observation that the larger half of them were not proper cases for charitable relief.

5. One great reason for this condition of things is that under a Hospital Saturday Collection Scheme (secretary, Mr. W. S. Aston, Newhall Street) the artisans of the city contribute £10,000 a year in various proportions to the various institutions, raised by weekly contributions of a 1d. each collected in the factories throughout the year. While the committee of that scheme state plainly in their literature that these contributions are charitable gifts, and not to be regarded as entitling the subscribers to any return, the subscribers do in fact consider that they are contributions in the nature of payments to a provident scheme, and that each subscriber is entitled to resort to any of the charities for medical aid needed by himself or any of his family.

6. An illustration is afforded by the fact that a certain number of the factories allocate part or all of their contributions to "Ticket" hospitals, i.e., those which for each subscription issue to the contributor so many tickets entitling the holder to treatment. Especially is this the case with regard to the General Dispensary (p. 7) which is the only institution (except Lying-in Charity and District Nursing Association) which visits patients at their homes.

7. The question of hospital abuse is perhaps not of itself within the province of the Commission, but it has some bearing on the large questions under consideration which depend largely on the attitude of mind of the mass of the people.

8. As to the respective effects of charity and out-relief, the ordinary man apparently has no scruple in availing himself of a charity, and only rarely feels any sense of obligation. In the case of out-relief he also feels under no obligation, but regards it as carrying with it some taint of shame or discredit, although it may be argued that he has more right to the latter than the former.

9. With regard to the questions of co-operation between charity and the Poor Law, the tendency of my mind is strongly towards the view that charity and the Poor Law must inevitably work on diverse lines and by different methods unless, indeed, so radical an alteration of principle were made in our existing Poor Law as to eliminate the right of every destitute person to relief.

10. While I subscribe annually to a number of public charities I give more money to, and derive infinitely more satisfaction from a number of cases of individual need which I personally know, and help by small pensions or otherwise.

11. A wise charity rather bases itself on considerations of desert, and is more elastic and varied in its method. In a case which we fully know and understand we may feel warranted in giving, for instance, a much larger sum for present emergency and altogether adapting our action to particular circumstances. But guardians and others administering public funds collected by force of law are in the position of trustees, and are bound to adopt strict rules of conduct. They cannot, in the nature of things, know under present circumstances everything about everybody, and are therefore of necessity on their guard at every moment against imposture. Nor are they able, even where they have the fullest knowledge, to discriminate between "deserving" and "undeserving" cases to the same extent as private charity may. They must work by rule, and to confer a very large freedom in the dispensation of public money would lead to trouble, either in the way of extravagance, or of invidious dispute on particular cases. Personally, therefore, I see much difficulty in mingling charity and the Poor Law on present lines.

12. The attention of the Commission will probably be directed to the Aid Associations of this city now being consolidated (Chairman, Sir Hallowell Rogers), whose work is eminently deserving of consideration. They have in view the distribution of voluntary gifts to deserving cases of emergency, rather than to the hopeless cases of a permanent kind, and with a very limited income have achieved excellent results.

13. The question of the possibility of substituting charity for out-relief seems to point to something like the French Bureaux de Bienfaisance, which receive moneys from many sources, voluntary contributions, legacies, proceeds of certain small taxes, etc., and dispense them with, as I judge, a very full personal knowledge. They are roughly like the above Aid Associations, but are legally constituted, and receive some public money. This plan is worth careful attention, but (like every country except our own) they do not admit an absolute right to relief simply on the ground of destitution. Indeed I believe that a few communes have no bureau at all.

14. The Commission have probably already before them a great mass of evidence on the questions which I have alluded to, so that it would approach impertinence for me to dwell upon them, namely: (a) Discrimination between "deserving" and "undeserving," and (b) elasticity in the way of varying forms and degrees of relief.

15. Unless the whole basis were altered, I have not been able to persuade myself that charity and rate-relief can mix, or that charity can be made to supersede out-relief.

Friendly, etc., Societies.

16. Friendly societies can, without doubt, provide for old age pensions for their members on the simple condition that the members will subscribe the cost. But, being voluntary bodies, they could not go outside their own membership.

17. The great difficulty is that there is an increasing unwillingness to pay for a benefit. Many were discouraged (I certainly was) by the popular reception of Mr. Chamberlain's suggestion for pensions based on the payment by the individual of a single sum of £5 in early manhood, the State adding whatever might be necessary. Some part of the opposition to his proposal was no doubt "political"; but it was distressing to notice, behind that, the absolute refusal to pay anything. Unfortunately many public persons, of all parties, talk on platforms in a way which leads the unthinking and unlettered man to suppose that it is possible by some legislative means either to obtain something for nothing at all, or to obtain it at the expense of somebody else. The consequence, lamentable to a degree, is that independence and self-help are not popular, and I, at least, discern a deterioration of the spirit of our people even within the period of my own life. With higher wages there is no greater disposition towards providence or self-help.

* Not printed.

18. With regard to the effect on friendly societies of free medical relief, voluntary hospitals, State system of old-age pension and freely given out-relief, I think all these measures militate against the extension of friendly societies. I have the highest regard for the work of such societies, and deeply regret to have to record such an opinion.

19. The question of co-operation between friendly societies and hospitals appears again to involve an intermixture of self-help and charity which of necessity weakens the idea of self-help, because the mind naturally prefers the cheapest way of obtaining what is desired.

20. As regards the Friendly Societies Acts I am satisfied with them. They proceed on what I regard as the best possible principle, viz., to encourage and countenance voluntary associations for thrift and providence and not to interfere actively with their general management except to insist on orderly account keeping and the publication of the means of knowledge of their position, and to afford remedies for members where the society is misconducted or unable to meet its engagements.

21. I have no comparative figures as to the increase of these societies, but my conviction from general observation is that friendly and thrift societies do not increase as they did. I refer to my paragraph 17 above.

22. I do not recall in my coronership of ten years any death from starvation being brought before me. Of course I see much poverty, the larger part of which is so obviously self-caused and actually invited by past conduct that it is only occasionally I feel called upon to give aid from my poor-box. Two or three times a year I get (out of about 1,100 deaths of all sorts reported to me) a case where death is caused or accelerated by self-neglect and exposure. But practically in no case have I found any such death which could be ascribed to defect in the Poor Law.

23. It is right to add that I consider the board of guardians of this city an exceptionally able body. No doubt there are some members (as in all public bodies) less efficient than others; but the public spirit of the city is high; there is no corruption or suspicion of it; and certainly one-third of the board are men not only of first-class standing and probity, but experts in Poor Law administration. These men are known and esteemed, and they give a backbone and a guiding strength which I fear may be lacking in some parts of the country.

APPENDIX No. CXVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE ON MEDICAL ASSISTANCE OF THE POOR BY C. F. BRYAN, M.R.C.S., ENG., L.S.A., LOND., MEDICAL OFFICER TO THE LEICESTER UNION WORKHOUSE; CERTIFYING SURGEON UNDER THE FACTORY ACTS SINCE 1889; MEMBER OF THE TOWN COUNCIL SINCE NOVEMBER, 1899; PRESIDENT OF THE LEICESTER MEDICAL SOCIETY, 1892-94.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

Medical Assistance of the Poor.

1. The Sanitary Committee of the Town Council have set apart some wards for the treatment of phthisis in its earlier stages and to educate the poor in order that they may continue the fresh-air treatment in their own homes.

2. They also have now, besides the male inspectors, two female inspectors whose duty it is to visit the homes of the poor and instruct them in hygiene and the rearing of infants, etc. They also give lectures to the mothers and distribute leaflets among the poor.

3. A milk depot for partially sterilised milk has been started and is now doing a good work.

4. A Health Society has lately been started to work in unison with the Sanitary Committee.

5. There are six parish medical officers, against whom there is a feeling amongst the poor which in my opinion would be obviated by the guardians dispensing all medicine and finding all medical and surgical appliances.

6. There is the North Evington Poor Law Infirmary, with one consulting medical officer and two resident medical officers. This contains 500 beds and is nearly full. The workhouse also, where cases are treated which are not serious enough for hospital treatment. Also Lock wards.

7. The chief medical charities are the general infirmary and out-patient department. Two dispensaries. Odd-fellows and Foresters Society and many sick clubs; altogether these administer to the needs of about 60,000 persons.

8. Many of those who seek relief are of a better class poor, and I regret to say that many who can well afford to pay for medical advice, etc., make use of these institutions and many of the poor instead of joining these societies wait until they are ill and then get recommendations from subscribers.

9. There is no doubt that the societies do overlap to a certain extent, but the question of hospital reform is now being freely discussed by the medical societies with a view to putting a stop to the abuse of these charities, etc.

10. The transference to one authority of the whole work of medical assistance might certainly be made in the case of the very poor, either to the Poor Law or the sanitary authority.

11. I certainly think that it would be better for all concerned if the guardians supplied all medicines and appliances to their medical officers.

Poor Law Administration.

12. The Cottage Homes situated at Countesthorpe have now been used for many years and in my opinion they have been beneficial in the bringing up of children and educating them, also in getting those old enough into situations.

13. Scattered Homes are now being tried here, but I think to a great extent fail in their object on account of the children so frequently going in and out, and this class, even of children which mingle together, put a stop to the very work which these homes were intended to carry out by keeping children from the workhouse taint, for many of them belong to the criminal class, thereby having a very bad influence on the others.

14. The classification of paupers in the workhouse seems to work well, although it is rather difficult to carry out effectually.

15. The removal of the workhouse infirmary two miles away from the workhouse is not advantageous and has many drawbacks.

16. There is no doubt that indoor relief is the better for those that are sick. In the case of outdoor relief we never can be sure that the patient gets the extras, etc., which are ordered, and the surroundings of those that are ill tend to make the case of much longer duration and in many instances I believe is the cause of non-recovery.

17. The class of persons applying for relief includes old people, widows with families, people of bad character, young men and women who, most probably through their own fault, fail to keep any situation. Those who are out of work and the class, of whom I am sorry to say there are many, who dislike work of any description. Some also, who have become impoverished through no fault of their own.

18. Causes of pauperism are, improvidence, too early marriages, drink, betting, etc., and the fight against capitalism, in which there may be increase of wage, but which causes higher taxation thereby, driving manufacturers out of the town, where taxation is less and labour cheaper. Displacement of labour by machinery. Too much leniency shown to the habitual tramp and those who will not do any work.

19. Class of persons seeking election as guardians consists of a few independent gentlemen, tradesmen, and socialists. The latter are now trying to outnumber the others and get the whole power into their hands. If this should go on, trade will decline and pauperism increase.

20. The law certainly requires amending with regard to the certification of imbeciles, for no medical man can certify as a lunatic the general run of cases of epilepsy, yet they ought to be taken care of, and more discretionary power should be given to the medical officers in these cases, and in borderland cases.

APPENDIX No. CXVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MRS. CALVERLEY, MEMBER OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS, BRIXWORTH, NORTHAMPTON.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. My qualifications for being of use to the Commission are small. My husband has been Rector of Church Brampton for twenty-seven years, and we have resided there continuously during that period. Since the passing of the Local Government Act of 1894 I have been a Poor Law guardian of the Brixworth Board.

2. The Brixworth Union is almost entirely agricultural. The population is slowly diminishing. It numbered in 1891, 12,186, and in 1901, 11,829. There is a shoe factory in one village, Walgrave, and there the inhabitants are increasing. There is also a small pinafire factory at another village, Spratton, employing women and girls only.

3. From about 1872 to 1895 the Brixworth Board followed a policy of strict administration, with the result that the numbers in receipt of outdoor relief fell from 979 on January 1st, 1872, to eighteen on January 1st, 1895. The indoor paupers meantime had only increased from sixty-three to seventy-nine. The reform was very unpopular. The labouring classes felt themselves defrauded, and their view was largely shared by kind-hearted ratepayers. A few very determined members of the Board of Guardians, being fully persuaded of the wisdom of this policy, were able so far to influence the board as to secure its continuance, and, although many vague assertions of hardships were made, no case ever came to my knowledge in which outdoor relief would have satisfactorily removed the hardships.

4. Simultaneously with the strict Poor Law administration, the same men established and carried out a system of private charity by means of which effectual help was given to those who were suitable cases for such assistance. The opposition was gradually dying out, and the district had nearly accepted the change, when the Act of 1894 was passed. Persons now for the first time qualified for election, came forward loudly denouncing the system, and promising, if returned, to work for its destruction. The election of many new Guardians thus pledged to outdoor relief changed the majority on the board into a minority, and brought about the reversal of the policy. The effect has been that on January 1st, 1907, the indoor paupers numbered 101, and the outdoor 176. The cost of indoor maintenance and out-relief in the year ending Lady Day, 1895, was £938, while in that of 1906 it was £2,234.

5. I believe outdoor relief to be costly, to check the instinct of brotherly kindness, to discourage prudence and thrift, to weaken family ties, and to destroy the honourable independence of the working classes. The ground on which I base this opinion is the history of the past, and my own experience as stated in the preceding answer. Indoor relief by providing an adequate provision for destitution saves from the recklessness of despair, while its conditions generally prevent it from being attractive. These remarks do not apply to the workhouse infirmaries in London.

6. The knowledge that relief can be obtained in the workhouse does exercise a slight influence, and tends to check the too ready alms of the ill-informed public. Indoor relief is also beneficial in securing a safe shelter for the feeble in mind as well as body.

7. Most of the applicants for outdoor relief are worn-out labourers or their widows. In some cases the old people had been supported and cared for by children or other relations, but the grant of relief to a neighbour whose circumstances seemed no worse, had suggested an easy mode of increasing the income. I have myself heard this explanation given by an applicant in the board-room.

8. The applicants for indoor relief are mainly those infirm in mind or body, but at the present moment the workhouse shelters a good many deserted and neglected children. There are doubtless a few men in the house who ought to be, or at least might be, working outside, but none who could reasonably be described as able-bodied.

9. One chief cause of pauperism, I think, is the habit of the wage-earning class to live from week to week. Winter is forgotten in summertime, and old age arrives before any thought has been given to preparing for it. An expectation that all contingencies will be pleasantly provided for out of an inexhaustible fund—that is by outdoor relief—must tend to encourage this state of mind. The fact that there are to be found persons who in spite of this enervating influence do accept the burden of their own responsibility, and maintain their independence, suggests a hope that more bracing conditions would increase their number.

10. The persons seeking election as Guardians are chiefly farmers and tradesmen. The lower-class men who were elected by large majorities in the first enthusiasm of the new Act of 1894 have nearly all disappeared. Knowledge of the Poor Law or of its history is not reckoned as any qualification, and there is little evidence of its existence among the Guardians.

11. Relief is administered by the whole Board, "on the merits of the case," which means according to the composition of the Board on that particular day, and to the personal feeling of the Guardian for the parish to which the applicant belongs.

12. The reform most to be desired is a firmer enforcement on the part of the Local Government Board of the sound principles on which the reform of 1834 was based.

APPENDIX No. CXVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. H. CLARK, SECRETARY OF CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY AND EX-GUARDIAN, LEICESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I am the General Secretary of the above Society, with a turnover of upwards of half-a-million per annum in trade. I have for a time been a member of the Leicester Board of Guardians previous to the term expiring in March next.

2. The principal industries of Leicester are passing a transition from one method to another, thereby displacing a large amount of labour.

Poor Relief.

3. I should say that outdoor relief has a worse effect on the recipient than indoor relief.

4. It is mainly the thriftless who apply for relief.

5. The causes of pauperism are largely drink and the gambling spirit.

6. The class of persons seeking election as guardian are mainly people who have no direct obligation as rate-payers.

7. The administration of poor-relief in Leicester is much too loose.

Charities and Voluntary Effort.

8. The effect of charity and Poor Law out-relief on the recipients is to weaken the self-respect and destroy the desire for better things.

9. As to the possibility of extending the co-operation between charity and the Poor Law the recipients in the main do not seek to take advantage of what such means of help would give them.

Friendly, Co-operative and other Self-Help Societies.

10. I should say that it is impossible to provide old-age pensions by friendly societies.

11. The effect of extended free medical relief would be, I think, to take away all desire or incentive to provide for sickness.

12. I am of opinion that friendly and thrift societies are not progressing at the ratio that they were say ten years ago.

APPENDIX No. CXIX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. W. J. CLARKE, MISSIONARY IN CHARGE DOMESTIC MISSION, HURST STREET, BIRMINGHAM; AND HON. SECRETARY OF POLICE-AIDED ASSOCIATION FOR CLOTHING DESTITUTE CHILDREN, DISTRESSED MILITARY VETERANS' ASSOCIATION, OPEN-AIR COURT AND ALLEY CONCERTS ASSOCIATION, AND WALLIKER SOCIETY.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I beg to state that I have acted as Missionary in Charge of the Hurst Street Mission for twenty-one years, as hon. secretary of the Police-Aided Association for Clothing Destitute Children since its formation in 1893, as hon. secretary of the Distressed Military Veterans' Association since its formation in 1894, as hon. secretary to the Open-Air and Alley Concerts Association since its formation in 1898, and to the Walliker Society (for providing garden parties for poor aged people) since 1902.

2. I am of opinion that one of the most urgent and pressing of our local problems is the undoubted fact that thousands of poor children are attending our city's schools not only in a state of semi-starvation owing to insufficiency of food, but exposed also during the autumn and winter months to cruel suffering owing to insufficiency of clothing. I have not had much experience with respect to the feeding of children of school age, but as hon. secretary of the Police-Aided Association for Clothing Destitute Children (copy of the objects and methods of which I enclose),* which was formed in 1893, I have assisted in clothing upwards of 24,000 poor children. From the knowledge of the actual condition of the children thus gained, from the reports supplied by the police in recommending the cases to be dealt with (copy also of which I enclose)* and from the hundreds of communications I have received from school teachers in relation to this subject, I believe that in addition to the actual physical suffering these children are forced to undergo during the colder seasons of the year, their health is permanently undermined, often followed by illness, disease, and premature death in a much greater number of cases than is usually supposed.

* Not printed.

3. I am of opinion also that the number of children to whom this statement applies is so large that the situation cannot properly be relieved by private charity, and can be adequately dealt with only by the intervention of the State. It is of course difficult to estimate accurately the number of children in the city needing clothing and boots which their parents or guardians cannot, or do not, supply, but judging by the reports supplied by the police and the statements of school teachers, it cannot, I think, be fewer than from 12,000 to 13,000.

4. With respect to the causes of this state of things I have arrived at the conclusion that while much of it undoubtedly is due to the drunkenness, the idleness, and the thriftlessness of the parents of the children, this is not the case to anything like the extent which is commonly supposed; and that the privations of the parents which cause such terrible consequences to be visited upon the children are in the majority of cases their misfortune rather than their fault. However this may be, seeing that under any conceivable circumstances the children can only be regarded as the innocent and helpless victims of the sufferings they are forced to endure, and which ultimately inflict permanent and irremediable injury upon the State, if only out of regard for its own welfare the State should, I think, take the problem in hand.

5. With respect to the question of "Charities and Voluntary Effort" I am of opinion that the help given by the Police-Aided Association for Clothing Destitute Children has not had a pauperising effect upon the recipients by diminishing their self-respect, or by causing them to depend on outside help rather than on their own efforts for the clothing of their children ; and this is, I think, shown by the fact that the great majority of cases in which help is applied for several years in succession are those of widows struggling to support a young family as best they can, or those in which the breadwinner is a confirmed invalid, or has deserted his family.

6. With respect to the question of friendly, co-operative and other self-help societies, I believe a State system of old age pensions would have a good effect on friendly societies and would tend to foster rather than to destroy habits of thrift and self-help on the part of the people generally. This opinion is based on the belief that as things are, large numbers of people, seeing nothing before them in their old age but starvation or the workhouse, refuse to give up the little indulgences, the sacrifices of which would probably not suffice to prevent it ; whereas if they could rely at a certain age on a certain provision, however small, this would serve as an inducement to them to make every possible effort to add to that provision.

7. I am also emphatically of opinion, judging by cases which have during a long period of years come under my notice, that freely given and judiciously distributed poor law out-relief is infinitely preferable to Poor Law indoor relief, and would in most cases better serve both the material and the moral interests of the recipients, and would in the long run be far more economical to the State.

8. With respect to the problem of the unemployed it has sometimes occurred to me, judging by the results which have followed the co-operation of the police in the work of clothing destitute children, whether it might not be worth while to consider the question of establishing a labour bureau in connection with the police stations in all large centres of industry. Of course, it would be necessary to do this under conditions which would obviate the possibility of collision with trades unions. One great advantage resulting from an arrangement of this sort would be that the police would probably have at their disposal information which would enable them to distinguish readily between the genuinely unemployed and the unemployable.

APPENDIX No. CXX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY ALDERMAN RICHARD CLEAVER, J.P., EX-CHAIRMAN OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS. NORTHAMPTON.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. My connection with the Northampton Board of Guardians has extended over a period of nearly thirty years. I was chairman of the board for about ten or twelve years, retiring three years ago in consequence of increasing years and ill-health. I am now in my seventy-ninth year, and my answers to enclosed questions must therefore be taken as referring, as far as my experience goes, to the past rather than the present.

Poor Law.

2. Our union is partly rural, but in large measure urban. The town is a manufacturing one, the trade of which in late years has suffered from the introduction of machinery ; the building trade has also been greatly depressed ; these two facts largely account for the past and present state of pauperism in the town.

3. The only experiment of any importance has been the establishment of a stone-breaking yard, mainly for the unemployed. This, I think, has been a great failure, costly and giving no real satisfaction. The urban council are now giving employment—in my judgment the far better plan. The removal of the children from the House into homes seems to succeed.

4. The question of the respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief is in my judgment best answered by the wisdom and discretion of the board : both systems are necessary, but require great care in the administrative body.

5. I regret to say that pauperism is largely made up of persons whose forefathers have been on the board ; it seems to run in the blood ; there are many old people and young widows with children.

6. Drink and bad conduct do more to promote pauperism than other causes. Improvidence is another cause. Gambling is frequently the means of bringing men into low water and then to pauperism ; at the same time there are many well deserving cases.

7. The party element largely prevails, in my opinion, to the detriment of always making a wise choice of guardians. I know of no local board of any kind that requires more discretion in the choice of its members than the board of guardians. I could wish that the ratepayers exercised a more wise and considerate choice of the men and women they send. I have found the advantage of having one or two ladies on the board.

8. My idea as to the administration of relief was that every case should be dealt with on its own merits. A scale of relief has more than once been tried, with an invariable breakdown. Wisdom and knowledge on the board and you require no scale except of the most general character.

9. My views of the Poor Law as a whole is of a favourable character, but it is somewhat antiquated and requires modernising. The guardians should be treated less like children in leading strings. The advance in education and business capabilities should certainly give to men who must have a better knowledge of the circumstances of the business of the board than gentleman sitting at a distance greater choice in the appointment and dismissal of their officers than they now have ; the depriving of every recipient of relief of his voting power is a hard and cruel wrong, making it an apparent crime to receive relief.

10. I regard the old age pension as a difficult question in so far as administration is concerned ; the present scale of relief is now nearly doubled to old people, to what it was when I first knew the board. I have sometimes thought the remedy might lie in this direction.

Unemployment.

11. Of late the numbers of unemployed have reached to some four or five hundred men ; the class of men out of work is mainly made up of men over forty years of age in the shoe trade. Machinery only employs young men who are quick and active ; it also consists of many labourers and men in the building trades ; there is also a good sprinkling of loafers, etc. This state of things has now continued for a number of years. I fear this year it has increased and is in danger of becoming chronic unless some permanent opening is found for surplus labour on the land at home or abroad.

12. The effect of unemployment is to make many men who once were industrious men less anxious to have regular work ; they have become, I fear, in many cases demoralized.

13. The Unemployed Workmen Act did not come into operation during the time I was on the board or during the time I was on the council, but at best it can only be regarded as a stopgap remedy ; something more drastic will I feel sure have to be done by the Government to meet this very serious state of things.

APPENDIX NO. CXXI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. HOWARD JAMES COLLINS, F.S.S., F.C.I.S., HOUSE GOVERNOR AND SECRETARY OF THE GENERAL HOSPITAL, BIRMINGHAM; FORMERLY SECRETARY AND HOUSE STEWARD OF THE NORFOLK AND NORWICH HOSPITAL, NORWICH; SECRETARY OF THE HOSPITALS ASSOCIATION, LONDON; ASSISTANT SECRETARY AND ACCOUNTANT OF LONDON LOCK HOSPITAL AND ASYLUM, ETC.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. The Sanitary Authority, i.e., the Health Committee of the city council, deal with all notifiable infectious diseases and also receive in their hospitals typhoid and diphtheria cases.

The Poor Law—The board of guardians have a work-house infirmary at Spring Hill to which pauper cases, chargeable to the parish of Birmingham, are admitted on order of relieving officers.

There are ten hospitals in Birmingham supported by voluntary contributions; of these, two are general hospitals for reception of all classes of disease (except infectious), viz. :—

The General, in Steelhouse Lane (founded, 1766), and The Queen's, in Bath Row (founded, 1840).

There is also a general dispensary with many branches, and at least one provident dispensary (Sands Cox).

2. The General Hospital, founded by Dr. John Ash in 1766, in Summer Lane, Birmingham, was then built in the fields outside the village of Birmingham. In 1897 the new building, erected in Steelhouse Lane at a cost (including land, building, and furnishing) of £220,000, was opened. It contains 346 beds, of which 329 are available for admission of all classes of cases (except infectious). Last year (1906), 5,204 in-patients and 65,427 new out-patients were treated. The annual expenditure is £24,000.

There is a branch hospital (Jaffray) at Gravelly Hill, in the parish of Erdington, with fifty-six beds. Expenditure, £3,000, to which the more chronic cases are transferred to relieve the wards of the General Hospital, and so enable a larger number of cases to be admitted. It is administered by the Board of Management of the General Hospital.

There is a staff of twenty visiting physicians and surgeons, thirteen resident physicians and surgeons, 103 nursing staff, forty-two female servants, seven porters, and engineering staff, stokers, porters, etc., numbering fifteen (non-resident). Total, 200.

3. The hospital is administered by a Board of Management consisting of thirty elected governors appointed at annual meeting of governors (i.e., annual subscribers of £2 2s., or donors of £25 and upwards), nine members of the honorary medical and surgical staff, two representatives of the Hospital Sunday Fund, and two representatives of the Hospital Saturday Fund. There are also a president and fourteen vice-presidents who have seats on the board.

This Board annually appoints a house committee (consisting of nine lay members of the board and two representatives of the medical committee) who meet weekly, and control the general internal economy of the hospital.

A finance committee, consisting of seven members of the board, who meet monthly, examine the accounts, pass payments, and advise the board on all financial questions (i.e., investments, etc.).

A nursing committee is appointed, as a sub-committee of the house committee, to control the nursing details, and to this committee (meeting monthly) the matron reports directly.

The Samaritan Committee (five members) deal with the Special Samaritan Fund—details of which follow (10).

The medical committee consists of the honorary and assistant staff, viz. :—honorary physicians (four); honorary surgeons (four); honorary obstetric officer

(one); honorary ophthalmic surgeon (one); honorary aural surgeon (one); assistant physicians (two); assistant surgeons (two); assistant obstetric officer (one); physician to skin department (one); dental surgeon (one). Thirteen of these are honorary officers, the assistant physicians and assistant surgeons receive an honorarium of £100 per annum, and the dental surgeon, £50. The committee meets monthly, and advises the board on all professional questions.

4. The internal administration is controlled (under the Board) by a House Governor and Secretary who is the chief executive officer. In all matters (other than treatment of patients) he is head of the household.

The Matron (a certified nurse) is responsible for the nursing department, and under her the Assistant Matron controls the house-keeping.

5. The hospital receives in-patients from a very wide district, covering much of Wales and the counties of Worcestershire, Staffordshire, Herefordshire, Oxfordshire, Shropshire, Northamptonshire, as well as Warwickshire.

The out-patients come from a more restricted district as a rule, though many travel long distances.

The casualties come principally from the nearer neighbourhood (see 6).

6. A mile circle drawn on an ordnance map round the hospital covers the poorest parts of the city, viz. :—from Aston Cross to Five Ways, Broad Street, and from this district quite two-thirds of the minor casualty cases come.

7. The enquiry officer (one of the house governor's clerks) sits in the entrance to the out-patient department, and enquires into the social circumstances of the out-patients and of the casualties (on their second visit). Experience shows that a very small proportion are in a position to pay for treatment, and these are at once referred (in general terms) to medical men or their club doctor. Any doubtful case is referred to the house governor who makes written enquiry to the employer or recommender before next attendance.

8. In cases of accident or sudden illness "first aid" is always rendered, and the case enquired into on the second attendance.

9. One difficulty in Birmingham (which I believe does not arise in London) is that the friendly society and other sick clubs do not provide for surgical treatment by their club doctors, so that cases come to the hospital for surgical treatment who would go to the club doctor for a medical condition.

10. There is a Ladies' Committee (wives of honorary staff) which assists the Samaritan Committee by organising a system of visitors to patients at their own homes after discharge from the hospital, and these, by means of orders on tradespeople, give help in kind to the needy who, after a stay of three or six weeks in the hospital, are not able to return at once to work, or if they do, receive no wages till the end of the week. The number of cases helped is limited by the funds at the disposal of the Committee, but last year £146 ls. was so spent besides money grants, rail and cab fares to reach their homes, amounting to a further £63 13s. 8d. or £209 14s. 8d. in all.

11. As a very large proportion of the patients treated at the General Hospital are of the poor working and unemployed classes, it follows that when ill they require assistance, and as the number of beds in the General and Queen's prevents the admission or retention as in-patients of cases which can be treated (from the medical or surgical point of view) as out-patients—many who, while by no means destitute when well, require assistance when unable to work, especially is this the case of persons with fractured legs and thighs whose limbs are put in plaster and who then need to lie up for six weeks or three months but who need no hospital treatment during that time.

12. There is some difficulty in dealing with these cases, as the parish of Birmingham authorities decline to deal with cases not legally "chargeable" to them. Many of the streets and courts from which the poor come are partly in the parish of Birmingham, and partly in the parish of Aston, and the patients who have never received any relief almost always reply "lived in Birmingham all my life," or "for years." If these cases are not suitable for admission at the General Hospital or there are no beds available there is considerable difficulty in dealing with them.

13. The Local Government Board have laid down (after appeal to them) that it is the "duty of the relieving officer of the parish in which the destitution arises to deal with the case," but the Birmingham authorities say that the destitution "arises" in the parish from which the person came, while the Aston authorities state that the destitution "arises" in Birmingham, and they have no power to send into another parish to remove the person.

14. The difficulties have increased since the erection of a Rowton House which is situated in the Local Government Board parish of Aston, from which a large number of cases are brought.

15. It is the practice of the police to bring all cases found in the street ill or injured to the hospital. Many of these are cases due to want or drink, some to chronic conditions (i.e. ulcered legs) which cannot be admitted or if admitted for some urgent condition have nowhere to go on discharge from the hospital.

16. The Birmingham authorities remove cases on notification who are "chargeable" or who have lived for more than a year in Birmingham parish, but decline to remove cases which were admitted to the hospital from an address in the parishes of Aston, Handsworth, King's Norton, or West Bromwich.

17. There is also much complication about burials of the destitute poor, as the Birmingham authorities decline to undertake the burial (except at the cost of the hospital) of patients who were admitted to the hospital from outside their parish, while the Aston authorities state that they can only be responsible for deaths which occur within their parish.

18. A recent case has occurred of a poor man brought from Rowton House by the police, who on arrival was found to be dead, his body was therefore placed in the mortuary and the coroner communicated with. The Birmingham authorities stated that he was brought from the Aston parish and so they were not responsible. The Aston authorities stated that as he died in Birmingham they were not responsible, the hospital therefore had to pay the expense. It was admitted that if the policeman had taken the body to the Police Mortuary at Moor Street the Birmingham authorities would have buried, and if taken to the Birmingham Police Mortuary at Duke Street, which is in the parish of Aston, the Aston authorities would have buried, but as the body was brought to the Hospital Mortuary the hospital governors are left responsible.

19. Two other cases I should like to quote as samples of what has recently happened:—A woman receiving an annuity of 4s. a week as compensation for the death of her husband was admitted for treatment. On her discharge (incurable) her friends stated they could not look after her, and after some correspondence with the parish authorities they agreed to accept her on condition of the friends paying over the annuity. The second was that of an old woman of ninety-three who was admitted with a fractured thigh. A philanthropic lady was allowing her daughter (married) who kept a small huckster's shop in Pope Street 7s. a week to look after the mother. The parish authorities stated they could not receive the old woman, but she must go to her daughter's shop; the hospital ambulance was lent and the woman removed. Some days later the parish authorities sent for her, but she had died in the meantime.

20. The above facts and figures can be proved from the books and records of the hospital, but are given only as samples of the difficulties which arise in Birmingham, partly due, in my opinion, to the complication of the parishes and the differences of interpretation of the Poor Law.

21. I enclose a copy* of the history of the hospital, and of the last published annual report* and shall be glad to supply any further information in my power.

APPENDIX No. CXXII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. H. CROPLEY, F.R.C.S. (ENG.), D.P.H. (LOND.), NORTHAMPTON.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS

1. I am now and have been for the last thirteen years medical officer to the Northampton Workhouse and Infirmary. I was for eight years Medical Officer of Health to the Kingsthorpe Urban District Council, which was incorporated with the borough of Northampton about six years ago.

2. The sanitary authority being the Town Council have an isolation hospital for infectious cases, with accommodation for about 100 beds, to which persons of the lower and middle class are admitted without payment; they also take in all cases of infectious disease from the workhouse, payment being made by the guardians. The sanitary authority also have a small hospital to which a few cases of advanced phthisis are admitted, as a preventive measure; these are almost entirely from the working class; a few cases in the earlier stage are also sent by the sanitary authority to sanatoria (Welling). At the present time steps are being taken to provide a sanatorium for consumptives in the town and county by voluntary efforts, the site having already been purchased.

3. In connection with this I might say that we have a ward at the workhouse infirmary for consumptive patients only.

4. The Poor Law for the Northampton urban and rural districts is administered by the Northampton Board of Guardians—the population being Northampton county borough, 87,021; rural, 6,420—the medical relief being carried out by myself for the workhouse and infirmary, three outdoor medical officers for the borough and immediately adjoining districts, and one or two for the outlying districts; all drugs are supplied by the guardians for the workhouse and infirmary, the outdoor medical officers providing drugs, except quinine and cod liver oil, which is supplied by the guardians.

5. The General Hospital for the town and county contains 160 beds, with a large out-patient department; patients from this are drawn from the lower and lower middle classes, to the greatest extent from the working class, being received by letter, out or in-patient, according to requirements, these being obtained from subscribers, either private or from subscriptions collected from the workpeople at the factories.

* Not printed.

6. The Victoria Dispensary, an old institution, originally established by voluntary effort, but now chiefly supported by payments from the members, of which there are from 12,000 to 15,000, chiefly of the working class, the payment being 1s. per month for a man and his wife and all children under sixteen years of age, servants 5s. per annum. Five medical men practising in the town are attached to this, the members having the privilege of selecting which one of the five they prefer; patients are seen either at the dispensary, the doctors' surgeries, or their own home. No doubt many of the poor, even after reaching the stage of receiving outdoor relief from the guardians, still continue to pay their subscriptions in preference to accepting Poor Law medical relief, due no doubt to the dislike of changing their medical attendant.

7. The Friendly Societies Medical Institute has a very large membership, probably 15,000. The husband or sons being a member of one of the friendly clubs, the rest of the family are admitted for a small payment—10s. per annum—and receive treatment as in the case of the Victoria Dispensary, the Institute employing two medical officers of their own.

8. Beyond this several medical men practising in the town have their own private medical clubs, run on similar lines to the above; many, no doubt, after improving their circumstances still continue to take advantage by obtaining their medical attendance at the low rates of payment quoted.

9. The Nursing Institution, which is supported partly by voluntary effort, but also receiving £60. per annum from the guardians, send out five or six Jubilee nurses, who visit the poorer members of the community, on receiving a card from the medical man in attendance; these nurses can only remain a very short time with each patient, but the instructions they give are most useful.

10. I do not think the work of medical relief by the sanitary authorities and the Poor Law overlap to any great extent, the workhouse having no convenience for the isolation of infectious cases, the guardians are glad to avail themselves of the Borough Infectious Hospital.

11. The few consumptives in the hospital of the sanitary authorities could be readily accommodated in the workhouse infirmary at a fraction of the expense.

12. I am not in favour of municipalising the General Hospital; it is well managed and doing a great work, not only for the very poor, but for many not of the artizan class, but who are too poor to obtain the special treatment necessary in their cases.

13. The board of guardians contribute an annual payment of fifty guineas to the General Hospital, for which we have the right to send any cases requiring special treatment not obtainable at the workhouse infirmary.

14. I do not think it would be wise to interfere with institutions such as the Victoria Dispensary and the Friendly Societies Medical Institute, with the view of bringing them under the control of a central authority.

15. I do not think that the health of the community in this district suffers from the insufficiency, either in the amount or quality of the medical assistance obtainable, this town being especially favourably situated, in that the poorer classes are able to obtain excellent medical attendance for such a low scale of charges.

16. I cannot speak of the work of the outdoor medical officers (Poor Law) having increased or not, but in the workhouse infirmary, within the last six or seven years, the number of patients has increased from about ninety to 190.

17. I should like to make a few observations on the medical aspect of the casuals; firstly, I strongly support the idea of forming labour colonies for these persons, with forced detention, securing their future freedom by their industry and good behaviour; my reasons for this being the frequent carrying of infectious diseases, such as small-pox, etc., from an infected district to others free from the disease, also that a very large number of these persons are suffering from diseases that require treatment, who are pushed along from one casual ward to another, so much so that if I took into our infirmary all that one might feel inclined to, the place would be filled with these people in a few months.

18. At the present time there are in the workhouse a large number of able-bodied men and women, the former being occupied in the unremunerative task of breaking stones or chopping wood. Two years ago I brought before the committee a scheme for purchasing a large house situated 1,200 yards from tram terminus, with 25 acres of arable land; the house was large and quite new, the whole lot could have been obtained for £2,500, less than half its cost. My proposal was to take about fifty of the able-bodied men from the workhouse, having made the house suitable for their reception, then to utilise them in cultivating the land by spade labour, thus producing all the vegetables required for the workhouse and infirmary; removing the pigs from their present position, viz., near to the infirmary; in this way at least one fat pig a week would have been provided; and seeing that more than £300 a year is spent in potatoes alone, I estimated that after all expenses had been paid, and these fifty men kept, a profit would have been made.

APPENDIX No. CXXIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. R. J. CURTIS, SOLICITOR, CLERK (SINCE 1903) TO THE GUARDIANS OF THE KING'S NORTON UNION, PREVIOUSLY CLERK TO NORWICH INCORPORATION, AND FORMERLY ASSISTANT CLERK, KING'S NORTON UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

I.—KING'S NORTON UNION ADMINISTRATION.

1. The King's Norton Union was formed in 1836, and its area has remained unchanged.

2. The Table appended furnishes statistics as to the several parishes comprising the union. (Appendix No. CXXIII. (A).)

3. Prior to 1873 the union was almost entirely rural and residential. Since that date a very great change has taken place. The population has increased from 66,800 in 1871 to 187,085 in 1901, and it is now estimated at 230,000. The rateable value has increased from £300,000 to £1,100,000, in the like period.

Smethwick parish contains the largest number of poor people, and that borough together, with Balsall Heath, furnish approximately three-fourths of the paupers.

These parishes consequently derive considerable advantage from their union with parishes having comparatively very little poverty.

An illustration in opposition to the suggested transfer of Poor Law administration (and the consequent incidence of charge) to counties and county boroughs is offered by the case of Smethwick, which, on April 1st, 1907, becomes a county borough. That borough now supplies nearly one-half of the King's Norton Union pauperism, and contributes less than one-fourth to the expenditure.

4. Indoor Provision for.—The indoor poor were housed at the old workhouse at King's Norton Village from 1836 until 1872, when the present workhouse at Selly Oak was opened, providing accommodation for 400, including the sick and children.

In the year 1887 the guardians provided cottage homes (grouped) at Shenley Fields for the children permanently chargeable. The pavilion at the workhouse previously occupied by the children was then used as an infirmary for female patients, and with great difficulty was made to suffice until September, 1897, when the present infirmary buildings were opened for the sick and infirm requiring medical treatment and skilled nursing. Extensions to this infirmary are now in progress which will provide about 250 additional beds.

In the year 1904 a pavilion was erected at the workhouse, providing accommodation for 150 female patients.

From time to time the guardians have availed themselves of opportunities of acquiring land in the vicinity of the workhouse, although the same has not been required for immediate use. In 1897 they caused a scheme plan to be prepared showing how the available land could best be utilised having regard to the probable needs of the future. This plan has been found of great service in guiding the guardians to execute as necessity arises parts of what will ultimately be a comprehensive and cohesive scheme. Vagrants wards (on separate cell system) were erected at a cost of £5,000 in a detached position from the workhouse.

5. The following comparative table shows the number of paupers (excluding vagrants) on January 1st, 1896, and 1906 :—

—	1896	Proportion to population.	1906	Proportion to population.
Indoor -	575	1 in 261	943	1 in 233
Outdoor -	1,963	1 in 76	2,201	1 in 100
Lunatics -	261	1 in 694	415	1 in 530
	2,799		3,559

6. On October 1st, 1906, the guardians were relieving 1,489 individuals singly; of these 1,030 were over sixty years of age, and 154 were children under sixteen.

On the same date 334 heads of families were relieved with 1,010 dependents; 131 of the 334 were over sixty years of age.

7. Out-Relief Arrangements.—The union is divided into five out-relief districts. There are five relieving officers, one general assistant, a lady relief visitor, also an officer for settlement and desertion cases.

There are eight district medical officers, two of them acting in the remote rural areas.

Each relieving officer resides, and has an office within his district. The relief committees meet in sections at convenient points for the applicants to attend (except the few from the remote rural districts).

Periodically special meetings of the relief committee are held at each pay station, and every case is reviewed or a medical certificate produced accounting for their non-attendance.

Prior to this revision each applicant is required to fill in written replies to questions, and this form is before the guardians when interviewing the applicants.

8. Ample provision has been made by the guardians for the needs of the poor residing within the union. A cordial spirit of co-operation prevails amongst the voluntary agents, the guardians, and the public officials.

9. An analysis of the expenditure of the board for the year ended Michaelmas, 1906, gives the following results :

Maintenance and Shelter of the Poor :—

	s.	d.
Food and clothing -	3	9½
Shelter -	4	6½
Outdoor relief -	3	3¼
Lunatics in asylums -	3	8¼
	15s.	3¼d. of every £.

Administration :—

	s.	d.
Salaries and wages -	2	9½
Officers' food -	-	10½
Other charges -	1	0½
	4s.	8¾d. of every £.

Total 20s.

10. Special features of Administration :—

(a) Systematic revision of all cases chargeable.

(b) Out relief committee meeting in sections. Each section (except the chairman) changing districts half-yearly.

(c) Infirmary.—The infirmary was designed as a building to be separately administered. Having carefully considered the method of administering under a medical superintendent, the guardians submitted to the Local Government Board a scheme whereby a matron would have charge of the nursing and internal administration, a steward (non-resident) being responsible for the books, stores, and outdoor labour; the resident medical officer, having no administrative duties. The Local Government Board with considerable hesitation sanctioned the experiment, which proved a complete success and has since been copied in other unions.

(d) Experiments with Able-bodied Men.—Within the last two years the guardians have sent ten able-bodied men to the Farm Colony at Lingfield. Of these four have been emigrated to Canada, three others are going in April, one obtained a situation and is doing well in England, and one is still at the colony. Another absconded and has since been sent to prison for three months for neglecting to maintain himself.

(e) Classification quarters for aged women.

(f) Co-operation with a voluntary agency for the care of young unmarried mothers.

(g) A lady relief visitor who devotes special attention to :—(a) Widows and children relieved; (b) applications for admission to maternity wards; (c) cases recommended for special class of aged and deserving; (d) boarding-out.

II.—INDOOR AND OUTDOOR RELIEF.

11. With regard to the respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief, I think every case should be dealt with according to the circumstances.

I do not think it possible in these days for any board to successfully adopt a policy of indiscriminately refusing outdoor relief, but I hold that the right policy is that of strict administration, which means first that guardians shall insist upon complete enquiry, and have the fullest information with regard to each case, and then that the guardians, acting as conscientious trustees of public money, shall form a painstaking judgment as to the kind and amount of relief which is necessary.

Strict administration thus implies a high standard of public duty, and imposes what is a hard task upon unpaid administrators, for it is a work involving much vigilant care to make certain that in every case where relief is given the same shall be sufficient for the necessities of the applicant, and shall be given in accordance with sound public policy.

I believe when outdoor relief is given it is the plain duty of guardians to ensure that the relief is adequate to the circumstances, and I have no patience with those guardians who are ever ready to give each applicant a small weekly dole, the amount of which is frequently quite out of proportion to the plea of destitution which is the alleged cause of the application for out-relief. These guardians say, "We know that the relief will be supplemented by other sources of income." When that supplementation is help by the applicant's relations there is no very serious objection to it, but when it takes—as so frequently is the case—the form of earnings by the pauper's own work, it is a very serious matter, for it is obvious he is kept on the labour market, and enabled to do work which otherwise would be done by independent labourers by means of a subsidy paid out of the poor rates. Thus the position of the independent labourer is damaged, and impulse towards temperance and thrift impeded.

III.—COMBINATIONS OF BOARDS FOR SPECIAL PURPOSES.

12. I enclose a report* I have just prepared, which details the work of a joint committee of the Birmingham, Aston, and King's Norton Boards in the provision of a colony for epileptic and feeble-minded persons.

In my opinion the existence of a number of casual wards in fairly close proximity to the city of Birmingham.

* Not printed.

and to each other, tends to encourage vagrancy, as it operates to induce casuals to remain in and around the city and to go from one casual ward to another. The result is that the wards are generally overcrowded to such an extent as to preclude the possibility of systematically enforcing the prescribed tasks of work or of detaining the casuals for the prescribed periods. There are six casual wards within a radius of about seven miles of Stephenson Place, and ten within four miles.

I think the three boards should combine in order to deal with this matter. A Conference to consider my suggestion was held in December, 1905, but action deferred pending issue, and consideration of the Report of the Departmental Committee on Vagrancy.

IV.—SUGGESTIONS.

13. My personal views were largely embodied in those which I have already submitted to the Commission in my capacity as President of the National Poor Law Officers' Association. I have refrained from repeating those matters in this statement, but shall be pleased to reply to any questions thereon.

In addition thereto, I desire to add the following:—

(a) With respect to voluntary institutions, it not infrequently happens that persons maintained therein become chargeable to the Poor Law unions within whose area the institution is situated. The time of such residence ought to be excluded in ascertaining whether a person so residing has gained a status of irremovability from the union, or a legal settlement in the parish in which the voluntary institution is situated. The King's Norton Board has suffered considerably from the absence of such a protection.

(b) All institutions (whether voluntary or rate-provided), dealing with mentally defective persons should be registered, and placed under inspection by medical men from a central department.

(c) Mentally defective children (except those certified under the Idiots or Lunacy Acts) should be under the care and control of education authorities, until sixteen years of age, and be dealt with either in special day schools, or in boarding schools, according to the requirements of the cases. Those who needed institutional care after sixteen years of age, should be detained under medical advice. If their parents can pay the full cost of maintenance, such patients should be classed as private patients, and sent to some registered institution. The rest should be dealt with by boards of guardians.

(d) No electoral disability should attach to the father or mother of any person maintained out of the rates (either wholly or partially) in an asylum, or a registered institution for the care and control of epileptics and feeble-minded persons.

(e) If they received a grant in respect of epileptics and of feeble-minded persons maintained in institutions provided to the satisfaction of the central authority, I believe that the boards of guardians having a number of cases would (either alone or in combination) readily provide suitable accommodation. The boards having but few cases could contract with some registered institution to take their cases. A reasonable time (say one or two years) should be allowed guardians to do this. After the expiration of that period it should be the duty of the county council at the request of any boards of guardians, or of any twenty ratepayers, to hold an inquiry as to the necessity for the establishment of a colony or other suitable institution for the district. County councils should be empowered, if they think fit, to constitute a district, and to direct that a colony or other institution be established for any place, places, or area. From the decision of the county council there should be a right of appeal to the Local Government Board.

(f) All registered institutions should be empowered to take paying cases. The existing voluntary institutions should be given full opportunities of registering, subject to their complying with the requirements of the central authority.

(g) Phthisis is a prolific cause of pauperism. Rarely do the sufferers apply to the guardians for aid until all hope of cure or relief is passed, and rarely will the sufferer leave his or her home and enter the infirmary, and so avoid infecting others. It is high time some definite action was taken, and to deal with this question effectually it would seem to be necessary to establish: (1) Compulsory notification; (2) Sanatoria by the health authorities; (3) Tubercular dispensaries at our hospitals; and (4) to give health authorities power to compel isolation.

V.—CONCLUSION.

14. There is no one panacea for the problems of poverty and unemployment.

They must be combated by a combination of efforts, the chief of which, in my opinion, are:—

(1) The promotion of temperance in all its ways.

(2) Educational advance, particularly in technical training and the inculcation of thrift and self-reliance.

(3) Better housing—this as much in our villages as in our towns.

(4) Inducements for the rising generation of our villages to remain on the land.

(5) Less labour by women and children.

(6) The custodial care of the feeble-minded, so as to prevent as far as possible a continuance of the growth of the unfit.

(7) Removal of the "unemployables" from the labour market, where they are a drag, to labour colonies, where they should be made to do what their physical capacity will allow towards the cost of their support.

(8) The establishment, on a practical basis, of means whereby men thrown out of employment can be aided and guided in their search for work, and not left to wander aimlessly about the country.

APPENDIX No. CXXIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE AS TO THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE KING'S NORTON UNION COTTAGE HOMES (VILLAGE SYSTEM) PREPARED BY MR. CHAS. T. DAVIS, SUPERINTENDENT.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. Both myself and my wife, the matron, are certificated teachers, and have had the management of children since we were thirteen years of age. We commenced our work under the Poor Law sixteen years ago, as schoolmaster and schoolmistress at these Homes, and three years later were appointed superintendent and matron.

2. Accommodation and Training.—The Homes are situated in a healthy country district within the Union, but about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the outskirts of the urban area from which the children are drawn.

The site comprises about 13 acres of land; and the village, which is arranged on either side of a central drive, consists of:—

One Home accommodating twenty children.

Eight Homes accommodating twenty-four children each, and

One Home accommodating twenty-eight children; all with good playgrounds adjoining.

A Probationary Home with accommodation for eight boys and eight girls, where children can be isolated on admission, if necessary, before mixing with the other children.

An infirmary with accommodation for eight boys and eight girls for the nursing of the sick.

The superintendent's house, which is placed at the entrance, with office and stores accommodation adjoining.

A mixed school to accommodate 240 children, with playgrounds for boys and girls, which is conducted on the lines of an ordinary public elementary school, and has an efficient staff of duly qualified non-resident teachers.

Well-equipped workshops, including shoemakers' shop, carpenters' shop, smithy and fitting shop, and tailors' shop, with boiler and engine houses, water tower, yard, etc., adjoining, where the elder boys are trained in the various trades, preparatory to being placed out.

A swimming bath which is converted during the winter months by means of a movable floor into a gymnasium and drill hall.

A playfield with see-saw, swings, climbing ropes, and climbing ladder.

Seven acres of land under cultivation which produces practically all the vegetables, etc., and a great deal of the fruit necessary for the institution as well as affording additional training for the boys.

3. Classification.—Five of the Homes are for boys and five for girls and infants. The children are admitted from three years of age, and may remain up to sixteen. Some little ones are placed in each of the Homes for the reason that we consider it is not only an education in itself for the elder children to care for and help to look after the little ones, but it makes the Homes more like real homes, and having the care of the little ones has a softening and good effect upon the characters of the elder children. Experience has proved, however, that it is inadvisable to mix the sexes after seven years of age as many, even at the most tender ages, have previous to admission, not only been accustomed to hear immoral conversation, but have even witnessed immoral conduct.

4. Foster Parents and Trainers.—The children address their foster parents as father and mother, and great care is taken to appoint suitable persons for the offices. Children are naturally very impressionable, and good example is a most important factor in the training. It is therefore essential that thoroughly respectable, capable, industrious people, as well educated as possible, should have the care and training of the children in the Homes and Industrial Departments; people whom the children will always look up to and respect, and who also set them an all round good example.

Owing to the difficulty of obtaining suitable married couples the guardians decided, some five years ago, to appoint no more except for the Home accommodating twenty-eight children, which was built for the elder boys, and the foster father of which is my general assistant, drill instructor, etc. As vacancies occur foster mothers only are appointed for the other boys' Homes, and non-resident industrial trainers for the workshops. By doing this there is the two-fold gain—more capable women can be secured for the management of the Homes, and younger and better men can be appointed as industrial trainers, the incumbency question not having to be taken into account.

5. Home Life and Training of Girls.—There is no uniformity of dressing.

The domestic work generally, including the cooking and washing, and also the knitting and much of the sewing, is done in the Homes by the foster mothers, assisted by the elder children. When additional assistance is necessary a respectable charwoman is employed.

The girls, who as a rule go to service, undergo their final training in the superintendent's house under the direct supervision of the matron. By this arrangement the girls obtain a good all round training, and the matron gets a better knowledge of them and their individual good points or failings. Suitable places can then be chosen, and wages arranged according to capabilities.

6. Food Supply.—There is no fixed dietary. The foster-mothers on the first day of the week make requisition for supplies, based on a weekly allowance scale, according to the number of children. A maximum per head is laid down but seldom reached. Stores are given out for the week with the exception of meat and bread, which are distributed twice weekly, and milk which is given out twice daily. Meals are prepared as in a private home giving as great a variety as possible. Each foster-parent gets to know the individual requirements of the children under her care, and therefore a child is served with only as much as it needs. By this arrangement there is no waste. All food over from the meals is put away and properly prepared for subsequent meals. This system is economical, teaches the children not to be wasteful, and also makes the most of the food.

7. Recreation.—Great attention is given to recreation and physical development. Experience has proved that it is unwise to allow children to sit or stand about perfectly idle and listless. They should be found material for amusement, and instructed in respect of play as well as work. Some five years ago the guardians appointed a drill and gymnastic instructor, who also teaches the boys swimming, and instructs them in their games. The difference in our boys since they have had their leisure time properly occupied, enjoyed organised games, and spent long winter evenings pleasantly in the gymnasium has been most marked. The elder boys also have small gardens, and prizes are given for the best.

8. After Care.—If success is to be assured much has to be done, and a real interest taken in the children after they leave the Homes. Suitable places are found, they are visited when necessary by the matron or myself and are encouraged to visit and spend their leisure time at the Homes. The spending of their leisure time at the Homes not only keeps us in touch with them, but minimises the danger of them forming undesirable companionship. A judicious, kind, and firm oversight for a few years guides them aright at a very important time of life, any clinches the good work that has been begun at the Homes. The boys and girls know too that they have friends to whom they can turn in time of trouble and failure; are sometimes prevented. It is commonly thought that any well-intentioned person can do this important work, but if the best results are to be obtained it should in my opinion be undertaken by those who have lived with the children, gained a knowledge of their individual characters, and won their love and respect.

9. Aid to Working Children.—In adopting the Cottage Homes System the end in view is the reducing of pauperism in the future. If this is to be successfully accomplished in addition to rearing the children to the age of fifteen to sixteen years, and keeping them away from the influence of undesirable relatives or friends, it is necessary to be able to extend a helping hand in time of need certainly up to the age of eighteen years. Guardians are permitted under the Poor Law Amendment Act 1899 to adopt children up to that age, but under the existing orders they are debarred from doing what proper parents would readily do, viz. :—

(a) Give a little pecuniary assistance when necessary to boys when they are first placed out, and are unable to earn quite sufficient to maintain themselves.

(b) Treat the Homes as a real home for the children, and be allowed to re-admit and draw rations for children between situations up to the age stated.

I beg, therefore, respectfully to recommend that such powers be given to guardians, and in explanation I might add :—

(a) All boys are not equally smart, and good situations have sometimes to be passed over because employers are unable to give a sufficient wage at first for the boys to maintain themselves. The number of suitable situations where boys can live in are getting more limited day by day. I do not believe in taking any kind of a situation simply to get rid of the boy. If our boys are to be satisfactorily lifted from the level of pauperism they should be put to a trade or some kind of employment that is permanent and kept out of the casual labourers' market

(b) It naturally happens from various causes, not always the fault of the child, that changes have to be made in situations, and it would be of great assistance if guardians were able to re-admit for short periods any of the old scholars up to the age of eighteen years.

APPENDIX No. CXXV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. J. T. DICKINS, MEMBER OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS AND OF DISTRESS COMMITTEE, NORTHAMPTON.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. Northampton union consists almost exclusively of the wage-earner engaged in the shoe industry with a limited number of residential inhabitants, retired tradesmen, etc., workers in shoe and pinafore factories, breweries, building contractors, etc.

2. A stoneyard which was opened for the employment of able-bodied men was found to be costly and uneconomical after two years or thereabouts continuous opening and showed no diminution of the number of applicants. Exhaustive enquiries were made by the board, resulting in its being closed and not since reopened.

The wisdom of this step was proved by the fact that in a very short time a great number of the men found employment elsewhere and ceased to be a burden on the rates.

3. The guardians have six scattered homes for children, five of the homes have been purchased and one home rented during the last two years. Some are situated in principal roads, necessitating heavy expenditure coupled with furnishing and extra officialism. I view this outlay with a certain amount of misgiving, as up to the present time I have not seen beneficial results sufficient to justify the expenditure incurred.

4. Indoor Relief. This has been kept within reasonable limits, but the contributions from chargeable persons have not been sufficiently enforced and great difficulty is experienced in collecting the board's orders towards maintenance.

5. Out-Relief has been granted by the board in many cases in which the amount of money coming into the home exceeds the average wages earned by the working class in the district, thus proving an absence of destitution. This policy is due to the presence on the board of a certain number of members who hold advanced socialistic views and are constantly advocating increased relief.

6. The classes of persons applying for relief are the destitute, infirm, aged, deserted wives and families, diseased, degenerates, etc.

7. The chief causes of pauperism are old age, infirmity, increased usage of machinery and stringent conditions of the trades union laws as to wages and conditions of labour. The last mentioned accounts in a great measure for the increase of pauperism in throwing out a number of middle-aged workmen from the various factories, and as no suitable employment has so far been found to absorb this increasing class of labour the great majority of them eventually become chargeable to the Poor Law fund.

8. The classes of persons seeking election as guardians are members of the town council (about one-fourth), representatives of trade unions and friendly societies, tradesmen and rural members, principally agriculturists.

9. I would recommend :—

(a) Additional power to enforce board's order for contribution from chargeable persons towards maintenance.

(b) Higher standard of qualification for board members including a longer period of residence as a ratepayer.

(c) A more uniform administration of Poor Law throughout the country by the issuing of Local Government Board Standing Orders with a maximum and minimum scale of outdoor relief which would correct some of the existing anomalies in administration and would tend to reduce the consequent increase of the burdens of Poor Law which of recent years have had a disastrous effect on trades generally throughout the country.

APPENDIX No. CXXVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MRS. EDDOWES, MEMBER OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS, ASTON UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. My qualifications and experience are : nearly nine years a member of the Aston Board of Guardians ; thirty years a district visitor in a manufacturing town, Leicester, and in an agricultural district ; many years a worker for the Girls' Friendly Society, and, while a guardian, rescue work amongst the workhouse girls.

2. One of the most successful changes in Poor Law work has been the removal of children from the workhouse to the cottage homes, where they are brought in small numbers under the influence of a foster-mother, with family life. An experiment has lately been tried at Aston of keeping the "ins" and "outs" in one home, apart from the other children ; this appears to be successful also, removing an unsettling element from the homes as a whole. I should like to see some alterations in the law which would prevent children being taken about the country, hop and pea-picking during the summer, and brought into workhouses for the winter.

3. I should like to give temporary out-relief to the head of a family out of employment. In cases of old people who can care for themselves, I would also give it, but the sick and infirm old would not be properly fed and nursed by relatives or comfortably housed, and no "adequate" outdoor relief would insure this. There is a strong desire on the part of sons and daughters to get their parents into the workhouse, getting rid of all responsibility, and the workhouse is now so comfortable that the old people are willing to come. Many such cases are refused by the guardians where old people are not ill.

4. The chief causes of our pauperism are, I believe, drink, betting, very young improvident marriages, and the hire system of procuring household goods. Directly the man is out of work or there is any illness, the young couple have to come into the workhouse, and are often three or four months, or longer, before they can make a fresh start in life.

5. In the city of Birmingham there appear to be many men out of employment at about fifty years of age, owing to the Workmen's Compensation Act, and this helps to throw their relatives on the rates.

6. The class of persons seeking election as guardians now is largely "Labour" men and women, and all in favour of increased wages and out-relief.

7. We have a sufficient staff of very good relieving officers, and I think all cases are thoroughly investigated, and all facts brought before the guardians at the relief committees.

8. The Girls' Friendly Society has been working at the cottage homes for some six years, and is useful in after-care of the girls. When they go to service they are visited regularly by a lady, and the guardians receive reports from her. The girls are well instructed in the principles of the society, and I am not aware that any girl so sent out has returned to the workhouse.

9. The Magdalen Society helps girls who pass through the maternity wards by trying to find situations for them and homes for their infants, also with gifts of money and clothes. It is doing a really splendid work, and it should be part of the business of every woman guardian to do something of the kind, as without such help girls return many times to the workhouse, and finally stay there with several children.

APPENDIX No. CXXVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. HENRY FISHER, RELIEVING OFFICER OF THE KING'S NORTON UNION, SINCE MAY, 1889.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

Medical Assistance of the Poor.

1. (a) A sanitary authority, town council, etc., renders us no assistance whatever at the present time, not even a fever hospital, which has been a very awkward and unpleasant matter for the relieving officer.

(b) The Poor Law is the only source for providing medical relief to the absolute poor in my district, and this, in my opinion, is done without being an incentive to pauperism and with very little, if any, imposition, this being due to the diligent and strict investigation pursued by the relieving officer and working hand in hand with the medical officer, who not infrequently renders valuable assistance to the relieving officer by receiving voluntary information respecting people's position. Every application for medical relief is thoroughly investigated in my district, and I can positively say that I use an equal amount of care and discretion in deciding what is a genuine and proper case for medical relief as I do in any kind of case for relief other than medical, without which I can believe it would be an incentive to pauperism and imposition. Relieving officers should act independently, and absolutely ignore outside recommendations and interference.

(c) Voluntary effort, hospitals, medical clubs, etc. There are no hospitals in Smethwick, but many poor people (such as people who do not desire to receive medical relief) are assisted by voluntary effort, with notes for the Birmingham and West Bromwich Hospitals to a very large extent, and which very materially reduces the medical relief in Smethwick. There are medical aid clubs in the borough which take patients at 1d. per week for each adult or child. The class of person most assisted are those whose position does not permit them to pay for the services of a private medical practitioner, such as labourers, ironworkers, self-taught mechanics, and even the better-class mechanics with large families. Probably the agents who seek members for the medical aid clubs are very frequently deceived, and often the private medical practitioner imposed upon, owing in a great measure to lack of investigation and the anxiety of the agent to get commission. As to the recipients of hospital notes, more strict investigation exists at the present time than was the case a few years ago.

Poor Law.

2. With regard to the respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief I think that :—

(a) Indoor relief is undoubtedly the proper relief in the following cases :—

Able-bodied males and females without children.

Women with illegitimate child or children.

Women living apart from their husbands, whether deserted or separated under the Married Woman's Separation Act, with or without children.

Persons residing in overcrowded or insanitary dwellings, persons who take in lodgers and permit any person of drunken or immoral habits to reside with them.

Not able-bodied persons who live alone in rooms and have no one to look after them in case of sickness or old age.

(b) Outdoor relief, properly administered, in the following cases should be permitted :—

Widows with children of respectable character, and being fit and proper persons to have the custody and care of children.

Not able-bodied men and women of respectable character who are residing with friends or relatives (also of respectable character) who will undertake to look after them in case of sickness or old age.

Able-bodied women of respectable character, with children, whose husbands are in an asylum, hospital or infirmary.

3. The classes of persons applying for relief include practically all classes of people, such as able-bodied men from labourers to mechanics, etc., on account of their own or any sickness of a member of the family, widows with children, women whose husbands are in an asylum, hospital, or infirmary, not able-bodied males and females.

4. Where it is practicable, the "Heads of Families" should be compelled to make the application.

5. The causes of pauperism include drink, large families among the working and lower classes, want of thrift, bad management of families, carelessness, no desire to rise in the world, in many instances relief and charity too easily obtained. Outside people often recommend persons to apply for relief, without which no application would be received.

6. Officials should try to prevent rather than encourage pauperism.

I have probably saved more people from the taint of pauperism than any other one man in England.

7. I beg to submit the following suggestions for reform based upon my experience :—

(a) In my opinion very little reform, if any, is necessary in the existing laws; they are undoubtedly good if properly carried out.

(b) Relieving officers should be held responsible for the strict and proper administration and should not be interfered with in any shape or form, and, if possible, should be given greater powers.

(c) From the time of application the relieving officer should see each case straight through, viz., kind and amount of relief to be given, recovery of maintenance from relatives, settlement and removal of paupers, etc.

(d) Great care should always be exercised in the selection of a relieving officer, as the appointment is not so simple as it may appear.

(e) At the present time relieving officers are asked to do too much clerical work, which naturally interferes with their visiting and investigation, upon which they cannot spend too much time.

(f) I am inclined to believe that the appointment of inspectors, who would act independently, to visit relieving officers, relief stations and districts, and occasionally to visit the Relief Committee meetings, would be very beneficial to all concerned.

APPENDIX No. CXXVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. CHARLES FLETCHER, CLERK TO THE GUARDIANS, BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. If spared until March, 1907, I shall have completed twenty-six years' service in the Poor Law. Previous to March, 1881, I held a position as a reporter on the Birmingham Daily Post, and I have a fairly large experience of public life.

2. I entered the service of the Birmingham Board of Guardians as second assistant clerk in 1881, and on the death of the first assistant I was given his vacant position. Several years later, owing to the ill-health of the clerk, I was appointed deputy clerk, and in October, 1903, when he was superannuated I was made clerk to the guardians and to the overseers. In such a large parish as Birmingham it is necessary to carry on the Poor Law administration in departments, and in each I have some very experienced officers, who will be able to give evidence before the Commission in great detail.

3. The work of the clerk to the overseers (a body known in Poor Law Unions as the Assessment Committee) is nothing like so heavy and exacting as that of clerk to the guardians.

Social and Industrial Conditions in Your Parish.

4. Birmingham, in my opinion, is in a more fortunate position than many of our large provincial cities, because of the great variety of trades and manufactories carried on here. For many years trade has not been brisk in the city, and short time has been worked for a considerable period. This, I think, is particularly applicable to the brass trades, and also to the jewellery and silversmith trades.

5. From some statistics that came under my notice some little time ago I feel I am right in saying these may be considered the trades which employ most people in Birmingham.

6. It is difficult to specify for Birmingham what can be usually said of many other towns, namely, the "staple trade." In Lancashire and Yorkshire towns this difficulty would not arise. Should a strike or lock-out take place in these towns it is felt all over the district, but happily in Birmingham when a strike or lock-out occurs it does not assume so serious an aspect.

7. I have heard from time to time, and I think there is a great deal of truth in it, that when any particular class of workmen in this city are on strike, they are not only materially assisted from their own particular trade funds, but considerable support is rendered from the ordinary working men engaged in other trades.

8. I have known hard and trying times in Birmingham, and "Mayor's Funds" have been promoted and most liberally supported by the citizens with the view of tiding over these periods of depression.

9. Notwithstanding that every effort was made to properly distribute the funds, there has been a great amount of imposition carried on, and I am afraid these charitable efforts tend to rob our fellow-workmen of their independence.

10. The city council is doing good work in improving the housing of the poor classes. The "unemployed" have from time to time demonstrated their existence, and given much trouble in the city. I have made it my business to be present at some of their open-air meetings to hear the speeches of their agitators, and I have come away with the feeling that a great majority of the men do not want, or ever have wanted employment. The bona-fide working man out of employment does not seem, in my opinion, to throw in his lot with them. Bodies of these men have marched to these offices and have demanded food, or work, or both. They have been told by myself and by my superintendent of out-relief that if they will make their applications in the proper manner, their cases will be inquired into and assistance given if necessary. I remember on one occasion about 200 of them taking my advice and going to the relief department, where our relieving officers were waiting for them. The officers found that the majority of them did not belong to this parish; that a very great number of them could not tell where they lived; that many others gave addresses, not one of which could be found by the relieving officers. A few married men who appeared to be deserving of assistance, and whose names and addresses were correctly given, were sent to the Charity Organisation Society and were assisted from that source for a time.

11. Since the formation of the "Distress Committee" in this city systematic efforts are made to relieve the deserving men temporarily thrown out of work. The Committee consists of magistrates, town councillors, guardians, and other leading public men and women of the city.

12. I may also say that in the four quarters of the city there are branches of the Mutual Aid Society, and I think from this organisation the temporarily deserving poor are being very well looked after.

Particulars as to Peculiarities or Experiments in Poor Law Administration.

13. In this parish the guardians have a workhouse capable of accommodating 1,700 persons and a separate infirmary with room for 1,100 sick patients. The board were "pioneers" in the establishment of cottage homes. They have made separate provision for the accommodation of male and female epileptics, also for the better class of aged men and aged women.

14. Their out-relief department is also well managed, both in the ordinary and medical relief sections.

15. When I entered the service of the board in 1881 the number of persons on the out-relief list was exceedingly great and the amount expended in out-relief was very high. The then inspector of the Local Government Board (Mr. J. J. Henley) was continually drawing the guardians' attention to this large outlay. No reduction took place for a long time. At his suggestion, however, a deputation was appointed to visit Liverpool workhouse to obtain certain particulars with regard to the medical arrangements of that institution. Towards the close of the interview at Liverpool something was said about the office of superintendent of out-relief. My guardians, who were with me then at Liverpool, decided that we should obtain particulars respecting this appointment. We gathered sufficient information to advise the Birmingham Board to appoint a similar officer, and this they did in 1883. We then had a number of relieving officers well advanced in years, and they could not visit their cases so much as was necessary. The board then decided to superannuate four of them and younger men were appointed in their places. With these new men and a cross visitor, together with the newly-appointed superintendent of out-relief, close attention was paid to the out-relief department, with the result that the number of paupers and the amount of relief were considerably reduced.

16. In support of the foregoing I would mention here that in 1883 the population of the parish of Birmingham was 246,352. There were 7,388 paupers, namely, 2,524 indoor and 4,864 outdoor. The cost of the out-relief amounted to £15,522. In 1888 there were 3,147 indoor paupers and 2,406 outdoor, the cost having fallen for the latter to £6,807.

17. In 1893 the amount expended in out-relief was the lowest recorded during twenty-three years. In that year out-relief cost only £2,336 and the number of outdoor poor had gone down to 778.

18. Three years later, in 1896, the number of outdoor poor had grown to 954 and the cost £3,968. For the last year reported the number of outdoor poor was 1,683 and the yearly cost £6,325.

The Respective Merits of Indoor and Outdoor Relief.

19. Previous to the Local Government Act of 1894 a great deal was being said in various quarters to the effect that a change in the system of election of guardians would secure the appointment of men and women with very different ideas as to Poor Law administration. A strong point was made by these speakers that it would be much better for the ratepayers if more money were spent on out-relief, as it would result in a great saving in indoor expenditure.

20. It was distinctly pointed out by these agitators that this would be the policy of the new board.

21. The amount of relief has certainly gone up, and side by side there has been a considerable increase in indoor maintenance.

22. I have always been in favour of the system adopted by my board of sending married men, in times of temporary illness, direct to our infirmary for treatment, in preference to keeping them in their homes outside, and of allowing the wife and children out-relief whilst the head of the family was under medical treatment. This is a plan that has worked most beneficially to the poor, and very little difficulty is experienced in persuading them when temporarily ill to enter our workhouse infirmary for treatment.

23. Particulars were submitted to my infirmary committee some time ago by the master, showing that the stay in the infirmary of such cases was less in duration than under the old system before the sick were separated from ordinary inmates. I can rest content that everything is done in this parish to help the destitute poor, whether in indoor or outdoor relief.

24. I do not attend the meetings of the relief committees, but from the reports made to me from time to time I rather fear that we are too generous sometimes with the administration of out-relief, and that the reports of our relieving officers are not always acted upon.

25. I have had twelve years' association with the parish under what might be called a strict out-relief system, and twelve years where out-relief has been more freely given.

26. At one time the medical work connected with our out-relief department was discharged by six medical men, who were also allowed to have private practice. This was a most unsatisfactory arrangement and our sick poor were insufficiently looked after under it.

27. This did not improve in any direction, with the result that a Local Government Board inquiry was held, and the resignations of these officers were called for. Then the guardians decided to have medical men who could give their whole time to the destitute poor. They started with three men, and when one of them resigned it was felt that there was no cause to fill up his vacancy. I am glad to say that the outdoor medical department of this parish is as perfect as it can be made.

The Class of Persons applying for Relief.

28. These consist generally of labourers who get a casual living only, widows, children and aged people.

29. Improvidence in every direction. The persons who apply for relief have rarely ever made the slightest effort to secure assistance in time of bad trade or sickness. Many of them seem to make provision for burials, and at the time of the funeral they spend the whole of the money upon it, and within a few days the widow is making application for assistance, although she may within a week or ten days have already parted with a considerable sum of money in a reckless manner.

The Class of Persons seeking Election as Guardians.

30. This board consists of thirty-one gentlemen and five ladies.

31. The first thing that struck me on commencing service under the board in 1881 was the enormous amount of time given to the work by various members, and that has been a conspicuous fact ever since. The present Lord Mayor of Birmingham is a member of this board. He was chairman of it for a period of three years, and he has been chairman of the most important committees of the parish.

32. Amongst the remaining members of the board there are several magistrates, one or two professional men, but the greater number are in business of some kind or another. I do not think we can reckon upon more than two Labour candidates, and they certainly were not returned as such, so far as I can gather.

33. In order to obtain a seat on the board without opposition it is no doubt necessary to secure the approval of the three political organisations for that purpose. After an election is made, and the guardian is duly qualified, the question of politics never arises. It is almost impossible for any man, whatever may be his qualification for the position of guardian, to be elected single-handed. He must be "run" by one of the political associations.

Particulars as to Administration of Relief in the Parish.

34. The Out-Door Relief Prohibitory Order is not applicable to this parish, but in 1883 the board adopted a set of regulations very much on the lines laid down in this particular Order, and they were fairly adhered to for a number of years. After the election in 1894 they were slightly modified in the favour of more liberal out-door relief.

35. The outdoor relief department staff consists of the superintendent, two medical men, four relieving officers, one assistant relieving officer, and a pay clerk who also acts as a cross visitor, a dispenser and porters.

36. There are four district relief committees, which meet once a fortnight. The offices are open from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. Two resident male officers live on the premises, and should any urgent case arise, requiring a medical officer, they can immediately telephone to the medical officer of the district the name and address of the sick person he has to visit, and this has been found to be a most excellent arrangement for urgent cases being promptly attended.

Reforms in the Law or Practice suggested by Experience.

37. I am strongly of opinion, and so are members of my board, that the present Poor Laws, if properly administered, are sufficient to meet all the requirements of the destitute poor whether indoor or outdoor treatment is needed.

38. I should like to see the Law of Settlement amended so as to provide that in cases where parishes have been or may be divided, a person's settlement shall be deemed to be in that portion of the divided parish in which he or she shall reside at the time of the division.

39. I am fairly confident that the handing over of the Poor Law administration to county councils would be a mistake, as these bodies are already very much overworked.

The Effect of the Local Government Act of 1894; also the Political Influence on Poor Law Administration.

40. There has been a steady increase both of indoor and outdoor relief since the adoption of the Local Government Act of 1894.

41. As stated above, political influence is necessary to secure an election of guardians.

One Poor Law Area as to Birmingham.

42. In December, 1887, the Local Government Boundaries Act was passed, and Mr. G. F. Chambers, an Assistant Commissioner appointed under that Act, visited Birmingham to ascertain facts and to learn the views and wishes of the public bodies whose work might be affected by changes under the provisions of the Act. The Birmingham Guardians upon that occasion decided to advocate the parish of Birmingham being made co-extensive with the borough of Birmingham, the same to be still a single parish, and that there should be one rating authority so far as the Poor Rates were concerned.

43. The first conference was held in December, 1887, and at this conference evidence was given on behalf of the Birmingham Board of Guardians. The proposal was strongly opposed by neighbouring Poor Law authorities and other public bodies, and the city still remains, so far as the administration of the Poor Laws is concerned, under three boards of guardians. The objections to the one area was based mainly on account of anticipated increased rates.

44. The Birmingham Corporation as well as the Birmingham Guardians were desirous of securing unification of the borough for all purposes of assessment, rating, and collection. Since this time the borough of Birmingham has been very considerably enlarged by the taking in of some of the very districts opposed to annexation in 1887.

45. At the time of the enquiry the Birmingham Poor Law authorities possessed a separate infirmary and cottage homes and the up-keep of these two institutions to some extent accounted for the increased amount of poor rate in the parish of Birmingham as against the amount of the poor rates in the Aston and King's Norton Unions, where at that time neither authority had a separate infirmary or cottage homes in existence.

46. In my opinion there ought to be but one Poor Law authority for the city of Birmingham. I do not think there would be such a strong opposition to such a proposal as was the case in 1887.

APPENDIX No. CXXIX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. E. W. FORREST, SECRETARY OF THE BIRMINGHAM GENERAL DISPENSARY.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I have gained some experience on the Birmingham Board of Guardians, having been a member of the Workhouse Management Committee, House Sub-Committee, and the General Purposes Committee, and passed the chairs of No. 1 Relief Committee and of the Finance Committee. I was also invited to act as vice-chairman of the board, but as my time was fully occupied I did not seek re-election when the number of guardians was reduced some years since, and therefore no doubt the Commission will obtain more up-to-date information in regard to Poor Law administration than I should be able to give.

2. My remarks, therefore, will more particularly refer to the Birmingham General Dispensary, with which I have been connected for many years.

3. My father was appointed collector to the institution in 1859 and secretary in 1874, the duties of this office having been formerly discharged by the resident physician. I was appointed his successor in 1895, having been associated with him in the work of the institution for some years previously.

4. The institution was founded in 1793 for the medical and surgical relief of the poor inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood, either at the institution or at their own homes.

5. Tickets of recommendation are required for patients needing regular medical attention, but accidents, teeth extractions and emergencies are treated gratuitously and without ticket.

6. The principal feature peculiar to the institution is that patients unable to attend at their respective branch are visited at their own homes if within the prescribed boundary. The visiting boundaries are very extensive, going far beyond the city boundary.

7. There are at present five branch establishments, in addition to the original building in the centre of the city, each institution having two resident medical officers devoting their entire time to the services of the institution and a sixth branch is about to be erected upon land taken for this purpose at Smethwick.

8. A useful adjunct to the medical aid provided by the institution is the "Relief Fund" which enables the visiting medical officers to order where necessary such items of nourishment as milk, bovril, virol, etc.

9. Originally this fund was provided by special subscriptions which did not amount to £100 a year, and when these were exhausted the fund was closed for the time being, but at the present time a considerable sum is expended on relief of this kind, which eventually falls upon the general fund of the institution, notwithstanding the fact that £500 out of the annual grant from the Hospital Saturday Fund (formerly £1,000 and latterly £1,040) is specifically allotted to the relief fund.

10. The question of overlapping to my mind requires consideration here. The City of Birmingham Aid Society has just been established, with a view to work from one centre but with separate district committees the relief of the whole city, and especially as far as possible to avoid overlapping. I think a great deal might be done in this direction by further co-operation between existing agencies for the relief of distress.

11. I have heard it suggested that the dispensary and its relief fund lighten the work of the guardians, but I do not think that this is so to any appreciable extent. On the other hand I have somewhat resented a suggestion from a relieving officer that our visiting medical officer desired to get a patient removed to the infirmary in order to save himself the trouble of visiting such patient. The real fact I believe to have been as represented by our medical officer, namely, that it was impossible for the patient to receive requisite attention at home, and that such requisite attention could only be obtained in the infirmary. I do not think that the fact that a dispensary doctor has been called in to attend upon a patient whom he finds ought, very likely in the interests of the patient and other members of the household, to be removed to the infirmary, justifies the Poor Law authorities in refusing to take over such case until the month's treatment under the dispensary ticket has been completed.

12. The General Dispensary is supported by voluntary contributions, but has invested funds accumulated from legacies and donations received in past years. It has a large contingent of subscribers in common with other charities who receive tickets which they distribute to the deserving poor.

13. It also receives a large number of annual subscriptions from workmen's and other clubs, who distribute the tickets amongst their own members, who subscribe small sums in accordance with the rules of their respective clubs. It is always understood that tickets should be used only by those who are unable to provide themselves with medical aid in the ordinary way, and tickets are not allowed to be sold direct to patients.

14. The class, therefore, of persons assisted by the institution ranges from the very poor to the superior artisan. As indicated I am of opinion that further co-operation between the public authorities and the various voluntary agencies for the administration of relief, might be very beneficial and helpful in avoiding overlapping, but I do not think that one authority (necessarily administered by public officials) could undertake the whole work and duty of medical assistance to the poor, as I fail to see how the interests of the ratepayer and the poor could be satisfactorily guarded and adjusted by one and the same body, and many deserving poor would, in my opinion, be prejudiced against seeking relief, which they really needed, through what they might deem to be the harsh and unsympathetic nature of Poor Law administration.

15. My experience has not led me to the conclusion that the health of the community has suffered owing to the insufficiency in amount or quality of the medical assistance at present available for the poor in Birmingham

APPENDIX No. CXXX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MISS FANNY ELIZABETH FULLAGAR, LEICESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. For fifteen years I was on the Leicester Board of Guardians. In 1903 I was turned off by the Labour Party—according to them I had no sympathy with the poor, because I advocated stricter enquiries, and said the small struggling ratepayer should be considered.

2. The Charity Organisation Society Report will confirm what I have said about its work.

Charities and Voluntary Effort.

3. The most useful charity in the town is, to my mind, the Charity Organisation, because its chief aim is to help people to help themselves, and it benefits such numbers without pauperising them. Its object is not merely to detect imposture, but to help the bona fide cases of distress, either by pensions, or gifts of money, clothes, infirmary or dispensary tickets, sick diet, etc. Arrangements, too, are made and part of the expenses paid for invalids to go to convalescent homes; families wishing to emigrate are assisted. For some applicants work is found. In fact every case (which on the strictest investigation proves deserving of help) gets it, and all with very small office expenses, the work of that being shared by various ladies, to allow the agent and his assistant time to do their work outside.

4. There are numerous other charities:—The General Infirmary, the Blind Institution, the Cripple Guild, a branch of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Society, and several minor charities, many of which would do much more good if worked on the lines of the Charity Organisation Society.

5. The present board are in touch and co-operate with the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Society, the Charity.

Organisation Society, and the Indigent Old Age Society (which provides 6d. a week for respectable and very poor old people over seventy). They also subscribe to the general infirmary, a few convalescent and feeble-minded homes, for the benefit of some of those who apply for relief.

6. In a town of this size I see no possibility of substituting charity for out-relief.

7. I trust the day will come when old age pensions will be provided.

Poor Law Administration.

8. Our staple trades are shoe and hosiery. There are a large number of young people of both sexes employed in each, and, I regret to say, also a great many married women. Owing to new methods and machinery, a considerable number of adults, especially in the shoe trade, have been displaced, who can never go back to their ordinary employment. This is one of the causes of unemployment. A great many of them have drifted into labourers and form the bulk of the class of "out of works." It is absolutely essential for the welfare of our town that some fresh industries are found to absorb this surplus labour.

9. The advantage of outdoor relief over indoor is that the home is kept together. This is very desirable for old respectable people whose poverty is from no fault of their own—but lavish, indiscriminate outdoor relief is the cause of immeasurable harm. It does not lessen, as one would expect it would, the indoor relief, it lowers the rate of wages, and is one of the main causes of the sweating system. Men and women who know, whatever their character, that they can obtain outdoor relief merely by applying for it, deteriorate in character. They lose their self-respect and their independence.

10. With regard to indoor relief, unfortunately so much money is swallowed up by costly buildings, luxuriously fitted up.

If one was assured that in these "parochial palaces" the inmates liked the life, one would not grudge the great expense so much. They bear their lot patiently and uncomplainingly, but the necessary rules, the want of liberty, the monotony, the wearisome repetition of the food, generally lukewarm by the time they get it, the constant association with undesirable companions, makes their lot very hard, and in some cases pathetic. Then, too, many are at the mercy of the wardsmen or woman, and cannot get their bed made properly or their own clean things, without a regular tip! and they are still more at the mercy of the officers. Many, I am thankful to say, are most kind, but, alas! not all.

11. For the old people who have to take refuge in the workhouse, I should like to see more almshouses like those at the Fir Vale Workhouse, Sheffield, and managed in the same way.

12. People of bad character ought not to be given outdoor relief, nor deserted wives as a rule. With regard to widows with children, in some cases I should advise taking one or more of the children and placing them in cottage homes or schools, instead of giving outdoor relief. They are cases that require careful watching.

13. Of the classes of persons applying for relief there are the old, the infirm, and the sick. Old stockings, and middle-aged men who have been displaced by machinery, who would gladly work if they could get it, and last, not least, the thriftless idle loafer, who does not mean to work, who gambles, drinks, and attends races and football matches, and who expects his wife and children to keep him.

14. The chief causes of pauperism are decidedly drink (directly or indirectly), also gambling, and the introduction of machinery, lax administration of relief, and trade unions, which limit the output and minimise the wages.

15. The classes of persons seeking election as guardians are manufacturers and trades people.

16. With regard to reform in the "law," I wish—

(a) That guardians had the power to detain in the workhouse feeble-minded men and women. So long as they can go in and out just as they like, their number will go on increasing.

(b) That boards of guardians had also power to appoint fully trained midwives to attend the parish maternity cases scattered about in the town—that they should have the first order or summons, with the understanding that in any abnormal case they must send for the parish doctor.

Many of the poor women prefer having a woman at such times to a man—the midwives are more able and willing to wait patiently, and do not hasten matters as so many of the doctors do, etc. The system answered admirably when we had it some years ago. The poor mothers said they had never been so well seen to before, thanks to the interference of a medical man, who had nothing whatever to do with the Poor Law cases, and who never interfered when we had a drunken ignorant woman as midwife. The Local Government Board sent down word it was not to go on, and that in future the doctors were to have the orders and take charge of the cases.

17. With regard to the "practice" of boards of guardians:

(a) I should like to see them think more of what is for the real good of the people they have to deal with, and less of what effect their action will have on their next election. Since so many of the Labour Party were on the board they have threatened the other members often, by saying if they did not vote for such and such thing they should not get on at the next election, and as jelly-fish predominate, they have voted as directed. The present board are ready to give to anybody and everybody. It is so easy to do so with other people's money.

(b) I wish, too, very much they would try and check the numerous cases of wife desertion by taking a firmer stand and sending the wife and children to the union. So long as the men feel sure their homes will not be broken up, they will not hesitate to desert their wives whenever it suits them. I know it would be hard on the few, but I feel sure the result would be fewer desertions.

18. Another "practice" I disapprove of is the employing fully-trained nurses for the majority of our infirmary cases. A certain technical knowledge is required, but not three years' training. It is like putting a professor of languages to teach children their alphabet. The nurses lose ground by spending their time in nursing these cases, and they do not like the life—they object to such cases even in private nursing, where a present may be the result of kind attention. In a Poor Law infirmary there can be no such inducement. To my mind it is unreasonable to put fully-trained nurses to such work. The fifteen years I was on the board I always opposed having only fully trained ones. I preferred the plan in vogue some years ago of training our own. We had nice bright intelligent young women who took real interest in their patients, and who came as probationers "because they wished to help the poor in the town." Though they were not "fully trained" their patients lived far longer than under the present system. When the new infirmary was built, the "large wards, the beautiful air, the trained nurses," etc., were to do so much for the patients, but instead the deaths are more numerous in proportion.

APPENDIX No. CXXXI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. STEPHEN GATELEY, J.P., SOLICITOR, MEMBER AND EX-CHAIRMAN OF BIRMINGHAM BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I am a Justice of the Peace for the City of Birmingham.

I am now, and have been for the last fifteen years and upwards, a member of the Birmingham Board of Guardians. I have served on all the various committees of that board, either as an ordinary or ex-officio member, and also served for two years as chairman of the said Birmingham Board during the years 1898 and 1899.

2. As a member of the Roman Catholic community in Birmingham, I have for thirty-five years been a member, and now occupy the position of President of the Birmingham Central Council of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul. This society is one of the principal and most important organisations of the Roman Catholic body for the relief and amelioration of the wants of the poor, and its work is spread throughout the whole world. Its membership is principally that of the laity, supported and encouraged in every possible way by the bishops and clergy of the Roman Catholic Church. No work of charity is foreign to the society, although its special object is the visitation of poor families in their homes. In Birmingham and its immediate vicinity, we have nine conferences or branches of this society established in connection with nine of the Catholic missions or churches, embracing most of the poorest districts.

3. Each conference is governed by a president, one or more vice-presidents, a secretary, and a treasurer who form the committee of the conference, and there are active and honorary members, consisting of the clergy and laity attending the churches to which the conferences are attached. Meetings are held weekly; cases are recommended by the clergy, members of the congregation or from other sources and persons who have knowledge of the poor of the neighbourhood. One or more members of the conference are appointed at the meetings to visit the cases at their homes, and are required to report fully at the following meeting. A case form is supplied which gives all necessary information, and temporary relief is usually taken. The relief given is usually in kind rather than in money, tickets for bread, grocery, and coals on local tradesmen, or clothes or boots from the wardrobe, but there is no limit to the kind of relief distributed. The members at their weekly meetings decide what relief is to be granted and for what length of time. In accordance with their own desire, relief is seldom entrusted to the clergy to distribute.

4. Chronic cases are not usually entertained, the object of the society being to assist the poor over temporary difficulties, such as want of employment, sickness, accident, and the like, in addition to giving advice where such is needed, regard being had to the circumstances of each particular case.

5. The spirit of the society is never to hoard its funds, so that the conferences have no capital monies or investments whatsoever. If more funds were available, considerably more good work could be done. The cost of administration is infinitesimal, all the work undertaken by the members being quite voluntary. The visiting of the poor in their homes by the members is much appreciated, and in this respect contrasts favourably with the feeling deserving persons have towards the Poor Law system.

6. I now mention my experience as a Poor Law guardian in Birmingham.

7. I must readily testify to the good work which is performed by the relief committees.

8. I have seen the work done and can say with confidence that no hardship is inflicted upon the poor by the members of such relief committees, but the distinction to be drawn between the work of the Poor Law and such a society as I have mentioned is, that in the relief committees the members do not themselves visit the cases. This work is delegated to the relieving officers, who, although frequently excellent and well-intentioned men, do not sufficiently discriminate between the deserving and the undeserving poor. The cost of administration of out-relief under the Poor Law is also most costly in proportion to the amount actually expended in the relief of distress.

9. For these reasons I am of opinion that in the distribution of outdoor relief some dividing line should be followed.

10. For permanent and chronic cases of poverty and destitution, and where the home surroundings are unwholesome and inadequate, the existing machinery of the Poor Law might still be retained, but in the case of the deserving poor, such as the aged and infirm who have some one to look after and care for them, and more particularly for temporary cases arising from want of employment during periods of severe industrial depression, temporary sickness or accident, and indeed all cases where there is a fair prospect of improvement, then I think it would be better for them to be relieved by properly constituted and well managed aid societies and kindred organisations such as now exist in Birmingham and elsewhere, and to be aided by Government or local grants as supplementary to the monies which are at present subscribed by charitable persons and from various other voluntary sources.

11. To summarise what I have set forth in this statement, I am of opinion that:—

(1) The distribution of outdoor relief as at present existing under the Poor Laws is unsatisfactory.

(2) The cost of such administration is excessively heavy.

(3) The mode of application is repugnant to the deserving poor by reason of its being over-burdened with officialism.

(4) Poor Law guardians do not personally come into touch with the poor themselves by visitation at their homes, and therefore too much is left to the relieving officers.

(5) There is an absence of classification between the deserving and undeserving; the chronic from the temporary cases of destitution.

(6) A greater use should be made of the existing properly constituted and well managed aid or charitable organisations for the relief of distress.

(7) The more general visitation of the poor in their homes by voluntary workers rather than paid officials.

12. There are other Roman Catholic charities which do good work in Birmingham and the neighbourhood with which I am conversant, but I have not attempted to deal with them in this statement, as others will no doubt be asked to do so.

APPENDIX No. CXXXII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY WILFRED ERNEST GIBBONS, M.D., HONORARY SECRETARY, LEICESTER DIVISION OF THE BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. Experience and Qualification.—Five years' study in Edinburgh University; qualified M.B., C.M., 1896; six months' clinical study in London hospitals; one year assistant house-surgeon and house-surgeon to Professor of Surgery in Edinburgh; one year assistant in private practice in Carlisle, experience among better working-classes in constant employment (railwaymen, etc.), who were able to pay by fee for medical treatment.

2. On September 1st, 1900, I entered into partnership with a general practitioner in Leicester. From that time to December 31st, 1903, when I dissolved partnership, I was engaged in a very busy practice, chiefly among members of the Provident Dispensary and Foresters and Oddfellows' Friendly Societies. Hence during these years I had a very large and intimate experience of the leading provident medical institutions in Leicester and this work also kept me in constant touch with other agencies for medically assisting the poor.

3. Since December 31st, 1903, I have set my face against this form of practice, owing to the impossibility of dealing with the very numerous cases of abuse. While the treatment of the deserving and thrifty poor for a nominal remuneration brings with it great satisfaction, when the medical man can only engage in such practice, if he is content to have forced on him at the same low rate the treatment of the less self-respecting of the well-to-do, a feeling of disgust is apt to take possession of him which may seriously impair the quality of his work.

4. Preliminary.—The most important fact impressed upon me since beginning practice in Leicester has been the great and little-restrained abuse of medical charity. From this arise the main difficulties connected with the medical assistance of the poor. In a manufacturing town where so large a proportion of the population is composed of the working classes, the amount of medical work done must necessarily bring a comparatively low remuneration.

5. Therefore to earn a livelihood a medical man must attend many cases a day.

6. In Leicester so enormous is the proportion of those obtaining medical assistance at a dispensary rate (i.e. on a basis of an insurance of 1d. per week or less) that there are many medical men living mainly on such contract work.

7. The remuneration works out at so small a figure per attendance (probably not more than 6d.) that to make a bare living such a medical man must attend a number of cases per diem far in excess of the maximum number of cases he is able to treat satisfactorily.

8. From this cause, medical assistance to the poor often falls short of what a case deserves, and the correct early diagnosis of a case—curable perhaps in the early stages only—is liable to be missed by a medical man who may be able and conscientious, but who is suffering from the pressure of work he feels he is unable to relinquish, it being perhaps his only means of subsistence.

9. The point I wish to bring out is this—that this state of things is brought about entirely by the great abuse of medical charity referred to above.

10. There is a large proportion of persons obtaining medical assistance in the general infirmary (chiefly the out-patient department), the Provident Dispensary, and the many medical clubs connected with friendly societies, who are well able to pay small or larger fees.

11. If some means could be found to check this widespread abuse, and to prevent persons of this class throwing themselves on medical charity, and making use of these institutions, which they were never intended to use, the real poor who avail themselves of them could receive medical assistance more approximate to that which it is the ardent desire of the members of the medical profession to give.

I.—AGENCIES IN LEICESTER FOR ASSISTING THE POOR.

A.—Municipal.

(a) *Sanitary Authority.

12. Isolation Hospital chiefly for the benefit of the poor. A ward is set apart for pulmonary tuberculosis, in which patients are retained for short periods of a few weeks. This plan is of great educational value, in that it gives the patients a chance of learning how to treat themselves.

13. Milk Depot lately established after the approval of the profession in conference with the Sanitary Committee. This is of great use in the many cases of digestive diseases in infants, caused by improper and unclean feeding.

14. Diphtheria Antitoxin is provided free of charge.

15. Bacterial Examination is carried out free of charge in doubtful cases.

16. Two Female Inspectresses are employed, whose duty it is to visit cases of pulmonary tuberculosis among the poor, and instruct the patients or those having charge of them in matters concerning avoidance of spreading infection, etc.

(b) Education Authority.

17. It is the duty of the medical officer under this authority to medically inspect school children, referring them for treatment elsewhere. Many cases are thus placed under treatment much earlier than they otherwise would be.

B.—The Poor Law Authority.

18. I leave this part of the subject to be dealt with by Dr. MacAlister Hewlings, who is far better qualified to speak on the subject than I am.

C.—Voluntary Effort, etc.

(a) The Leicester Infirmary.

19. The following statistics show the amount of work done by the Infirmary:—

Number of beds:—

Male, medical	-	-	-	-	-	26
„ surgical	-	-	-	-	-	44
Female, medical	-	-	-	-	-	26

Number of in-patients treated last year:—

Adult	-	-	-	-	-	2,408
Children	-	-	-	-	-	540

2,958

Number of out-patients treated last year, 24,037.

Number of operations performed last year:—

Out-patients	-	-	-	-	-	1,397
In-patients	-	-	-	-	-	-
Surgery	-	-	-	-	-	-

20. Dr. Sevestre, assistant physician to the infirmary, will be able to speak from the point of view of one connected with the institution.

21. To me, as a general practitioner unconnected with the hospital, certain facts seem worthy of being brought forward.

* I have only made brief mention and comment under this heading. The Medical Officer of Health is submitting a statement.

22. In the in-patient department the demand for beds is nearly always, if not always, in excess of the supply.

23. In the out-patient department the pressure of work on the honorary staff is very great.

24. The number of out-patients has in recent years increased yearly out of all proportion to the population.

	Out-patients.	Population.
1895 - - - -	15,133	193,839
1898 - - - -	18,062	208,662
1901 - - - -	20,301	211,574
1904 - - - -	31,410	224,186

25. The two years following, however, the numbers have decreased, probably owing to the action of the board in appointing a house governor, one of whose duties is to enquire into cases of abuse. Another cause is no doubt improved trade.

1905 - - - - 29,745 Out-patients.

26. The figure for 1906 needs correction to bring it into comparison with those of other years. Renewed recommendations have not been counted as formerly. This will probably increase the number by from 3,000 to 4,000.

27. There is a constant appeal to the public for funds. In this state of constant pressure on the resources of the institution it follows that the real poor must suffer from the wrongful use of the hospital by those able to obtain treatment elsewhere. A bed occupied by one of these means a bed less for one of the real poor. In the out-patient department abuse means the robbing the poor of the time of the staff.

28. Many patients already provided for in the dispensaries and friendly societies make use of the out-patient department. The proportion of such to total out-patients has been estimated at over 26 per cent.

29. The families of workmen earning high and regular wages throw themselves on charity quite irrespective of their inability or otherwise to pay for treatment.

30. A main reason for this is undoubtedly the weekly collections in aid of the Infirmary from workmen and women in factories. These engender in the donors the idea that they have a right to call on the infirmary for free treatment.

31. What at the time of collection are contributions to charity, at the time of sickness become insurance premiums very much in favour of the insured.

32. Cases chargeable to the guardians are frequently sent to the infirmary for treatment, e.g., cases of accident for which provision is made by the Poor Law.

33. The guardians subscribe to the infirmary £31 10s. per annum, drawing on its resources to many times the amount.

34. It is my opinion that the great majority of cases at present treated in the out-patient department might and ought to be treated elsewhere, some in the dispensaries and friendly societies, others under the Poor Law, while a not insignificant proportion are able to pay ordinary private fees.

35. Treatment of cases coming under the Workmen's Compensation Act should be paid for by the employers and not by means of subscriptions to charity.

36. If it be possible to effect this reform, the strain on the institution financially and otherwise will be removed, and the infirmary will be more adequate to the needs of the real poor.

(b) Provident Dispensary.

37. Number of members, 50,798. Payments of members: 1d. per week, adults; $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per week, children; $3\frac{1}{2}$ d. per week, family. Payments to medical men, a little over 2s. per head per annum.

38. The provident dispensary has been and is, of the greatest assistance to the thrifty poor. The lines on which it works, in theory if not in practice, are, I believe, sound. It has, however, a tendency to spread its net too far, taking in members who—in view of the smallness of the contribution—are in too good a position to make use of the institution. In the past, however, when the manager was given a commission on admissions, the abuse was far greater than at present. The dispensary patient frequently seeks aid for the most trifling conditions, and the amount of medicine consumed is out of all proportion to the amount of advice taken.

39. In connection with the dispensary are:—

(1) A small Cottage Hospital of five beds. The beds are available for members on payment of a small sum weekly. Surgical operations are carried out on members in this hospital at modified fees.

(2) A Maternity Hospital of about the same capacity.

(c) People's Dispensary.

40. Number of members, about 9,000. Rates as in Provident Dispensary.

(d) Friendly Societies' Medical Departments of Clubs.

41. A very large number of the poorer classes provide for themselves in case of sickness through the friendly societies.

42. They, with few exceptions, pay for their medical assistance and medicine on a basis of an insurance of 1d. per week.

43. The valuable work done by these societies in teaching the poor to help themselves cannot be too highly commended. It is unfortunately in dealing with them that the medical man's difficulties are greatest. Those claiming medical assistance are by no means only of the thrifty working classes. The medical man undertaking work for these societies frequently has forced upon him the treatment of well-to-do shopkeepers, publicans, commercial travellers and manufacturers. I do not wish it to appear that I am dealing with this subject of the abuse of the charity of the medical profession with reference to the effect on the medical profession. That aspect of the subject is foreign to my reference, and can only be dealt with by the Profession.

44. Its relation, however, to the medical assistance of the poor I have indicated under "Preliminary," also under Section IV. This relationship is a very real one.

45. Many trivial cases come for treatment. The societies must lose a large sum annually by members drawing sick pay, who would not consider themselves ill had they to pay for medical attendance.

46. The over-insured are specially prone to illness preventing work.

47. The societies in Leicester and their membership, so far as I have been able to ascertain them in the very limited time at my disposal, will be found in Appendix Vol. CXXXII. (A).

II.—THE EXTENT TO WHICH THE AGENCIES FOR ASSISTING THE POOR IN LEICESTER OVERLAP, AND THE QUESTION OF CO-OPERATION.

48. There is but little overlapping between the two dispensaries, and the friendly societies' clubs. In many cases the father of a family obtains treatment through a friendly society, while the wife and children are members of a dispensary. Several small friendly societies utilize the Provident Dispensary as their medical department, becoming, for the purpose of our classification, dispensary patients.

49. Between the dispensaries and friendly societies' clubs on the one hand, and the infirmary out-patient department on the other hand, there is very great overlapping, as mentioned under heading "Infirmary," the number of the patients of these provident institutions who were discovered being 26 per cent.

50. There is no co-operation.

51. As indicated above, the great majority of patients at present treated in the out-patient department of the infirmary could and ought to obtain medical assistance elsewhere, chiefly in the dispensaries and friendly societies' clubs.

52. The out-patient department, in my opinion, should only continue to exist for special cases, e.g., such operation cases as are able to be treated in an out-patient department; emergency cases, which should be subsequently handed over to the ordinary medical attendant; cases requiring treatment by specialists on the eye, ear, or throat, only those patients being treated who are unable to pay a modified fee for treatment at a dispensary; cases requiring special expensive apparatus, for example, Röntgen Ray apparatus. Cases of the real poor might be sent by medical men for consultation.

53. If these suggestions were carried out, the out-patient department of the infirmary and the dispensaries would be complementary, and might work in close co-operation.

III.—THE POSSIBILITY OF HANDING OVER TO ONE AUTHORITY OR AGENCY THE WHOLE WORK AND DUTY OF MEDICAL ASSISTANCE TO THE POOR.

54. I see no insuperable difficulty in handing over to one authority the management of all the institutions at present under the Town Council or guardians, and with them the dispensaries.

55. If the friendly societies could be prevailed upon to drop their medical department entirely, the poorer members would have no difficulty in obtaining medical assistance in the institutions under this authority.

56. The Leicester Infirmary is a county as well as a borough institution, and this fact presents a difficulty.

57. It would perhaps be feasible to place the management under a joint committee of the borough and county authority. It would appear that the natural authority is that which has charge of the finance of the borough or county, in other words the existing borough or county authority.

58. As to the advisability of the course indicated, I am not at present prepared to hazard an opinion.

IV.—THE QUESTION AS TO WHETHER THE HEALTH OF THE COMMUNITY SUFFERS OWING TO THE INSUFFICIENCY IN AMOUNT OR QUALITY OF THE MEDICAL ASSISTANCE AT PRESENT AVAILABLE FOR THE POOR.

59. I have indicated sufficiently under 'Preliminary Remarks' the way in which the amount of medical assistance to the poor is encroached on, and how the quality is impaired, especially with reference to the provident institutions.

60. Under heading "Infirmary" I have suggested that conditions at any rate fall far short of the ideal.

61. To sum up, I submit:—

(a) That the amount of medical assistance provided for the poor in Leicester is ample.

(b) That the quality of that assistance provided is essentially good, far better than ever before.

(c) That the number of persons other than the poor encroaching on those provisions is very large.

(d) That this widespread abuse robs the poor of what has been provided for them.

(e) That if the abuse could be eradicated, the problem of the medical assistance to the poor would be in great measure solved.

* The one exception to this is in relation to the provision of medical assistance at night. In cases of urgency at night a person of the poorer class may have considerable difficulty in obtaining assistance. It is unreasonable to expect a "doctor" to forego his rest after a heavy day's work—and to forego it without remuneration—perhaps many nights in the year. Such would be the lot of a medical man in a poor district if he showed himself willing to answer every call of apparent urgency. Hence the poor may occasionally have considerable difficulty in obtaining assistance at night and members of the medical profession incur unmerited censure. A night service such as that in operation in Paris would supply this deficiency, and with telephonic communication be of easy accomplishment.

APPENDIX No. CXXXII. (A).

From shortness of time and other reasons I have been unable to complete this list. Had it been possible to do so, I doubt not that it would show that the number of persons obtaining medical assistance in Leicester at a dispensary rate would not fall far short of 100,000 or nearly half of the population. Those habitually receiving medical assistance at such a rate or lower (add those who habitually are treated under the Poor Law or in free institutions) from probably more than one-half the population.

National Deposit Friendly Society, 2,800. Members pay a higher rate to the society who pay by fee.

The figures relating to the infirmary have been obtained directly from the secretary.

The figures in the preceding Return in nearly all cases from the various secretaries. The secretary to the Foresters, however, refused to give them. I was, however, enabled to procure them from a reliable source.

APPENDIX No. CXXXIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY THE REV. A. M. HARPER, M.A., VICAR OF ST. MATTHEW'S, LEICESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I have no qualification for dealing with this subject beyond twenty-three years' work among the working-classes, eight of which have been spent in two of the poorest parishes in Leicester. Experience only leads me to emphasize conclusions often stated by others.

2. At present, in a district like this, the Poor Law is strained to meet cases which need a different treatment, while on the other hand the Church system is strained to meet cases to which it does not properly apply.

3. We need :—

(a) The strengthening of the Poor Law by some further means of dealing with those—here a considerable number—who are in chronic need through idleness, vice, or minor incapacity. The workhouse test is impracticable; the labour test ineffective and non-remedial. Something more is wanted—say, power to send men to labour settlements which should be in part of a semi-penal character. No real progress is possible without this.

(b) The municipal organisation of charity on a large scale. Charity given on social grounds (i.e. fellow-membership in the civil community) should be organised by the civil community. This would meet a large number of the cases now dealt with by out-relief, and a stricter administration of the Poor Law would be less difficult.

4. Apart from the duty of contributing to such a general fund, religious organisations as such could then confine their charity to the task of helping bona fide members of the church. This limitation is impossible at present; and the poor fund of a large poor parish is a source of endless difficulty.

5. The respective effect on the recipients of charity and out-relief may as far as my experience goes be roughly summarised as follows :—

Effect of	Charity, sym- pathetic.	"Charity," (bare gifts)	Out-relief.
On persons of good character	Good.	Bad.	Good.
On persons of indif- ferent character	Dis- appointing	Lowering.	Lowering.
On persons of bad character	—	Bad.	Bad.

APPENDIX No. CXXXIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. W. E. HINCKS, SECRETARY, CHARITY ORGANISA- TION SOCIETY, MEMBER OF TOWN COUNCIL, AND OF DISTRESS COMMITTEE, ETC., LEICESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I was from 1897 to 1903 Secretary for Leicester Branch Amalgamated Society of Engineers. For seven years member of Leicester Trade Council, a member of Executive and one year President. Since 1900 a member of Town Council. Since 1903 secretary of Charity Organisation Society. At present occupying two last positions. Am a governor of Leicester Infirmary. Am on committee Leicester Saturday Hospital Fund, committee Church Army, and several other charitable societies.

Poor Law Administration.

2. Of recent years there have been great changes in the boot and shoe and the hosiery trades in Leicester. Machinery has been introduced by which production has been immensely accelerated. In the former trade there has been almost incessant friction between the men's union and employers' federation. This has aggravated the depression caused by the introduction of machinery. Good wages are earned by boys at this trade. This has led to the trade being over supplied with labour. This surplus is particularly felt when the age of the workers makes it necessary to claim the minimum wage demanded by the union. As a consequence many men at twenty years of age are dismissed and never again take up the trade. Some become labourers, some insurance agents, but the majority depend almost entirely on casual labour and drift lower and lower into the "unemployable." About two years ago a "Piecework Statement" was agreed upon by employers and men. This has tended to reduce the friction. The men have earned much better wages. Production has received a further impetus. The working "season" still further reduced. In spite of this boys are still put to the trade in equally large numbers. They still earn good wages. This tends to habits of carelessness and improvidence with the majority. Girls and women also earn good wages in this trade, which creates a preference for warehouse life over that of home life, for many married women continue to work after their marriage.

3. What has been said of the boot trade in the main applies to the hosiery trade. The relations between employers and employed, however, have been much more friendly, the disputes being generally settled by conference.

4. For some five or six years there has been serious depression in the building trades. This is due to the fact that from about 1875 to 1900 these trades were remarkably busy. Besides schools, public buildings, factories, houses of all grades were built in very large numbers with the result that to-day there are from 2,000 to 3,000 empty houses. It should be pointed out that the greater half of these are situated in the lower parts of the town and probably never will again be occupied. Ten years ago they were tenanted by the artisan class. To-day the artisan class are able to get much better property more favourably situated. The difference in the houses of the working classes to-day as compared with ten to fifteen years ago is a remarkable testimony to the general improvement of the social condition of the town.

5. There are very large spinning mills (wool and worsted) which employ great numbers of women. If a careful investigation of "woman labour" was made with a view to eliciting how it affected the general well-being of the town and its effect on male labour, there cannot be any doubt that it would prove to be seriously detrimental. There is a large amount of general engineering and machine building done in Leicester. There must be over 3,000 workmen employed. This trade is steady and subject to little fluctuation.

6. There are many other trades, but the majority of them are not large enough seriously to affect the general condition of the town. Upon the condition of the boot and shoe, the hosiery, and the building trades depends the social condition of Leicester.

7. It should be said that serious as has been the building trades depression, the majority of the workmen have not and would not seek either Poor Law or charitable relief. They are well-organised in their respective unions, most of which have unemployed benefit of at least 10s. a week for twelve to fourteen weeks. Besides this they are men of good type, independent and self-reliant and more or less provident.

8. This does not apply to the boot and shoe trade to the same extent. Until a year or so ago this union had no unemployed benefit. The members now are paying extra contribution to enjoy such a benefit. This must have a most beneficial effect upon the town as well as upon the individual members.

9. The hosiery union makes no provision for unemployment except that a grant is made to men displaced by machinery.*

10. Certain sections of Leicester people consider the condition of the town to be socially and industrially bad to an extreme degree. There is poverty, but not in any way so widespread as these people make out. It is confined to a section, a somewhat numerous section, whom it would be utterly impossible effectually to relieve. Many are unskilled, perhaps 95 per cent., and many unemployable. As a set-off it should be pointed out that there is a very large number of artisans who are regular depositors in the building societies, and the savings banks, who are members of various friendly and thrift societies. This class of artisan is also responsible for a large distributive co-operative undertaking and many smaller productive societies.

11. With full knowledge of the condition of Leicester's poverty, as well as its brighter side just referred to, there is, in my opinion, no justification for Leicester being considered as a town with peculiar problems or a town particularly poverty-stricken.

12. Leicester Board of Guardians has endeavoured to provide work for the unemployed (able-bodied) on labour test. This is peculiar to Leicester if a return issued by the board some two and a half years ago is reliable. This return discovered that Leicester had more able-bodied paupers than the six largest towns in England combined.

13. An attempt was made to "provide work for the unemployed." The guardians thought men might be temporarily helped over an interval of unemployment. Stick-chopping proved inadequate to occupy the number who applied. Land was hired for potato-growing. The experiment has hopelessly failed, financially a loss. But the most serious part of the failure is that of the idea of "temporary employment," for men once on do not get off very quickly. Many are on six months, some a year, and some even two years.

14. With regard to the respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief I think there should be more classification of the indoor poor: outdoor relief should be abolished except in special cases to be submitted to Local Government Board.

15. The following are some of the more potent causes of pauperism:—

(a) Guardians advising unemployed gatherings to apply.

(b) Guardians and clergymen of all denominations, district visitors of all denominations, etc., urging people to apply.

(c) Indifference to reports of relieving officers.

(d) Attempts of guardians to lower the relieving officers in public estimation.

(e) General laxity on the part of relief committees respecting investigations.

(f) Relief of cases far removed from destitution.

16. The class of persons seeking election as guardians is chiefly composed of persons in no way conversant with history or practice of Poor Law relief, whose only idea is to "relieve distress," without any conception as to the effect of "relief," because they are Liberals, Conservatives or Labour men; because they have a "bit of time on their hands."

17. The following are the more important suggestions that I would make for a reform in the Poor Law or its practice:—

(a) Case papers instead of books.

(b) Keener and authoritative inspection by Local Government Board.

(c) More authority given to relieving officers and clerks.

(d) Cross visiting.

(e) More care respecting earnings of family.

(f) Stringent regulations as to limitations of guardians.

(g) Guardians to be financially responsible in case of surcharges.

(h) Abolition of labour test.

(i) " " out-relief to able-bodied men.

(j) Guardians should be compelled to prosecute paupers who are proved to have deliberately deceived Guardians respecting income, &c.

Unemployment.

18. It is not possible to speak with any degree of accuracy as to the extent of unemployment. There are a good number of artisans who would never register at Distress Committee's office, and there are undoubtedly many men registered by Distress Committee who are on the labour test, some who never can be said to have regularly worked. Actually on the Distress Register at the present time there are 1,323 men. One-third of registered men have lived in Leicester under five years.

On labour test, 240. The exact number of organised trades unionists could be given, but to get the facts would require considerable time. (Alderman Thomas Smith, Chairman of Distress Committee, who is also the Labour Correspondent of Board of Trade, could speak on this point).

19. As to the class of men it is also difficult to speak. Of the men on distress register and labour test, they are practically all unskilled men.

See following list issued by Distress Committee, January 31st:—

20. The boot and shoe are to some extent skilled men. But they cannot be called skilled in the sense of a carpenter or a mechanic being skilled. Few of them could make a boot outright, having been trained to perform one operation only.

Of the number put down as "Building" and "Engineering," none of them are really skilled men.

The "inquiry" made is not sufficient for exact and reliable description of class of men out of work.

21. As to the working of the Unemployed Workmen Act, there has unquestionably been a great financial loss. A number of men were set upon a tract of land, spade digging for potato growing—a season's work almost without financial result, the crop of potatoes for some cause or other being unfit for consumption. A sale of £500 was anticipated, but not more than £100 will be realised. Exact figures cannot yet be given, as balance sheet is not forthcoming.

* There is no fixed unemployed benefit.

22. At the present time better work is being done, the men being engaged on sewerage and draining. This also is estimated to cost about one-third more than if done in the ordinary way and by men accustomed to such work.

Medical Assistance of the Poor.

23. The Poor Law authority provides indoor hospital treatment for nearly all ailments other than those requiring operations. These are performed at the Leicester Infirmary (voluntary). There are six medical officers engaged to deal with the persons requiring treatment outside the institutions.

24. The Leicester Infirmary maintained by subscriptions and by Saturday Hospital Fund (of which full information has been given to Commission by the secretary) deals with all afflictions, eye, ear, throat, etc. There are few sectional hospitals. The principal one (practically the only one) is the Leicester Institution for Diseases of the Skin) voluntary subscriptions. Where possible patients pay little. All doubtful cases sent to Charity Organisation Society for inquiry. The Provident Dispensary has upwards of 52,000 subscribers or members. There are two other similar institutions, particulars of which could easily be obtained. The friendly societies have their own dispensaries. Many doctors have their own clubs. All these institutions and clubs are maintained mainly by the artisan and labouring classes.

25. There is little overlapping, and this is known to the institutions concerned. The medical staff at the infirmary consider that steps should be taken to regulate dispensary and Poor Law patients receiving recommendations for treatment at infirmary. They willingly co-operate but would be glad to be sure that the officers of dispensaries and Poor Law know that their patients attend infirmary as out-patients.

26. The possibility of handing over to one authority the whole work and duty of medical assistance to the poor is, I think, very remote.

27. The health of the community suffers only in respect of lack of indoor accommodation at infirmary. This is being remedied. Could give exact particulars.

Charity and Voluntary Effect.

28. There is a difference between the effects of charity and Poor Law relief which depends entirely on the management of the charitable societies. Poor Law relief undoubtedly, as given here, creates a desire to live on relief and is generally detrimental to the recipient. Some of the charitable societies, loosely managed, are equally injurious.

29. From the point of view of one engaged in charitable work the following are some of my criticisms of Poor Law methods:—

(a) No attempt to inculcate independence.

(b) Nearly all applicants relieved, few adequately.

(c) No attempt made to compel family responsibility even where there is legal liability.

(d) Little distinction made between householders and the occupants of "furnished rooms" or lodgers.

(e) Medical orders obtained too easily.

(f) Medical relief (beef, milk, etc.) too easily given.

(g) Out-door relief given where one of the family is afflicted with consumption.

(h) Inadequate investigations.

(i) Officers overburdened, some being responsible for 1,000 cases.

30. Guardians show readiness to co-operate. There is great opportunity for extension, but fear guardians as at present constituted would not be over ready for such extension. Despite their readiness to co-operate they are jealous of co-operation as they at present consider themselves the authority for dealing with the "poor" rather than with the destitute.

31. With respect to the question of the possibility of substituting charity for out-relief it appears to me that without definite reasons for believing that charity could meet all the demands made upon it, there is reason enough to justify such an experiment being attempted.

APPENDIX No. CXXXV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. D. G. HOLLAND, MEMBER OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS AND OF DISTRESS COMMITTEE, LEICESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. As a guardian of the Leicester Union for twenty-five years, I very briefly submit the following observations.

Social and Industrial Conditions.

2. We have had very severe depression in the shoe trade—one of our staple industries—which has caused a great amount of poverty, and to-day, although things are better, there being a very large out-turn of goods, there are fewer people employed. One result has been that two families are living in one house, which, in my opinion, does not tend to decency or morality, besides being a great loss to the rates. We have to-day over 3,000 empty properties.

Experiments in Poor Law.

3. We obtained powers to acquire land, and during the past three years we have had 47 acres under cultivation, principally for men with families. In some cases I am sure it has been a great help to those employed. It has also relieved our streets of a great many who could only be described as undesirable. We also rent a factory, where men unfitted for work on the land are employed in stick-chopping. The number of men employed last week in all branches was 271. This, I should say, represents, with their families, 884 persons.

Indoor and Outdoor Relief.

4. I favour outdoor relief where some provision has been made, such as clubs, etc., and I look upon it as one of our best means of classifying.

Classes of Persons applying for Relief.

5. A very large number of widowers and widows apply, but where there are children earning, everything is considered before granting relief. The saddest cases are young widows left with two or three young children, and nothing to rely upon. I should hesitate before giving an order for the House, if the mother was a worthy person.

Causes of Pauperism.

6. Improvidence, aggravated by intemperance in many cases.

Class of Person seeking Election.

7. The second-rate middle class. I have noticed during the time I have been on the board, a great deterioration in its members, and I think it is due to the qualification of guardians being removed. It used to be a pleasure to associate with the gentlemen forming the board a few years ago, and I feel that some test of fitness should be imposed.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. JOHN W. HOWITT, SUPERINTENDENT RELIEVING OFFICER FOR FIFTEEN YEARS AT ASTON, DISTRICT RELIEVING OFFICER FOR TWELVE YEARS AT LEEDS, AND ASSISTANT IN THE UNION CLERKS' OFFICE THERE FOR THIRTEEN YEARS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

THE SOCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS IN ASTON UNION.

1. For union purposes the social and industrial conditions may be termed ideal, embracing as they do:—
(1) More than a half of the Birmingham "slums";
(2) a huge population of respectable artisans; and (3) a very large area of agricultural land and suburban residences.

PARTICULARS AS TO PECULIARITIES OR EXPERIMENTS IN POOR LAW ADMINISTRATION.

2. Leeds and Aston.—Forty years ago and ever since Leeds has relieved able-bodied men, giving them test labour. Aston has not done so, and does not maintain in the workhouse as large a number of able-bodied men. Forty years ago at Leeds the scale of outdoor relief was 2s. 6d. and 3s. for a single person. At Aston it was, up to eleven years ago, 1s. 6d.; still the poor seemed as comfortably off as at Leeds, and the indoor poor was less than the average. The scale at Aston has since been raised to 2s. 6d. and 3s. for a single person, but experienced relieving officers fail to detect any improvement in the appearance or surroundings of the poor, neither has it reduced the number of admissions to the workhouse, indeed more people give up outdoor relief and enter the workhouse than formerly.

3. Aston Outdoor Relief.—A chart indicating the ebb and flow of this is appended, and constitutes one of the most peculiar object lessons in Poor Law administration. Twice, changes in the staff have brought about amazing reductions in both numbers and amount, and others made in 1879 and 1906 checked a constant upward tendency. (See Appendix No. CXXXVI. (A.)).

4. Wives and Families of Prisoners and Deserters.—This class has been barred from receiving outdoor relief except in special cases by resolution of the board of twenty years ago. However, about 1894 the Relief Committees commenced to ignore it, or rather to make all cases special ones, and from 1895 to 1901 relieved 742 such persons. The board then re-asserted its resolution, since when no such cases have been relieved out of the workhouse, and no increase of admissions has taken place. Seventy-two persons were on the relief list at the time, but not one entered the workhouse.

5. The Leeds weekly outdoor relief was once reduced £30 in three months by guardians changing committees.

THE RESPECTIVE MERITS OF INDOOR AND OUTDOOR RELIEF.

6. I advocate both, but am of opinion that wherever the number of each class is approximately equal there will be found the best administration. See Paragraph 8.

THE CLASSES OF PERSONS APPLYING FOR RELIEF.

7. The men are nearly all of the labouring class, such as carters, excavators, foundry labourers, etc., and the aged men mostly seek admission to the workhouse. The women are generally widows—young ones, with a family, and aged. They oftener seek outdoor relief. I append a classification of workhouse inmates which bears on this point. (See Appendix No. CXXXVI. (B.)).

THE CAUSES OF PAUPERISM.

8. The chief contribution to official pauperism is maladministration of outdoor relief.

The pauperism in the Aston union has always been low both as regards indoor as well as outdoor. Its poor are relieved about equally in and out.

To test whether this ratio produces a low rate of pauperism in other unions as well, I extracted from the Return of Pauperism on July 1st, 1906—just published—the statistics of twenty unions where the in and outdoor paupers nearly approximated, leaving out Whitechapel, Birmingham, etc., where abnormal circumstances produce abnormal proportions.

The indoor paupers in these unions numbered 24,058 and the outdoor 29,576. The population of these unions, in 1901 was 3,181,375—nearly one-tenth of that of England and Wales.

If the whole of England and Wales had its relief administered on the same lines, the paupers would be reduced by 195,163. In other words, 35 per cent. of the pauperism is, in my opinion, created by maladministration of outdoor relief.

The unions I refer to above are scattered over the country and are Aston, Atcham, Bath, Bradfield, Bradford, Brighton, Coventry, Ecclesall Bierlow, Gateshead, Guildford, Oldham, Portsmouth, Preston, Reading, Rochdale, Salford, Sheffield, Stamford, Toxteth Parks and West Derby.

9. The causes of legitimate pauperism are inability to work from old age, impossibility of providing for that condition out of the earnings of unskilled men, the increasing neglect of aged parents by sons and daughters, and the readiness with which guardians now take charge of them.

10. I know cases of thriftlessness, drunkenness and vice, but I am sure they form a very small proportion of the pauperism of Aston.

THE CLASS OF PERSONS SEEKING ELECTION AS GUARDIANS.

11. The persons seeking election as guardians are chiefly tradesmen, retired or still in business, ladies, and an increasing number of labour leaders.

PARTICULARS AS TO THE ADMINISTRATION OF RELIEF IN THE UNION.

12. Relief Staff.—A superintendent relieving officer, five district relieving officers, one assistant relieving officer for lunatics and one resident assistant relieving officer for urgent applications.

13. Administrations.—Medical relief is, as in most unions, entirely in the hands of the relieving officers. Admission to the workhouse largely, and of necessity, rests with the relieving officers, though the guardians direct that where possible they shall be allowed to deal with them. The outdoor relief is almost solely administered by the guardians by means of five relief committees who meet fortnightly. The indoor relief is as carefully administered as the outdoor through a Revision Committee with the superintendent relieving officer in attendance. The amount of relief granted is generally 2s. 6d. per aged person and 1s. 6d. per child of a widow. The 6d. is given as bread. Applications of any kind are rarely refused. Sick men are relieved in the infirmary and outdoor relief given to the family. Single women with children and able-bodied widows with a single child are not relieved outside. The wives and families of prisoners and deserters are only relieved in the workhouse.

14. The relieving officers' duties are confined to relief work and collecting money from relatives. They do not pay the poor nor remove lunatics.

15. I, as superintendent relieving officer, make myself acquainted by visiting, with all new cases for outdoor relief, and attend all relief committee meetings when possible. The guardians, however, cannot conveniently meet at times enabling me to attend all, so that for years past, with a few months' interval, I have been prevented attending more than one committee. I can now attend two. When the relief was reduced from £5,400 to £2,600 in the early nineties I was attending them all (3). My influence on the relief now is to a large extent limited to advising the relieving officers after making my own enquiries.

16. I have no suggestions to make for the reform of the Poor Law or its practice. I know that sometimes the Orders work harshly, but it has become an axiom that the bane of all Poor Law administration has been legislating for the exceptional.

TRADES UNIONISM AND WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT AS CAUSES OF PAUPERISM.

17. I should say that the former does not conduce to pauperism for by maintaining a high rate of wages, aged people can be kept from it by means of their children, and how far their system of protection against an excess of workers is injurious by forcing men into the unskilled market is problematical.

18. Aged men I believe have come to us sooner and more numerously since the passing of the Compensation Act. This has arisen from the employers' anxiety to obviate claims and also that middle aged men sooner despair of obtaining work, feeling no doubt that the Act militates against their chance of success.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY SAMUEL EBENEZER JOHNSON, L.S.A., LONDON, L.M., AND L.R.C.S., EDINBURGH, MEDICAL OFFICER AND PUBLIC VACCINATOR OF THE SOUTH-EASTERN DISTRICT OF THE KING'S NORTON UNION (TWENTY YEARS). ALDERMAN OF THE CITY OF BIRMINGHAM, JUSTICE OF THE PEACE OF THE COUNTY OF WORCESTER.

MEDICAL ASSISTANCE OF THE POOR

1. As to the agencies for medically assisting the poor in and around the City of Birmingham :—

(a) The Council of the City of Birmingham have hospitals for the reception of infectious diseases such as smallpox, diphtheria, membranous croup, scarlatina, or scarlet fever, and typhoid, without any charge whatever and irrespective of the position or income of the patient or his friends. The Urban District Council of King's Norton and Northfield have precisely the same arrangement. The City Council has a number of women health visitors who give valuable advice in the homes of the poor.

(b) The Poor Law authorities have relieving officers who are in daily attendance at specified times at their offices for the granting of medical orders on their district medical officers for the medical attendance of the poor, and the only passport in order to obtain such medical assistance is their poverty or inability to pay for such attendance.

(c) Hospitals.—The City of Birmingham is thoroughly well equipped with hospitals for all kinds of maladies such as ordinary medical or surgical cases, viz. :—

General Hospital.
Queen's Hospital.
Children's Hospital.
Women's Hospital.
Skin and Urinary Hospital.
Eye Hospital.
Ear and Throat Hospital.
Dental Hospital.
Orthopædic and Spinal Hospital.
Homeopathic Hospital.
Convalescent Homes of the Birmingham
Hospital Saturday Fund.

Medical Mission.

Institutions for the Blind, Deaf and Dumb,¹

Birmingham District Institution for Home Nursing.

Birmingham General Dispensary, with a Central Institution in the city and several branches in the suburbs.

Lying-in Charity for attention upon patients at parturition at their homes.

In these institutions admission is gained for the most part by a ticket from a subscriber or by a small registration fee; this small fee is often not charged if the individual pleads poverty. In all cases of emergency or accident patients are admitted without fee or question. The class of people seeking assistance at these institutions are all sorts and conditions, and the object of them seeking this assistance is manifold—a large number, I am sorry to say, from their inherent dislike to pay for medical or surgical help, hence the abuse of hospitals; others for the superior facilities hospitals afford for serious cases.

(d) Medical Clubs.—There are innumerable sick clubs with their ramifications, and also some provident dispensaries extending into every part of the city and district. The usual conditions govern this class.

2. There is the happiest spirit in the co-operation of the various institutions; nothing further is needed.

3. The city is well provided with agencies for providing medical assistance to the poor, and my experience leads me to the decided opinion that it would be a great mistake to hand such matters over to one authority or agency.

MEDICAL ASSISTANCE OF THE POOR.

1. As far as my qualifications and experience are concerned, I may say that I am a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and Licentiate of College of Physicians, London. I was senior resident medical officer at the City Fever Hospital, Lodge Road, Birmingham, for nearly two years, after which I was engaged in private practice in Birmingham for about two years. I was appointed to my present work as district medical officer to the parish of Birmingham in November, 1903.

2. The Health Authorities afford very valuable assistance to the poor in many ways. There is a commodious hospital situated at Little Bromwich for the reception of scarlet fever cases. At Lodge Road there is an isolation hospital for the reception of diphtheria, typhoid, and puerperal fever cases. There is also an institution at Little Bromwich where accommodation can be given to cases of smallpox should any arise. The health authorities also provide a staff of lady health visitors whose duty it is to visit the poor and instruct them in the many ways that lead to an improvement in their condition. In particular I would mention that good work is done by the health visitors in instructing the people in the proper methods of feeding infants.

3. Poor Law.—There are two district medical officers for the parish of Birmingham, which has an acreage of 2,996. We devote the whole of our time to our district work, and attend at the central offices every morning from nine to eleven o'clock to see cases, and then visit at their homes those that are not able to attend at the dispensary.

4. A dispenser attends at the offices every day from 9 to 12 a.m., and again from 4 till 7 p.m., so that ample provision is made for the poor to obtain medical advice and medicines necessary.

5. The whole system of distributing relief, both medical and otherwise, being conducted from offices situated in the centre of the parish affords every facility to the poor to obtain prompt attention.

6. There is telephonic communication between the doctors' residences and the parish offices. This has proved of great value, especially in cases requiring urgent attendance on part of the doctor. As most of the urgent cases of illness occur during the night, the Commission will be able to appreciate the amount of time and trouble that the poor are saved by this means.

7. As far as medical assistance from the Poor Law is concerned, the methods in force in Birmingham for the attention of the district medical officers on the poor leave practically no improvement to be desired.

8. Voluntary Effort.—There are in Birmingham several charitable institutions which afford ample means to the working classes of obtaining medical assistance. I may mention the General, Queen's, Orthopædic, Spinal, Eye, Ear and Throat, Lying-in Charity, Skin and Urinary, Homeopathic, and Children's Hospitals (two). Besides these there are several dispensaries in the parish which provide medical assistance to the poor.

9. There are also convalescent homes in connection with the various hospitals.

10. With reference to the class of persons assisted by voluntary effort, I should think that the majority would belong to the factory classes.

11. As to the cause of their seeking assistance at the hospitals, as far as surgical cases are concerned, the majority of such would be unsuitable for treatment at their own homes, both on account of surgical procedures necessary, and the length of time of illness. The people might, say, be able to pay their doctor for a time, but could not afford to pay an adequate fee for a lengthy period, so that by seeking assistance at one or other of the hospitals they are relieved of all expense for medical attendance.

12. In medical cases I believe the same holds good, but no doubt there are many cases of abuse of hospital treatment.

13. On the other hand, with reference to the question of overlapping or co-operation between the different agencies it would be difficult to say to what extent cases that ought to be relegated to the Poor Law are attended to by these charitable institutions.

14. In my opinion it is a very small percentage. In the majority of cases, until a person makes application to one or other of the parish authorities, and states his or her circumstances, it is of course impossible to ascertain whether they are paupers or not.

15. I can only say that where the hospital authorities do get cases that require attention from the Poor Law authorities, such cases are dealt with by the relieving officers.

16. The system adopted in Birmingham, where the medical officers (two) devote the whole of their time to their district work, has proved so efficient that I fail to see where any alteration would effect an improvement.

17. I feel confident that the poor receive more prompt and close attention where the medical officer is not engaged in any other work.

18. I have no hesitation in saying that the health of the community does not suffer from insufficient medical assistance. With the accommodation provided for infectious fever cases by the health authorities, the infirmary and district medical officers and the numerous charitable institutions established in Birmingham, I think that the poor have ample means in the shape of medical assistance at their disposal.

19. As to the quality of such medical assistance there is nothing wanting in this respect.

20. I would suggest that, where possible, in towns similar to Birmingham, district medical officers should be appointed who would devote the whole of their time to their district work (and I think it would be an advantage to combine the vaccination work with the district medical work) instead of appointing medical men engaged in private practice, for the following reasons:—

- (1) Because there would be no prior interest in any other work.
- (2) The poor would receive more prompt attention.
- (3) It would not require so many medical men to be appointed.

21. I would also say that where the system of distributing relief both medical and otherwise could be worked from offices situated centrally in parishes similar to Birmingham it would be a distinct advantage.

22. An improvement would also be effected by having telephonic communication between the doctor's residence and central office.

23. There is another point I think worthy of attention—namely, the following:—

In those cases, which, either from their surroundings or personal condition are unsuitable for proper medical treatment in their own homes or lodgings, and who refuse the advice of the medical officer to go into the infirmary, that power should be given to the guardians in some form, so that such cases could be removed. I might instance a case which happened a few weeks ago in one of my districts. I was called to see a man who was suffering from pneumonia. He was lying in a miserable stuffy room, with no means of ventilation or fire, and only a crippled brother to attend to his wants. To put the matter shortly, it would have been impossible to make the conditions worse. I tried every means to persuade the man to let me send him to the infirmary, but he refused. I did everything possible for him under the circumstances, but the man died in a few days. I mention this case because I am convinced had I been able to remove him at the onset to the infirmary, where his surroundings would have been so different, and where he could have received the careful nursing required in such a case, the probability is that he would have recovered. Other cases which are sources of contagion and infection to those surrounding them should also be compulsorily removed, such as scabies, venereal diseases, bad types of eczema, etc.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. O. J. KAUFFMANN, HON. PHYSICIAN TO THE QUEEN'S HOSPITAL, VISITING PHYSICIAN TO THE WORKHOUSE INFIRMARY, CONSULTING PHYSICIAN TO THE BIRMINGHAM GENERAL DISPENSARY.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

MEDICAL ASSISTANCE OF THE POOR.

1. Sanitary Authority.—This is the Health Committee of the city council. The general sanitation of the city is good, and the death-rate moderate.

2. Under the authority of the city council the two fever hospitals and three asylums for the insane, each institution being managed by a resident medical officer, or medical superintendent.

3. There is an arrangement with the Council of the University of Birmingham, under which examinations are made in the pathology laboratory of the University, free of cost to the patient or doctor attending, of sputa, inflammatory secretions, etc., especially with regard to tubercle and diphtheria. In the case of the latter disease, antitoxin, and the necessary apparatus for administering it, are also supplied free of charge. This system has been in activity some nine or ten years, and has proved of the greatest benefit to the community.

4. The "Housing Committee" of the city council is doing excellent work in improving and, where necessary, closing insanitary dwellings and adding open spaces, and the practical results of their work are very considerable.

5. The Workhouse Infirmary has a possible accommodation for nearly 1,500 patients; the usual numbers are 1,000 to 1,200. Many of these are epileptics and persons of unsound mind; some few are idiots or imbeciles (children); the majority are sufferers from chronic and from incurable ailments—among which consumption claims a large number—and there are also many cases of acute disease such as pneumonia, typhoid, etc. There is also a lying-in department.

6. Other Hospitals are:—

The Queen's Hospital (about 130 beds), the General Hospital (about 300 beds); both with large out-patient departments.

The Women's Hospital, the Eye Hospital, the Ear Hospital, the Skin and Urinary Hospital, the Lying-in Charity, the Children's Hospital, the Orthopædic Hospital—all treating both in-patients and out-patients.

7. The General Dispensary, treating patients in their homes. This institution has also, by means of its consulting staff, the opportunity of getting persons requiring in-patient treatment admitted into one or other of the hospitals.

8. Several smaller dispensaries, e.g., the "Farm Street" Dispensary, and one under the "Medical Mission"; and four convalescent homes in the country.

9. Some hospital abuse necessarily exists, chiefly at the special hospitals, but, on the whole, the cases are deserving of the charity they claim. Nearly all these hospitals receive a considerable number of applicants from the smaller surrounding towns and the neighbouring country districts, for which Birmingham forms a medical centre.

10. There is, necessarily, some overlapping, and it is not uncommon for patients to go from one hospital to another. Co-operation between the various hospitals and between the guardians of the poor and the hospitals is extensive and cordial, place being often found at another institution when the one chosen by the patient is unable to give him room.

11. The question of the possibility of handing over all hospitals to a common authority is a difficult one, and, here at least, there appears no likelihood of such a solution.

In this place I need only indicate three great difficulties, which appear to me to stand in the foreground, viz. :—

(1) The objection of so many honourable working people to enter the workhouse infirmary, which would militate against an amalgamation of all charities under the authority of the Poor Law guardians.

(2) The importance of the hospitals to the medical school, and therewith to the whole community, which would be against the control of hospitals by either guardians or city council.

(3) The individual reputation of each hospital, a kind of "good-will" dependent largely upon tradition, but recognised by the patients who seek relief, and depending, no doubt, to some extent upon the character of the management of each institution.

Moreover, it appears to me to be doubtful whether much saving of cost would be effected by such a course, since the number of establishments now existing would very likely have to be kept up, in order not to diminish the service. If, under such a scheme, some institutions were closed, this would, on the other hand, entail structural additions to others.

12. Such a central hospital authority is certainly practicable, as is seen in the "Assistance Publique" of Paris, and the Hospitals Committee of Hamburg; but I am unable to say whether their working is economical. In Hamburg, too, payments are required from those patients able to make them, in proportion to their means.

13. Here and, I believe, everywhere in England public feeling is against a change in this direction, and it could only be carried out if a previous successful experiment had been made in a smaller town presenting a lesser number of hospitals and interests concerned.

14. It certainly cannot be said that in Birmingham the health of the people suffers from insufficiency of medical assistance, either in quantity or in quality.

15. I am much impressed with a class of cases which are constantly coming under my notice, and of which the best example is: rheumatism, heart disease as a consequence, and a total disability on the part of the sufferers to fight the battle of life, owing to physical incapacity. Scores of such sufferers are seen by me (and every other hospital physician) every year. Many of them, especially girls, struggle on at some employment—laundry, factory, or domestic service, courageously till they break down; they may then come into hospital or the infirmary for a month or two, and, being set on their feet again, have to earn their living. After a short while the heart again fails; and so the process is repeated until they die; or perhaps they marry, and, being spared hard physical work for a while, they keep fairly well; but if the husband loses his work, or after childbirth, the same breakdown recurs. I have conferred with the Infirmary Management Committee of the guardians on this point, recommending that a house be opened, say, for girls of this class, who would be able to partly keep such a home, and to do sewing, etc. But the committee did not see their way to accepting the suggestion. The lives of such sufferers are, in my opinion, infinitely more sad and hopeless than the lives of such as are weak-minded, idiotic or imbecile, for the former have an acute appreciation of their incompetence and misery. Their suffering is in no way the result of their own faults, nor the result of heredity. Other cases, analogous as to the physical disability they entail, occur, and I have selected the examples of chronic heart disease only as the most striking instance of the large class to which I desire to draw attention.

APPENDIX No. CXL.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. FRANK LAMBERT, LATE MASTER OF THE WORKHOUSE, LEICESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I was Assistant Master and Superintendent of Casual Wards, Islington Workhouse, St. John's Road, London, 1878-1881; Master of Workhouse, Barrow-on-Soar, Leicestershire, 1882-1885; Master of Workhouse, Falmouth, 1885-1886; and Master of Workhouse, Leicester, since 1886.

2. The social condition of the working classes is of a low standard, and the industrial condition is bad in consequence of the introduction of machinery, chiefly in the boot and shoe trade, where a great number of men are displaced. Also in the hosiery trade a large number of women and girls are employed in the place of men for lower wages. Manufacturers also send work into the villages near Leicester, where labour is cheaper.

3. I consider that authority should be given to boards of guardians to erect and maintain a home for feeble-minded men and women with powers of detention.

4. The majority of able-bodied men admitted to the workhouse are undeserving cases, but great pains are always taken to find situations to help them to regain their former position, but I find by experience that they lose their work through drink and improvidence. The majority of young men have never made any provision against illness and loss of work. The tasks of work from time to time have been altered by the guardians, and in consequence it is difficult to keep them fully employed. Store-breaking is only given for cases of misconduct and insubordination at the discretion of the master. The majority of young women admitted to the workhouse are feeble-minded. The old people in many cases are those of which their habits of life are such that their relations or friends will not find accommodation for them in their own homes, and in consequence they are obliged to come into the workhouse.

5. The classes of persons applying for relief are chiefly general labourers and shoe hands.

6. The chief causes of pauperism are improvidence and displacement of labour by machinery.

7. The guardians are mainly independent gentlemen, tradesmen, and working men.

8. In my opinion when out-relief is easily obtained it lessens the independence of the people.

9. I advocate: (a) A law to prevent married women working in factories; and (b) the provisions for old age pensions for the respectable old people, which, in my opinion, should be administered by the guardians.

APPENDIX No. CXLI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. GEORGE LLOYD, MASTER OF THE ASTON UNION WORKHOUSE, BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. The Aston Union is comprised of nine parishes divided as follows:—

Aston, Aston Manor (Borough Districts); Erdington, Sutton Coldfield Castle Bromwich, Water Orton, Minworth, Curdworth, Wishaw (Rural Districts).

2. The majority of paupers are admitted from the parishes of Aston and Aston Manor, the inhabitants of which districts are chiefly of the working class, and small shopkeepers.

3. The industrial conditions of the union are generally good, there being a large number of works and manufacturing connected with very varied calling, where wages are good, and work as a rule plentiful.

4. In some parts of the union there are very poor districts, where children may be seen badly clothed and in a dirty condition, and the housing in these parts is bad.

5. Tin and light metal and glass trades have apparently suffered much from foreign competition, but, generally speaking, lack of employment has not been so much felt in this district as in other parts of the country.

6. On taking up my duties as master of this workhouse, eighteen months ago, I found with regard to the admission of vagrants that owing to being overcrowded it was the custom to give lodging-house tickets to those vagrants who came after our wards were full. I also noticed that as soon as the first ticket was given, a fresh number used to appear, evidently having waited until they were satisfied that we were full up, and by reversing our practice I took in a great many who expected tickets and gradually reduced the numbers to the comparative figures given below. No lodging-house ticket has been given since December, 1905.

Total admissions, 1905	-	-	-	19,689
" " 1906	-	-	-	13,127
Decrease	-	-	-	6,562

7. I enclose a statement* for your information showing the results of my observations upon the vagrancy question, made by me during the year ended Michaelmas, 1903, whilst acting as master of the Hunslet Union workhouse, Leeds.

8. I consider the most useful deterrent to vagrancy is land employment, as the habitual vagrant soon becomes master of such allotted tasks as stone-breaking, corn-grinding, oakum-picking, etc.

9. Indoor relief is, and should be, the best test of destitution, but if the comforts and privileges of the indoor poor are to be further increased it may be necessary to extend the safeguards against imposition, and to further increase the liability of relatives.

10. The majority of our indoor poor are of the artisan class. The relatives who visit the inmates, from appearances, are in fairly good circumstances, and in my opinion it would require in many cases very little more effort on their part to assist in the provision for their care outside.

* Not printed.

11. Pauperism is largely caused by the extended use of machinery, necessitating the specialising of work, juvenile labour becoming as valuable to the employer as that of adults. This results in the decrease in the practice of aprenticing, and causes a general lack of interest of men in their daily task; thereby the evil habits of betting, drinking, and inordinate attendance at sports, etc., are increased. To these evils, added to early or indiscriminate marriages and lack of thrift, in a great measure must be attributed our increase in pauperism.

12. I believe the administration of relief in this union to be at present satisfactory and economical. Until the last few years it was on the lines obtaining in the present rural unions, but owing to the present views with regard to dealing with pauperism, the guardians of this union must necessarily now fall into line with their neighbours, and incur additional expense in the treatment of the sick, in a separate infirmary.

13. Suggested reforms are:—

- (a) Separate accommodation for able-bodied men.
- (b) With regard to the vagrancy question I am of opinion that the present regulations have not been yet fully taken advantage of by guardians through, generally, lack of accommodation. If existing regulations were uniformly acted upon, an immense diminution in numbers would follow.

14. The Aston Union workhouse is chiefly built on the pavilion system, comprised of the entrance buildings, board committee rooms, main building, five pavilions (two of which were arranged for classification of aged and infirm).

15. The infirmary part consists of four pavilions and two small sections.

16. The vagrant wards are divided, one building being at the extreme south side of the grounds and arranged on the cellular principle, containing thirty-four cells and one associated ward. There are also associated wards for both male and female vagrants at the entrance.

17. We have also a separate building for aged married couples, comprising ten cottages; also there are churches for both Protestants and Roman Catholics in the grounds.

18. The numbers in the "House" at the time of writing are 1,645, of which 485 are in the infirmary. This is not a separate institution.

19. An additional building accommodating 122 men has recently been opened, and an addition of a further half pavilion on the female side of the house is contemplated.

20. The increased accommodation for ordinary inmates will be provided by the gradual absorption of the present infirmary buildings. Provision for the sick in a separate institution.

APPENDIX No. CXLII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. HERBERT MANSFIELD, CLERK TO THE LEICESTER BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. The industrial conditions of Leicester have of late years been considerably disturbed by the introduction of machinery into the staple trades (boots and hosiery) and consequent displacement of manual labour.

2. This has had the effect of causing many people to seek the aid of the Poor Law who would not have found it necessary to do so had the demand for labour been equal to the supply.

3. Many of those displaced are unlikely to again find employment in their own trades, as the methods of production are entirely changed.

4. The poor state of the other trades has prejudicially affected the building trades, which have for four or five years been practically at a standstill.

5. There are now some slight indications of improvement in the local outlook, but the process seems likely to be very slow.

6. In this parish great interest is being taken by the working men and women in administration of the Poor Laws, at the election of guardians. In 1904 sixty-five candidates placed themselves before their constituents, and the result was that forty-eight were elected, there being twenty-six Liberals, nine Conservatives, and thirteen Labour members.

7. The board as constituted revised their rules and regulations.

The following will show some of the alterations made:—

SCALE FOR LABOUR TEST CASES.

New Scale.

Man, wife, and 6 children -	2/4
Man, wife, and 7 children -	2/4
Man, wife, and 8 children -	2/4
For 6 days.

8. This scale brings the pay close up to the wage earned by the ordinary labourer. (See also tabulated statement of outdoor relief to able-bodied men in Leicester and other towns. (See Appendix No. CXLII. (A)).

9. Able-bodied persons who applied for relief have been put on the labour test, either to work on the farms (of which we have two to the extent of 45 acres and 30 acres respectively) or to the labour yard, where the tasks have been wood-sawing, chopping, and bundling firewood.

10. With regard to the farm work there are many days when it is impossible for the men to work on the land, hence they have to spend their time in idleness as no stand-by had been provided. This again has a tendency to make the conditions of farm work too easy, encouraging men to apply for relief.

11. With respect to the wood-chopping, many difficulties have arisen both as to sale and competition with local firewood dealers, and their complaints have been most strongly represented to the Local Government Board.

12. I regret to say that persons were put on the labour-test contrary to the advice of the officials, which, of course, helped to swell the number on the relief roll.

13. The Relieving Officers' Application and Report Books show cases where such relief was given, and I believe one of your Assistant Commissioners has extracted certain reports.

14. The average weekly number of men on the labour-test for the year ending Lady-Day, 1904, was 83; and for the year ending Lady-Day, 1906, 354.

15. When Outdoor relief is administered under proper conditions, viz., after a searching enquiry has been made by the relieving officer and the applicant found to be destitute and deserving and the home in which the applicant is living has its proper surroundings, it is in my mind better that outdoor relief should be granted.

16. But where the home is not sufficiently furnished and there is overcrowding or the applicant is living in a district where there are common lodging-houses and the locality is also overcrowded, then I think that indoor relief should be given, because when out-relief is given under the above circumstances it becomes generally known to the neighbours (who are many) and further applications are received from persons who have very little cause to seek relief.

17. If indoor relief is granted to persons who are not deserving, the guardians should provide work of a disagreeable nature more particularly to the able-bodied class, and they should be properly classified and a plain diet given them.

18. The class of persons applying for relief includes :—

(a) Far too many young men who have served in the Army, also young men who have no particular calling, and are generally to be found loitering about and who do not show any particular desire to find work other than casual work.

(b) Old people who become too feeble to manage for themselves and cannot get anyone to have them for the amount usually given by the guardians, and cases who much prefer the comforts of the workhouse to living in unhealthy surroundings.

(c) Persons who apply for their parents or other member of their family to be allowed to go into the workhouse infirmary, and to remain there as paying patients.

(d) Many cases of young women who have to be treated in the Lock wards, also young pregnant women.

(e) Old people who probably get a little assistance from charities or from some other source, who can with a little relief manage outside.

(f) Widows with families.

(g) Widows with illegitimate children (far too many).

(h) Deserted women and children.

(i) Cripples who have friends or who are able to do a little work.

(j) Able-bodied men unable to find employment.

19. Causes of pauperism include :—

(a) Want of forethought in youth to make provision for old age, neglecting to join friendly societies to provide against necessity in case of sickness.

(b) Intemperance and Betting.—I have known cases in which a great portion of a man's wage has been spent in street betting.

20. I am inclined to think that in some cases many persons have been attracted to our workhouse by the diet that is given, more especially since the New Dietary Order came into force.

21. Class of persons seeking election as guardians consists of Professional men.

Retired tradesmen.
Married women.
Single women.
Boot and shoe manufacturers.
Hosiery manufacturers.
Agents.
Trades union officials.
Working men and women styled as the Labour Party.
Shopkeepers

22. The relief in this parish is administered by six relieving officers and one female assistant relieving officer (each pair of relieving officers being provided with a clerk).

There are six relief committees who sit at the same time as each other, viz., every Tuesday morning at nine-thirty.

23. The guardians forming those committees are invariably guardians from the district where the applicants live, and in some cases the committees do not take sufficient notice of the relieving officers when they report as to applicants' earnings (hence surcharges have been made).

24. In addition to the above, relief is administered every Tuesday evening by the same committees to the able-bodied poor who apply for work on the labour test.

25. Generally five or six days are given according to scale heretofore mentioned.

26. Amount of out-relief for the year ending Lady Day, 1904, £23,782.

Amount of out-relief for the year ending Lady Day, 1906, £35,130.

27. Reforms in the law suggested by my experience are :—

(a) That the very old people in receipt of outdoor relief should be paid in money at their homes.

(b) That it should be clearly laid down by the Local Government Board that the whole of the earnings of the family going into the house of a person applying for relief must be taken into account when deciding as to whether the case is one for parish relief and not the money that is actually paid to the parent by her children. For instance, a son or daughter might be earning 12s. 6d. per week and only paying their parents 7s.

(c) That it should be obligatory upon boards of guardians to appoint a superintendent relieving officer where the number of relieving officers is six or more (in the same way that it is directed by the Nursing in Workhouse Order, 1897, that a superintendent nurse shall be appointed when the staff of nurses is three or more).

I may say that in Leicester we have a female assistant relieving officer, and she is doing very useful work and has detected cases of imposition that probably would not have been found out.

I would suggest that occasionally demonstrations should be given at the various cottage homes and separate schools in inland towns, by boys from one of the training ships. I feel it would have a tendency to encourage the boys to seek for more information as to training that can be obtained in the course of a few years on the ships and would probably encourage more boys to enter the Navy or mercantile service, and thus relieve the more congested industries.

(d) That more provision should be made for the feeble-minded by way of combination of unions, say in each Poor Law inspector's district, also for imbeciles and epileptics on the same lines, where they would get more healthy surroundings and occupation.

(e) That the law of settlement should be revised, so as to make it easier for a pauper's settlement to be ascertained. A person should be able to acquire a settlement by residence in any part of a Union Area in the same way as a person can acquire a status of irremovability.

(f) Provision should also be made for discharged prisoners upon leaving prisons to be compelled to return to the place of conviction, and hospital patients discharged from hospitals should be sent back to their place of residence, without becoming chargeable to the parish in which the hospital or other institution may happen to be situated. It is from this class of person that it is most difficult to obtain reliable information regarding settlements.

(g) Vagrancy.—I quite agree with the suggestions made to your Commissioners by the Poor Law Officers' Association.

APPENDIX NO. CXLIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. DOMINIC MCCARTHY, GUARDIAN OF THE LEICESTER UNION.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I have been an active member of the Leicester branch of the Shoe Operatives' Union for the past twelve years, the largest branch of any trade union in the Kingdom.

2. We have a benevolent and convalescent fund in connection with our branch; I have been on the committee for managing same and through this came into contact with many of our sick and poor members.

3. I have worked during these years in the largest boot factory in the town so I am personally acquainted with hundreds of the unemployed and with a great number of those who seek out-relief. I have been twice unanimously selected by my society to represent its members on the board of guardians. Above all this, I am in deep sympathy with those whose greatest sin is poverty.

4. Improved machines in the boot and hosiery trades have displaced thousands of workers during the past ten years. In the bottom-cutting department of a certain boot factory forty-one men and youths were employed eight years ago. In the same factory and department to-day seven men and one boy are employed and they cut fifteen dozens of stuff per day more than the forty-one did. There are thousands of men in this town who are in incipient consumption through want of proper nourishment. A great number of those who receive out-relief are tainted with consumption.

5. We have had as many as 420 men at one time on the labour test and as far as possible the guardians have put them to work on the land. The superintendent of the farm speaks well of the men's willingness to work. No results could be shown as there were five times too many men for the amount of land.

6. I favour out-relief wherever possible. The workhouse reduces all to one dead level of gloom and hopelessness. The well-behaved aged poor should be provided with suitable cottages outside.

7. Old people form the majority of those who receive relief here. Widows with young families. Deserted women. Men who receive very low wages when at their ordinary work. They are never able to pay for medical attention and must have recourse to the guardians for such help.

8. Drink and large families I believe would account for 10 per cent. of the pauperism, but to low and irregular wages I would assign 90 per cent. of the poverty. If the Commission do not recognise the appalling evils of low and uncertain wages which are the lot of the majority of the wage earners, then your sittings are in vain. Wages of 12s., 14s., and 16s. are quite common here for adult unskilled labour.

9. The class of persons seeking election as guardians mostly consists of retired business men or small manufacturers and shopkeepers. The majority of them have never read a book on the Poor Laws, or on any other subject probably. To amass property and keep the rates low is to them the beginning and ending of all things.

10. The following reforms in the law are suggested by experience:—

(a) Able-bodied men should not be allowed to waste their lives in workhouses.

(b) In my opinion the sums granted in out-relief to widows with young families are totally inadequate. It is very difficult in many cases for the mothers to supplement by earnings what the guardians grant, but where this is not done the standard of living is of the bread and lard and tea kind, with the result that the children lead a sorrowful existence and never become thorough men and women. The guardians buy foodstuffs and clothing for cottage homes at wholesale prices, and yet they cannot keep the children per unit for double the amount granted in out-relief where goods are bought in small quantities and at retail prices. The knowledge of the evil existing in this branch of the Poor Law forced me to the conclusion that the Poor Law charges should, like education, be more national than local. Guardians have a keener interest in keeping rates low than in seeing that the helpless children under their care grow to be efficient and well-developed citizens.

(c) Chronic tramping as now known should be prohibited. There might be a Government bureau in every town where men going in search of work would be obliged to apply. Genuine advice and help should be given in place of the present degrading system. Men of known vicious and dirty habits should never be allowed to tramp from town to town spreading disease and evil. It is a crime for the nation to allow young children to be dragged through the country in these tramping expeditions.

11. The suggestion that fickle and uncertain charity should take the place of communal or national responsibility is too absurd for a passing thought.

12. There is not one man in 10,000 who remains outside a benefit society because of what may be got from the rates.

APPENDIX No. CXLIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. C. KILLICK MILLARD, MEDICAL OFFICER OF HEALTH, LEICESTER.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

THE MEDICAL ASSISTANCE OF THE POOR IN THE BOROUGH OF LEICESTER.

The following information refers only to the action taken by the Corporation in relation to the medical assistance of the poor. Such action may be enumerated as follows:—

1. The provision of hospital isolation for the usual infectious diseases, viz., scarlet fever, diphtheria, enteric fever, and smallpox; also disinfection of houses after these diseases. In these respects there is no difference from the practice of most towns. No charge is made for cases from the borough.

2. Free bacteriological diagnosis is performed in doubtful cases of such diseases as diphtheria, enteric fever, and tuberculosis. The examinations are carried out at the isolation hospital by the resident medical officer. The specimens for examination are submitted by the medical men in attendance.

3. In connection with pulmonary tuberculosis (phthisis) the following measures have been carried out during the last three years:—

(a) Voluntary notification of phthisis for which the medical man notifying receives the same fee as under the Notification Act. Notification is followed by a visit from one of the sanitary inspectresses, who gives advice, verbal and printed, and leaves a pocket spittoon (free).

(b) Sanatorium Treatment.—If the case appears likely to be suitable, the patient is invited to apply to the medical officer of health for admission to the borough hospital. At the latter a special block has been set aside for the open-air treatment of consumption, and shelters have been erected in the grounds. Accommodation is thus provided usually for eighteen patients, though sometimes rather less. The patients, on application, are examined by the medical officer of health, and if thought suitable for open-air treatment they are admitted on the following terms:—For the first month no charge is made. At the expiration of that time, if found to be improving, they may remain, upon payment* of 10s. per week, for a second month. If still found to be improving, a third month is usually granted them free of charge. Occasionally patients have paid to remain a fourth month, and a certain number succeed in gaining admission to other sanatoria.

* In practice the great majority of the cases are paid for by the "Hospital Saturday Society" to which nearly all factory hands in Leicester subscribe.

This plan has been found to work well. For the first two years patients were only admitted for one month, and only in exceptional cases were they allowed to remain for a second month. The object aimed at then was an educational one in methods of hygiene, etc. This is now combined with an effort to permanently arrest the disease in the most suitable cases.

The number of cases admitted to hospital, together with the number of cases notified voluntarily and the number of deaths registered for the years that this system has been in vogue, is shown below:—

PHTHISIS.

Year.	Deaths Registered.	Cases admitted to Borough Hospital.	Cases Notified.
1903	266	61 (last 3 months of year only)	156
1904	353	120	182
1905	288	156	225
1906	339	69 (accommodation restricted owing to epidemic of scarlet fever.)	215

After removal of a case to hospital, or after a death from the disease, the house is disinfected when this course is consented to.

4. Free Distribution of Diphtheria Antitoxin.—This is given out free to any medical man applying for it, for the use of poor persons in the borough, the name of the patient for whom it is intended being registered.

5. The Institution of an Infants' Milk Depot.—This was started in July, 1906, and has now been in operation seven months. The number of babies fed, for varying periods during this time, is between 400 and 500. The milk is charged for, the price covering cost of milk, bottles, etc., but not the cost of the maintenance of the depot, wages of attendants, etc. These fall as a charge upon the rates. The estimated cost for the coming financial year is £250. (P.S.—Oct., 1907. The cost for 1907 will probably be nearly £400.)

APPENDIX No. CXLV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. JOHN NORTH, CLERK TO THE GUARDIANS OF THE ASTON UNION SINCE JUNE, 1891, AND SECOND ASSISTANT AND FIRST ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE GUARDIANS OF THE LEEDS UNION FROM JUNE, 1879, TO JUNE, 1891.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

SOCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS IN THE UNION.

1. Population (1901), 312,217; area, 31,293 acres; nine parishes: four urban, and five rural. Over 200,000 people in the parish of Aston, within the City of Birmingham, in which dwell workers in various Birmingham industries, and which contains some of the poorest parts of the city. The Borough of Aston Manor contains about 80,000 people. It has manufactories similar to Birmingham, and it is largely residential for Birmingham workers. Of the remaining parishes some are residential suburban to Birmingham, and some agricultural.

PECULIARITIES OR EXPERIMENTS IN POOR LAW ADMINISTRATION.

2. The guardians have joined with the guardians of the parish of Birmingham, and of the King's Norton Union, in the establishment of a joint workhouse for sane epileptics and feeble-minded. A site has been purchased, and homes are being erected.

3. The guardians for a number of years have had a permanent committee for the revision of the indoor poor. The cases are interviewed, sifted, and presented to the committee by the superintendent relieving officer, and by directing discharges, granting leave to seek work, etc., the committee procure that some inmates able to get along outside, but not averse to remaining inside, cease to be chargeable.

THE RESPECTIVE MERITS OF INDOOR AND OUTDOOR RELIEF.

4. Strict administration of outdoor relief is necessary to efficient administration.

5. Many people who would refuse to enter a workhouse have no repugnance to the receipt of outdoor relief, and, if there be laxity of administration, persons get on to the out-relief lists who should not be maintained at the expense of the ratepayers.

6. At Aston fifteen years ago a superintendent relieving officer was appointed, and the amount of outdoor relief distributed dropped in one or two years by one-half. For several reasons the relief gradually crept up in succeeding years, but a couple of years ago the out-relief staff was strengthened, the work was more efficiently performed, and the amount of relief again dropped.

7. At Leeds, some twenty years ago, the outdoor labour test was abused. Men turned up year after year for the test, although the task appeared a sufficient one and the pay was meagre. The test-yard was closed, and none of the men working in it entered the workhouse.

8. In cases of immoral habits, insanitary housing, or sickness requiring special attention and nursing, the workhouse should be offered.

9. There is no reason to believe that strict out-relief administration increases the number of the indoor paupers.

THE CLASSES OF PERSONS APPLYING FOR RELIEF.

10. These are chiefly aged men and women, widows with children, sick persons, and persons out of work.

Present numbers :—

Indoor Poor.—Not able-bodied, 975; ordinarily able-bodied, 552; children, 381; total, 1,908. (More men than women.)

Out-door Poor.—Not able-bodied, 776; able-bodied, 272; children, 840; total, 1,888. (Three times as many women as men.)

Three-fourths of the paupers are from the parish of Aston, within the City of Birmingham.

It is the exception for a skilled workman to become chargeable. The number of lunatics is steadily increasing

THE CAUSES OF PAUPERISM.

11. Pauperism is caused by stress of competition, incapacity to work, death or desertion of maintaining relative, improvident or vicious habits, and by lax administration of relief. Probably trades unions combinations and Workmen's Compensation Acts have contributed to throw men out of employment at an earlier age than in the past.

THE CLASS OF PERSONS SEEKING ELECTION AS GUARDIANS.

12. The board of guardians is mainly composed of business men, retired business men, labour representatives, professional men, women. The position does not attract, as do the positions of town or district councillor.

PARTICULARS AS TO THE ADMINISTRATION OF RELIEF IN THE UNION.

13. Indoor.—Two institutions, workhouse and cottage homes. The workhouse has accommodation for about 1,650 inmates. There is not, but there probably in the course of two or three years will be, a separate infirmary. The cottage homes have accommodation for 250 children, and there is also an additional home, one and a half miles away, accommodating about eighty children, for ins-and-outs. Blind, deaf and dumb, a few (improvable) phthisical, and a few (improvable) imbecile paupers are sent to special institutions, and certain children to certified schools.

14. Outdoor.—The union is divided into five relief districts, for each of which there is a relieving officer. There are also a superintendent relieving officer, who acts as pay clerk, and two assistants, one mainly engaged in the removal of lunatics to and from the asylums.

Relief committees are appointed by the guardians, and each committee sits fortnightly, at a place within its district. There are no prescribed scales of relief, but the committees relieve, roughly, alike, on certain understood scales. The amount distributed at present averages about £120 per week.

15. The Outdoor Relief Prohibitory Order is in force within the union, and the only further restriction that the guardians have by resolution made is that outdoor relief to the wives of prisoners or deserters be not given, unless in the case of desertion five years have elapsed since the act. The guardians board out children, mainly outside the union, and for several years they have emigrated suitable children to Canada.

16. A financial statement, which affords information under this heading, for the half-year ended September last, is enclosed herewith.

REFORMS IN THE LAW OR PRACTICE SUGGESTED BY EXPERIENCE.

17. The Poor Laws appear to be sufficient and suitable for their purpose, and not to require in their essential provisions alterations. Possibly attention might with advantage be given, inter alia, to the desirability of the following matters :—

(a) The codification of the Poor Law statutes and orders.

(b) The abolition of the law of settlement and removal, provision being made, if necessary, to secure that any special districts should not unduly suffer.

(c) The direct application to Justices by relatives for orders of maintenance. The provision that an illegitimate child be liable to contribute to its mother's maintenance.

(d) The re-adjustment, say triennially, of grants to guardians in respect of salaries of officers, etc., under the Local Government Act, 1888.

(e) The power of detention in institutions of chargeable feeble-minded persons.

(f) The Local Government Act, 1894.—It might be well that the offices of rural district councillor and guardian should be separated. The councillors in this union do not wish the guardians' work, and do not devote much time to it.

APPENDIX No. CXLVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. A. E. PHIPPS, CLERK AND SOLICITOR TO THE TRUSTEES OF ST. JOHN'S HOSPITAL FOR UPWARDS OF FIFTEEN YEARS, THE TRUSTEES OF THE NORTHAMPTON MUNICIPAL GENERAL CHARITIES FOR UPWARDS OF NINE YEARS, AND THE TRUSTEES OF THE NORTHAMPTON FREEMEN'S ANNUITIES FOR ABOUT TWO YEARS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. St. John's Hospital.—The income of this charity is devoted to: (a) Maintaining a convalescent home at Weston Favell for the reception of poor persons of either sex who require a change of air and strengthening diet to effect their complete restoration to health; and (b) Providing eight out-pensioners of either sex, each with a pension of 5s. per week.

2. Northampton Municipal General Charities, comprising: (a) John and Ann Camp's Charity; (b) Sillesby's Charity; (c) Richard White's Charity; (d) Bugbrooke Charity; (e) Sir Thomas White's Charity; besides two other small charities.

The income of (a) is devoted to providing twenty-three poor widows or spinsters each with a life annuity of £20;

(b) providing three poor widows or widowers each with a pension of 6s. 6d. per week; (c) providing six poor widows each with a pension of 6s. 6d. per week; (d) providing sixteen poor freemen with clothing; and (e) making advances in sums of £100 each for a term of nine years, free of interest, on approved securities to young men of the borough of Northampton to enable them to start in business.

3. Northampton Freemen's Annuities.—The income here is devoted to providing sixty-four freemen and sixteen widows of freemen of the borough of Northampton with pensions varying from £6 to £12 per annum, according to age.

4. I can from experience unhesitatingly say that although the provision of a convalescent home for poor persons and the establishment of a fund for making advances to young men starting in life have been undoubtedly beneficial, the greatest good has been done by providing pensions for persons of deserving character and of suitable age.

5. The pension in most instances means to the recipient all the difference between penury and comparative comfort, and where it is provided for the benefit of persons who have become reduced in circumstances, as in the case of John and Ann Camp's Annuities, the benefit conferred is considerably enhanced.

APPENDIX No. CXLVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY REV. ARNOLD PINCHARD, VICAR OF ST. JUDE'S BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I can only say that I am so far qualified to speak on some of the matters on which information is required by the fact that I have for eleven years last past been working among poor people of rather a low class in this parish, and for two years before that in other parts of Birmingham among people of the same class.

2. The only charities of the town by which we are materially affected in this parish are the spasmodic and irregular charities of Christmastide, and the hospitals and dispensary.

3. The Christmas charities are not altogether satisfactory in their operation and effect. They are distributed without much consideration, and in an indiscriminate manner. A very large sum of money was spent this year in providing a dinner on a very large scale to poor children, who were fed by the thousand. This appealed to the sentimental element in people's minds, and the numbers fed were quoted with great pomp, and did, no doubt, impress the unthinking with an idea of something great and therefore admirable. As a matter of fact the children over-ate themselves; many of them were ill afterwards, and a vast sum of money was squandered with much blowing of trumpets on a purely transitory pleasure which could not by any possibility do any permanent good.

4. Had this money been divided among the schools for the feeding of necessitous children it would have sufficed to provide many thousands of meals throughout the winter months, and the children might have been regularly fed day by day, and would have been permanently benefited. I quote this as an example on a large scale of what I mean by spasmodic, irregular, and rather wasteful charity.

5. The Dispensary, which provides medical attendance at home, is much abused. People who could afford to pay a doctor often procure dispensary tickets; while the poor on the other hand, who hate going to the hospitals, will constantly seek to procure these notes for slight ailments which could be well treated in the out-patient department of the hospitals.

6. The hospitals do good work: but the poor hate going to them for two reasons:—

(a) Because the staff is never really equal to the demand of the out-patient department, and consequently wretched sick people in pain and discomfort have to wait for hours in order to get attention: and then when they are seen, everything is done with an air of hurry which makes a bad impression on the patients, even though all may really be done in a thorough and satisfactory manner. [I know this from personal experience.]

The "General" Hospital has the worst reputation among the poor in this and in the other respect.

(b) Because the porter and attendants in the waiting rooms are peremptory and lacking in courtesy to the people who wait, and make them, as they say, "feel that they are a nuisance."

7. The effect on the people of charity and outdoor Poor Law relief is much the same in each case.

8. Morally the people suffer by both, because in each case their sense of independence and self-respect is injured.

9. When the poor receive and give help to one another out of their meagre possibilities this moral effect is not seen or felt. Hodie mihi, cras tibi expresses well enough their feeling. There is no loss of self-respect where the slight turn of the wheel may make the giver of to-day the recipient in turn of a similar kindness to-morrow.

10. The sense of getting that to which they have no right is so bad for them, for all human nature; and curiously enough, the Poor Law relief, which is theirs by right, and to which they have indirectly contributed, hurts their sense of self-respect more grievously than does private charity.

11. For the latter is mostly given with some word or expression of kindness and human love, while the others can only be had at a great cost of unnecessary humiliation, and at the sword's point, so to speak: one must both plead and fight to get it.

12. For the Poor Relief officers are desperately tried by deceit and trickery on the one hand, by overwork, and by the necessity of not giving if it can be helped.

13. So these poor press and fawn, and lie; and those must resist and deprecate, and disbelieve: and so it is easy to understand how dreadful is the moral effect on the recipient of relief given in this manner.

14. The Poor Law methods have created an atmosphere of hatred and dread among the poor: mainly because the guardians on the one hand must try to give as little as possible, and therefore must resist the demand of the needy up to the last possible point of resistance; and because, on the other hand this attitude has forced the poor to lie, and deceive, and humiliate themselves in a manner which they themselves abhor, in order to procure relief. They never apply until every other expedient has been exhausted, and then they do so with shame, and in a sort of desperation.

15. Again the relieving officers are quite destitute of imagination. They cannot conceive that one set of circumstances may require relief in quite a different form from that in which it should be given in the majority of cases. They are stereotyped and wooden in their ideas, and often stupid.

16. A widow left with four children, who could do something to keep her children, feed and clothe them, and pay the rent, but could not earn enough in a week, applied for outdoor relief for the children. She had a decent home and decent furniture, and was a thoroughly sober and respectable hard-working woman. The relieving officer came down to see her; looked round the house, and told her plainly that she would get nothing as long as she had such good furniture (!) that she had better apply again, when the furniture was gone (!) So that she was given to understand that her self-respect and her furniture (her "home," as she would call it) must all be sold and lost before she could be helped.

17. I think all outdoor relief ought to be administered on application to a city council of Friends of the Poor, on the German methods, and that such a council ought to have access to the Poor Rate funds (not voluntary subscriptions) for the purposes of their work. In this case all applications would be made directly to them: would be investigated by sympathetic voluntary workers and relief would be given intelligently, kindly, and in a manner suited and adapted to the varying circumstances and needs of the several applicants. Much more good would be done actually by the relief given and the bad moral effect on the recipients would be greatly diminished.

APPENDIX No. CXLVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. JAMES RUSSELL, ASSISTANT PHYSICIAN (PHYSICIAN TO OUT-PATIENTS), BIRMINGHAM GENERAL HOSPITAL.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I am a Doctor of Medicine of the University of Cambridge, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London. I have for fourteen and a half years held the post of Assistant Physician (physician to out-patients) at the Birmingham General Hospital, and am also Visiting Physician to the Jaffray Branch Hospital and Consulting Physician to the Birmingham and Midland Ear and Throat Hospital and to the Midland Counties Asylum. I was formerly for some years a member of the Committee of the Birmingham Charity Organisation Society.

2. The Birmingham Infirmary contains 1,300 beds. It is officered by a resident staff, three visiting physicians and one visiting surgeon. There are also three or four parish medical officers, who visit patients in their own homes. These are in general practice in various parts of the town.

3. There are two general hospitals—the General and Queen's—containing together 478 beds. Both of these have large out-patient departments. The General Hospital has special departments for diseases of the eye, ear and throat, skin and teeth, and a department for diseases of women. The Queen's Hospital has special departments for diseases of women and diseases of the eye, and an extern midwifery department.

4. There are eight special hospitals:—namely, the Eye, Ear and Throat, Children's, Women's, Orthopaedic and Spinal, Skin and Urinary, Homoeopathic, and Dental. With the exception of the Dental Hospital, they all have both in-patient and out-patient departments.

5. The General Dispensary is an institution for treating patients in their own homes, and has a number of centres in various districts in the town. Each of these has an out-patient department.

6. The Lying-in Charity has at present no in-patient department, but provides for attendance on midwifery cases in the patients' homes.

7. All the above are charitable institutions. Some are ticket hospitals and at others a registration fee is charged, varying from sixpence to half-a-crown. This is remitted in the case of patients who are unable to make any payment; and at the ticket hospitals a large number of cases are seen without notes.

8. There are several provident dispensaries, clubs, friendly societies, etc. Apart from these there are a large number of private medical clubs, in which a small sum is paid to a practitioner per week or per year, which ensures treatment when required.

9. The Hospital Saturday Fund was originally started to enable the better off among the working classes to make a charitable contribution towards the maintenance of the hospitals. The fund has now greatly developed, and contribution to it is automatically carried out in most of the manufactories of the town. One penny per week is subscribed by the bulk of the manufacturing classes, and in this manner a yearly sum of from £18,000 to £19,000 is raised. £10,000 is distributed amongst the medical charities, and the remainder goes to support convalescent homes at Llandudno.

10. There are also convalescent homes for adults and children supported by voluntary subscription.

11. There is at present no tubercular sanatorium in Birmingham or Warwickshire, but a site has been acquired by the city council.

12. The class of patients attending the out-patient departments is a mixed one. An inquiry officer interviews each applicant for treatment at the General Hospital and rejects those who are obviously unsuitable for free relief; but the view taken of what justifies hospital treatment is a liberal one. At most of the other hospitals some effort is made in the same direction; but the special hospitals appear to accept cases that would not be deemed suitable at the general hospitals. There is a widespread feeling amongst the general practitioners of the town that many patients with trivial ailments treated as out-patients ought not to be accepted for charitable relief.

13. A considerable number of the working classes undoubtedly look upon the hospitals as provident dispensaries, and this is the natural outcome of the Hospital Saturday movement. Many, however, only come to the general hospitals after preliminary private treatment, when their means no longer enable them to make the necessary payments. Other patients are sent up for consultation or treatment by their own doctors. A large number of patients, on the other hand, would be eligible for Poor Law treatment; but there is universal unwillingness to make use of its provisions.

14. Apart from the Poor Law, there is, I think, no serious amount of overlapping, except in the case of the special ailments, which are provided for both at the special hospitals and in the special departments of the general hospitals—an arrangement which is to the advantage of the attendants at the latter.

15. There is no organised co-operation between the various hospitals; but cases are occasionally referred from a general to a special hospital or vice versa, and such reference would always be accepted.

16. The general hospitals are undoubtedly doing a large amount of the out-door medical relief which is in theory provided for by the Poor Law. On the other hand, there is very little co-operation with the hospitals on the part of the lay Poor Law Authorities.

17. Whilst I am opposed to the making of Poor Law relief easy to obtain by persons in good health, I believe that there is room for more liberal and sympathetic treatment in cases of illness. The extreme unwillingness of the poorer classes to apply to the guardians for medical relief makes it very difficult to deal with many of the cases attending in the out-patient room. There are, however, a large number of poverty-stricken patients who would be far better treated in their own homes, and, moreover, in very many cases the obtaining of proper food is of much greater importance than the taking of medicines. I think that a greater distinction might with advantage be made between the treatment of the sick and that of the able-bodied poor on the part of the Poor Law authorities; and that there should be recognised co-operation between these authorities and the hospitals, with some provision for the direct reference of cases by out-patient physicians and surgeons.

18. I am not in favour of the municipal or state administration of the hospitals. The institution of a Central Hospital Board would, however, make for greater unity in administration, and would facilitate the working of any scheme for improving their efficiency and remedying abuse. I am in favour of voluntary action in this direction in preference to State interference.

19. Apart from the Poor Law, I believe that the hospitals at present in existence adequately meet the legitimate requirements of the poorer classes. There is undoubtedly considerable over-pressure in the out-patient departments; but this should be met, partly by greater facilities for reference to the Poor Law authorities, and partly by the elimination of patients who are able to pay for medical assistance in illness of short duration—for example, by the extension of the present provident dispensaries, or the formation of a well-organised public medical service, from which reference of cases would be made to the hospitals. I am in favour of restricting, rather than extending, the out-patient treatment of disease in large public institutions.

APPENDIX No. CXLIX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR C. J. SCOTT, MEMBER OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS, NORTHAMPTON.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. My qualification for giving information upon the Poor Law is derived from a careful study of Socialist publications dealing with the subject, from conversations with the poor, with whom as a Socialist worker I have come into closer relations than the ordinary man, and from three years' work upon the Northampton board of guardians. I have lived in Northampton the whole of my life and know the conditions obtaining there pretty thoroughly. With the country portion of the union I am not so well acquainted.

2. The social condition of the people may be briefly described thus:—There are very few inhabitants who have inherited any considerable amount of wealth from past generations. Most of the fortunes, large and small, have been made in business within a comparatively few years. The great mass of the people are wage slaves, and most of them are engaged in the boot and shoe factories, the shoe trade being the staple trade of the borough. There are a few other industries, necessitated by local demands, such as the brewing, building, and engineering, but these are relatively unimportant.

3. The chief characteristic of the industrial life of the town during the past decade has been the introduction of machinery into the boot and shoe trade.

4. A much larger number of boots is made in a much shorter time than before, and as a result many of the men are out of work during a great part of the year, or lose a considerable amount of time without being actually unemployed. More time is also consumed by holidays than was formerly the case. (Any manufacturer will give information upon this point, and so will the present Mayor, Mr. E. L. Poulton, and Mr. D. Stanton, President of the No. 1 Branch of the Boot and Shoe Operatives' Union.)

5. The consequence is that the amount of money earned by the average operative is considerably less than before. Many of the men, despairing of getting a good living here have left the town with their families; others, in order, to save a portion of the rent, have taken apartments with their friends. As the trade union in the staple trade decreased in numerical strength during the evolution from hand to machine processes of production, an important barrier against the sweating of the operatives was very considerably weakened. The lessening of the operatives' wages and the consequent reduction of their purchasing power has had a most calamitous effect upon the trading class.

6. The struggle for existence among the shopkeepers has become much keener, profits are reduced, and many business men have difficulty in keeping out of the bankruptcy court. Numbers of shops and houses are empty, and property is largely depreciating in value.

7. Much suffering, mental and physical, is occasioned by this condition of things, and as more labour-saving machinery is continually being introduced there is no hope of any improvement in the near future.

8. The trade is expanding, but the expansion is largely met by the increased machinery, and cannot employ enough additional labour to keep pace with the natural growth of population.

9. Some of the machines are very expensive, and as they require a large amount of work to make them pay, it is only the bigger manufacturers who can go in for them and use them with advantage. Handicapped in this way the smaller manufacturers are being crushed out of existence. There are scores of factories, nearly all small ones, empty at the present time in the borough.

10. The only experiment in Poor Law administration so far tried is the removal of the children from the work-house to the Scattered Homes, of which there are now six in the union. The experiment has been a great success from every point of view. The children are splendidly cared for, and at a cost of only 3s. 8½d. a week, at contract prices, for food, clothing and other necessities. The cost of furniture and shelter is not included in this sum, neither is that of supervision or administration. This system is infinitely superior to that of boarding out the children. Under the latter method there is a danger that the foster-parents will try to make a saving out of the maintenance allowance, with the result that the child may suffer.

11. With regard to outdoor relief and indoor relief as systems of administration I prefer the system of outdoor relief as long as the present Poor Law is in existence. For generations the destitute have been taught to dread the workhouse, and this feeling of dread, where the workhouse test is enforced, impels them to refrain from seeking relief, and causes them to undergo the greatest hardship, sometimes ending in death. Cases are continually occurring where the poor suffer and die of starvation rather than enter the workhouse.

12. In the Brixworth Union the indoor system was tried for a number of years, but it eventually aroused such a storm of opposition that it had to be abandoned to a considerable extent.

13. As to the classes of persons applying for relief and the causes of pauperism, these two subjects are so closely bound up that I prefer to deal with them together. Pauperism is due to the capitalist system, under which the owners of land and capital rob the propertyless members of the community of about two-thirds of the wealth they produce. It is impossible for the workers to be well off while they have to pay this immense tribute to the propertied classes. All the money they can get they have in most cases to spend in order to procure the necessaries of life for themselves, their wives and their children. To a large section of the poor the capitalists leave such a small proportion of the produce of labour that they cannot obtain a sufficiency of shelter, food and clothing. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman said that 12,000,000 people were continually on the verge of hunger. The statistics relating to death by starvation, suicide, the under-feeding of children, and the sweated industries also go to prove my assertion.

14. Unemployment, said to be a cause of pauperism, is a direct result of the capitalist system. In a capitalist state of Society no propertyless person, drunk or sober, thrifty or thriftless, has the legal right to work. The privilege of working is conferred upon him when some capitalist can make a sufficient profit out of his labour.

15. Indulgence in strong drink plays a very small part in the causation of pauperism. It leads to a serious waste of the small proportion of a man's earnings left to him by the capitalist, and so intensifies his poverty; but the poverty itself is caused by capitalism.

16. Whether a certain expenditure on drink causes poverty depends upon the income the drinker is obtaining. Many members of the upper class spend hundreds of pounds annually in intoxicants for themselves and their friends, but the expenditure does not make them poor. So with the workers. A relatively large expenditure in drink would not make them paupers if they were allowed to keep the whole produce of their labour.

17. The same remarks apply to thriftlessness. The most thriftless worker wastes little in comparison with the amount taken from him each year by his capitalist exploiters.

18. Capitalism is far the most important cause of pauperism. The other causes are comparatively insignificant, and could easily be dealt with if the robbery of the workers were stopped.

19. I am not concerned with the class of persons seeking election as guardians. Given adult suffrage, proportional representation, the initiative and referendum, and all other measures necessary to democratic rule, it is a matter of indifference who is elected.

20. The relief to all classes of persons on outdoor relief is grossly insufficient, with the exception of the boarded-out children, the allowances to whom should be somewhat increased.

21. The cost per head of the workhouse inmates for the year ended Lady Day, 1906, was 4s. 10½d.; of the children in the Scattered Homes, 3s. 8½d.; and of the boarded-out children, 4s. 9d.

22. Yet the guardians generally give an aged couple 7s. to 8s. per week, rarely more. This is obviously inadequate.

23. A widow with children is expected to keep herself and one child. In most cases she finds it impossible to do so, a woman's wages being based upon the cost of subsistence of herself alone, yet in addition she has to under take the partial maintenance of all her children after the first. The guardians generally give her relief according to the scale, 1s. 6d. and a loaf per child, sometimes a little more. This of course means worry, and killing work, if she can get it, for the mother, and semi-starvation for herself and the children.

24. The relief to consumptives is equally inadequate, amounting in nearly all cases to only 5s. a week for a single man, and 10s. or 12s. a week for a consumptive with a large family.

25. The relief to the unemployed is more disgraceful still. In many instances it means, in practice, sweating of the worst kind. Men have been compelled to work forty hours a week at stone-breaking (a task abolished in prisons) for 5s.

26. The following reforms are what I would suggest:—
(a) Abolition of the capitalist system, and the substitution of Socialism.

(b) Until that is accomplished the abolition of the Poor Law with these consequential enactments:—

(1) Pensions for the aged at the rate of not less than 10s. per person per week.

(2) Work for all the unemployed at a minimum wage of 30s. per week.

(3) Relief for widows and their children on the basis of 5s. per child, and 10s. for the mother.

(4) Treatment for persons suffering from consumption in special sanatoria, so that they may have the best possible chance of recovering their health and strength.

(5) Treatment of other patients in hospitals or at their homes.

(6) Adequate maintenance of all dependents of diseased persons.

7. Work for tramps at a living wage, and under the pleasantest possible conditions, so as to make them again useful and industrious citizens.

(8) Abolition of the penalty of disfranchisement for receiving relief.

(9) The cost of pensions, etc., to be raised by a cumulative tax upon those persons who are in receipt of incomes above £6 per week.

APPENDIX No. CL.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. ROBERT SEVESTRE, M.A., M.D., CANTAB., ETC., ASSISTANT PHYSICIAN, LEICESTER INFIRMARY, MEDICAL PRACTITIONER IN LEICESTER, ONE OF THE HONORARY MEDICAL ADVISERS, LEICESTER CHARITY ORGANIZATION SOCIETY.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. Sanitary Authority.—The Isolation Hospital under the Sanitary Authority deals with many cases of notifiable diseases. Dr. Millard, the medical officer of health for the borough, has made a statement as regards the work, and it is unnecessary for me to repeat any of his statistics.

I should, however, like to add my testimony to the value of the treatment of phthisis at the Borough Isolation Hospital. It is to be borne in mind that the objects aimed at are partly of an educational as well as of a curative character. Many of the patients have passed through my hands in the out-patient department of the Leicester Infirmary. The patients are greatly benefited, even if the benefit is of a temporary character only, and I believe that in time it will be a powerful factor in the prevention of the spread of the disease.

The sanitary authority opened in 1906 a milk dépôt. Dr. Millard, the medical officer of health for the borough, has given information as to its working.

Town Council.—The Education Committee of the Town Council have recently appointed a medical officer who advises the authority in matters referring to the health of the scholars and teachers. Dr. A. Warner is the medical officer. He does not advise or treat any of the individuals.

The Borough Asylum, Humberstone. Dr. Finch, medical superintendent.

2. The Poor Law.—I understand that this part of the subject is being dealt with in the statements of other people, and as I have had little or no experience in it, I leave it in more competent hands than my own.

3. Voluntary Effort.—The following is a list:—

The Leicester Infirmary.
The Provident Dispensary and Hospital.
The People's Dispensary.
The Leicester Institution for diseases of the skin.
The Homœopathic Hospital.
The Friendly Societies, e.g., Foresters, etc.
The Medical Aid Association.
The Doctor's Clubs.
The Surgical Aid Society.
The Saturday Hospital Fund.
The Charity Organisation Society.

The following may be said to be of some indirect assistance to the sick poor: the Orphanage, the Refuge, the Trinity Hospital, the District Nursing Branch of the Institution of Trained Nurses.

I do not propose to deal in detail with the above list; I shall only take those with which I have had to deal personally; as to the others I have tried to give the sources from which I have obtained information, or from whom information can be obtained.

4. The Leicester Infirmary, a general hospital, consisting of about 200 beds, deals with cases from the town and county. Maternity cases, a few chronic diseases, such as insanity, epilepsy and advanced phthisis are not admissible. No charge is made, as it is supposed that the patient is one who should properly receive the gratuitous benefits of the Institution. Admission for treatment is by letters of recommendation. Cases of casualties and emergencies are attended to at any time, but if further attention is required a letter of recommendation has to be brought. I may add that many cases are admitted as in-patients without in-patient letters of recommendation, though they are supposed to obtain them afterwards.

5. The letters of recommendation are obtained from subscribers. It is unnecessary to give any list of subscribers; roughly, it consists of private individuals, subscriptions from places of worship, from manufacturers, from the Saturday Hospital Fund, from workpeople in the factories who usually contribute 1d. a week above 10s., and ½d. under. The source of income from the workpeople has greatly increased of late, and now amounts to some thousands a year (£7,000 in 1906). The reason I have dealt with this point is to show that there is no inherent difficulty for persons to obtain letters of recommendation: for the majority of workpeople, men and women, there should be none, for others the various charitable agencies such as the places of worship and the Charity Organisation Society afford a means of obtaining them.

6. For purposes of description the work of the infirmary may be divided into the casualty, the out-patient, and in-patient departments. The following figures, taken from the report for the year 1906, have been kindly given me by Mr. Harry Johnson, the house governor and secretary, and show the amount of work done:—

In-patients:
Adults	2,402
Children	548
Total	2,950

Out-patients:
New Cases	10,201
Old Cases	29,793
Total Attendances	39,994

Casualty:
New Cases	13,836

7. The work of the infirmary has increased very much in the last ten years, the increase being most noticeable in the casualty and out-patient departments. Although the out-patient department has decreased in the last two years, there has been no marked change in the number of in-patients; this is due to the beds being used to their maximum extent. Recently it was stated that there were as many as eighty patients waiting for admission.

8. As to the class of patients, I cannot do better than give my experience as out-patient physician during the last eight years:—

(a) The large majority of out-patients I see are people who are at work, or whose near relatives are at work in the many factories in the town. A great many are women, the majority working in the shoe and hosiery trades. Of the utterly destitute class I see but few. I think this may be considered typical of the whole out-patient department.

(b) The class of in-patients is very similar to that of the out-patients. The majority are engaged in the factories; a few belong to what may be called the best artisan class. I would like to point out that although some are able to pay for medical attendance, yet when it comes to a question of operation or an illness which compels them to be laid up for some considerable time, then their resources would be at an end and they would be unduly crippled.

9. It is not an easy matter to indicate what are the causes for their seeking assistance at the infirmary. Further on in this statement I have given figures illustrating overlapping, and one indication that I think can be fairly drawn is that at the infirmary they obtain more skilled attention and treatment. Again the large number of operations performed indicate that patients apply where they consider they can obtain greater operative skill, better nursing, and adequate appliances.

10. There is no doubt that patients who can afford to pay for medical advice do at times make use of the benefits of the institution. The secretary and house governor, or his assistant, enquires into the status of patients, and whenever possible, abuse of this nature is checked.

11. By the rules of the Leicester Infirmary the honorary medical staff is debarred from contract-practice, and I have little more than hearsay knowledge of many of the following dispensaries, clubs, etc. I have tried to indicate from whence my information has been obtained, or from whom it is to be obtained.

12. The Provident Dispensary and Hospital.—This is dealt with in the statements of other persons to the Commission.

13. The People's Dispensary.—President, Mr. Bryan, Leicester. Numbers 8,000–9,000. Composed of servants, working classes and their families. Subscription, 1d. a week for each individual, but in cases of a family of more than three persons, the children being under fourteen years, the amount is 3½d. per week.

Fourteen medical men are attached who live in different parts of the town. Medicine obtained from chemists in different parts of the town.

14. The Leicester Institute for Diseases of the Skin.—Registered under the Friendly Societies Act. This society is established to provide for the benevolent or charitable purpose of providing medical treatment of skin diseases for poor persons without payment, and may provide it for other persons with payment, and on such terms as the committee may from time to time determine.

Extract from Report for 1905 :—

New patients, 665, viz.—

Free patients	-	-	-	-	512
Paying patients	-	-	-	-	143
Ineligible patients	-	-	-	-	10
Total	-	-	-	-	665

Patients are received by recommendation and by payment if otherwise eligible, but no person able to pay the recognised fee to a physician or surgeon will be eligible for treatment. Great care is exercised to prevent ineligible persons from becoming patients, and in doubtful cases the matter is referred to the Charity Organisation Society for investigation.

Proper books are kept in which details as to the work wages, etc., of the patient are recorded.

The patients are mainly drawn from the town of Leicester, but a fair proportion come from the country districts. The class of patients are factory hands, the majority being drawn from the shoe trade.

The medical officer, whose post is an honorary one, is Mr. Bremner, 92, London Road, to whom I am indebted for information about this society.

15. The Homeopathic Hospital.—Alderman G. Clifton, London Road, Leicester, is one of the medical attendants.

16. The Friendly Societies ; Foresters, etc.—Councillor Hudson, Foresters' Institute, S. Nicholas Street.

17. The Medical Aid Association.—Of this I have been able to obtain but little information. I am told that it consists of "Oddfellows" to a large extent. Numbers about 4,500.

18. The Surgical Aid Society.—Honorary Secretary, 17, Belvoir Street.

19. The Saturday Hospital Fund.—Secretary, Mr. Wooley, 3, Welford Road.

20. The Charity Organisation Society.—Secretary, Mr. Hincks, 10, Highcross Street.

21. The extent to which the agencies mentioned above overlap or co-operate :—

As regards the Leicester Infirmary I cannot do better than give some figures, for which I am indebted to Mr. Harry Johnson, the house-governor and secretary. Enquiries were made among the out-patients only, as to whether they were in any clubs, etc.—

Week ending—

November 24th, 1906, of 226 cases, 75 in this heading.

December 1st,	"	"	206	"	57	"	"
" 8th,	"	"	186	"	53	"	"
" 15th,	"	"	163	"	35	"	"
			781		220

Again :

Week ending—

January 5th, 1907, of 168 cases, 39 in this heading.

" 12th,	"	"	237	"	46	"	"
" 19th,	"	"	229	"	58	"	"
" 26th,	"	"	239	"	64	"	"
			873		207

That is to say, that about 26 per cent. of patients attending in the out-patient department were able to receive some form of contract practice. Of this percentage the greater number were in the provident dispensary, then came medical clubs, then friendly societies, then parish cases, which were comparatively few.

32. As far as I can learn there is little overlapping between the dispensaries and the friendly societies. It is probable that a certain number of dispensary patients belong to the friendly societies for the purpose of obtaining sick financial benefit without asking for advice from the medical advisers of that branch of the friendly society to which they belong. I am told that there is some overlapping between parish cases and the clubs, but as far as I can learn it is not to any great extent.

23. As regards co-operation, there is not very much—

(a) The board of guardians contribute thirty guineas to the funds of the infirmary; this is for general benefits, inasmuch as a certain percentage of patients who are treated at the infirmary would otherwise go to the Poor Law authorities. As, however, the Poor Law infirmary does not deal to any extent with surgical cases those patients who require great surgical attention are transferred to the Leicester Infirmary.

(b) The boards of guardians of surrounding districts also subscribe for similar reasons.

(c) The friendly societies also subscribe to the funds of the infirmary.

(d) The small hospital attached to the provident dispensary admits patients, I believe, that are not necessarily members of the dispensary, but the number must be very small. The Surgical Aid Society, by supplying apparatus for patients, co-operates to this extent with the means of voluntary effort given above. The Charity Organisation Society, by giving letters of recommendation, etc., tends also to co-operate.

24. The best means of further co-operation would, I think, be the formation of a public medical service, embracing the various forms of contract medical practice. If this was worked on judicious lines it would be of great assistance to the poor, and would be of great benefit to doctors by limiting abuse of charity.

25. The possibility of handing over to one authority the whole work and duty of medical assistance to the poor opens up so many questions of which I have no real knowledge that I do not venture to discuss it.

26. I do not consider that in Leicester there is any insufficiency in the amount of medical assistance at present available for the poor. The account of the local operations already given tends to confirm my opinion in this matter. The quality is another matter, and it is very difficult to support one's opinion with facts. As regards medical qualification, the rules of the Leicester infirmary insist upon the honorary medical staff having high qualifications, and the members are debarred from contract practice.

27. The dispensaries and the friendly societies choose their own medical advisers so the question of qualification is in their own hands.

28. The relationship between doctor and patient is of a personal character. I have frequently heard doctors occupied in large contract practices complain of the stress of work being so great that, with regret, they find it impossible to give as much time to each individual as they would wish.

APPENDIX No. CLI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. AMOS SHERRIFF, MEMBER OF LEICESTER BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

I propose the following reforms in Poor Law and practice:—

1. As to Workhouse:—

(a) Old people should be classified, the highest class being those of the best record and character. The best class should have a larger scope of diet, and freedom to choose from the list, things not being weighed out as now. A variety of clothing should be on list, and old people allowed to choose from list. Abolish corduroy, and "pepper and salt"; abolish round hats. Other classes to be treated less freely than first class, but still more generously than now. A little pocket-money might be given to the best class.

(b) Sick: and convalescents, and infirm. Wider choice of food, and clothing. Convalescents should be free to go out any day for several hours.

(c) Casuals. Put them on farm colonies. On farms, have carpenters' shops, stone-masons', boot-repairers, etc. Better diet. Power to detain cases of the worst character.

(d) All children of habitual casuals to be immediately taken off the road and adopted by the Guardians. This being a national evil the State should bear the expense.

2. As to Children:—No child over two to see inside of workhouse. Have receiving home (we have one in Leicester). All children to go to "scattered homes" and be taught in ordinary schools. Use our present "cottage homes" for imbeciles and other defectives.

3. As to Out-relief:—Three shillings a head not enough. Supply more and better food from guardians' stores; also clothing and comforts.

4. As to Able-bodied Men:—Put them on land. Give guardians power to buy more than 50 acres; to unlimited extent. At the same time encourage them to find work outside.

5. Amalgamate the work of town councils and guardians, increasing the membership of the councils accordingly. The distress committee already point that way.

APPENDIX No. CLII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. T. SYDNEY SHORT, VISITING PHYSICIAN, POOR LAW INFIRMARY, ETC., BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I received my medical education at King's College Hospital, London, holding the appointments of House Physician and Registrar at the hospital, and Medical Censor at the College before leaving. In 1887 I was appointed Resident Medical and Surgical Officer to the Jaffray Hospital (near Birmingham), where I remained two years and was then appointed Resident Medical Officer to the General Hospital, Birmingham, and subsequently Assistant Physician in 1891. My election as full Honorary Physician took place in 1904.

2. In addition I hold the appointments of Consulting Physician to the General Dispensary, and Visiting Physician to the Workhouse Infirmary, Birmingham.

3. Qualifications.—Doctor of Medicine of the University of London, Member of the Royal College of Physicians, England, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, England, Licentiate of the Society of Apothecaries, England, Diploma in Public Health of the University of Cambridge.

Medical Assistance of the Poor.

4. There are two Poor Law medical officers, who see cases at their own homes and also (I believe) as out-patients at the parish offices. If the cases thus seen require indoor treatment and cannot be satisfactorily treated at home, they are sent as in-patients into the infirmary. Cases already in the workhouse requiring medical treatment are also sent into the infirmary. I am informed that cases of venereal diseases are treated in the workhouse, but as I do not visit the workhouse I have not seen these wards.

5. The workhouse infirmary is a series of buildings entirely separate from the workhouse, although situated on adjacent ground. There are three visiting physicians and one visiting surgeon attached to the infirmary.

6. The principal non-Poor Law institutions are:—

(1) The General Hospital with the suburban branch, the Jaffray Hospital.

(2) The Queen's Hospital.

I am informed that at this institution a charge of 1s. is made to out-patients, so that the really poor would be excluded from attending.

(3) The Women's Hospital.

(4) The Eye Hospital.

(5) The Ear and Throat Hospital.

(6) The Skin and Urinary.

(7) The Orthopædic.

(8) The Dental Hospital.

7. Any case referred from a general to a special hospital and vice-versa would receive adequate attention. Incurable cases, or cases which are not suitable for treatment in the wards of a general or special hospital can, in special circumstances, be transferred to the workhouse infirmary.

8. I do not know of any scheme that would enable the whole work and duty of medically assisting the poor to be carried out by one authority.

9. If the whole of the medical assistance to the poor were provided for out of the rates I am of opinion that the board of management should include amongst its members representatives of the medical men attached to the various institutions so governed.

10. No evidence has come to my notice that the health of the community suffers owing to insufficiency in the amount or quality of the medical assistance at present available for the poor.

Poor Law Administration.

11. The chief causes of pauperism are :—

(1) Want of thrift on the part of the working classes. I am strongly of opinion that if the working classes could be compelled to put by a little money, either by means of taxes or compulsory (not voluntary) saving, it would be greatly to their benefit. At present they are encouraged to spend all their wages and not to save.

(2) The inefficiency of the working classes generally. I am of opinion that many men are out of work because whatever work they have had to do they have done badly. They are either not sufficiently trained or else they have not been taught to do even the simplest jobs as well as their ability allows.

(3) The amount of money spent on beer instead of being devoted to the wants of the individual or put by for the future.

12. I am of opinion that the present practice of treating foul wounds, erysipelas, and suppurating cases in the infirmary, in the same block, nursed by the same nurses, as cases of measles, chicken-pox, diphtheria, and similar cases, is bad, and tends to produce ophthalmia, otorrhœa, septic diarrhœa and pneumonia. This opinion is based on thirteen years' experience as visiting physician to the infirmary.

APPENDIX No. CLIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. H. SIMPSON, MEMBER OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS, ASTON UNION, AND SECRETARY GAS WORKERS' AND GENERAL LABOURERS' SOCIETY.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I have been connected with the working-classes in the Aston Union for twenty-seven years; during the last twelve years I have been an official of the Gasworkers' and General Labourers' Society. I have represented Duddeston Ward, one of the poorest districts in the City of Birmingham, on the Aston Board of Guardians for nearly six years. I am also a member of the Birmingham Distress Committee.

2. The district embraced by the Aston Union is two-thirds within the City of Birmingham, which is mainly of an industrial character; also the Borough of Aston Manor itself is chiefly composed of a working-class population; whilst Erdington and Sutton Coldfield are residential districts. The rest of the union is agricultural.

3. I do not know of any special peculiarities obtaining in the administration of the Poor Law in the union, but I must say that it seems to be the desire of all parties here to make the lot of those committed to their care who have to go inside any of the institutions, as comfortable as possible—that is, those who cannot help themselves.

4. We have old married people's quarters for the aged, and cottage homes for the children. The latter, although in close proximity to the workhouse, could not be more pleasantly situated as regards healthy surroundings, etc.

5. For the infirmary we have a large staff of nurses, and two resident doctors.

6. On the question of outdoor relief I certainly prefer it before sending people into the house, not only because it is cheaper, but where it is possible to keep anyone out it is better than curtailing them of their liberty, which honest poor people feel very much.

7. The classes of applicants for relief are chiefly the aged and infirm, and widows with families. We have also single women with children, and the unemployables, such as people who are prematurely old, the imbeciles and epileptics.

8. The chief causes of pauperism, in my opinion, are low wages and irregular employment. There are thousands in this union who, if their supplies fail through any cause whatever, are within one week of the workhouse. Their small wages do not allow them to provide anything against sickness and out of work, which are always imminent.

9. Of the persons seeking election as guardians, the retired tradesmen appear to be in the majority, with a sprinkling of clergymen, professional men, labour men, and women.

10. The union is sub-divided, for the administration of relief, into five districts, with a relieving officer to each. The guardians form five Relief Committees to deal with applications, and meet periodically in the respective districts for that purpose.

11. It has almost become a rule now in granting out-door relief to widows to allow only 1s. and a 4-lb. loaf of bread for each child per week, with nothing for the widow herself, which, in my opinion, is not enough. For old people who can get about their allowance ranges from 2s. to 2s. 6d. and a loaf per week.

12. If there are any relatives who are liable according to law to contribute towards maintenance, they are called upon to do so, and are in many cases impoverished by so doing.

13. The following are some suggestions for reform, based on my experience as a guardian :—

(a) The law should be so amended that guardians should be compelled to give an adequate amount of relief to deserving cases instead of, as at present, giving the smallest amount possible.

(b) Some relief other than the workhouse should be allowed to be given to people temporarily out of employment through no fault of their own.

(c) Some limit should be placed on a man's income before he is compelled to contribute towards the maintenance of parents chargeable.

(d) The greatest sympathy also ought to be extended towards that class of people between the ages of forty and sixty, who have become too old to work, in respect that no one will employ them, and who, being able-bodied, are too young to be entitled to any relief as the law now stands.

(e) I am also strongly in favour of old-age pension being granted to all over sixty years of age.

APPENDIX No. CLIV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. THOMAS SMITH, MEMBER OF BOARD OF GUARDIANS FOR THE PARISH OF BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I have been a member of the board of guardians for the Parish of Birmingham for the past fifteen years, during which time I have served on the Outdoor Relief Committee, the workhouse management, and was chairman of same for four years. During my experience I must say that I cannot call to mind any case that required any alteration of the law.

2. Some of the guardians, I know, would advocate the giving of outdoor relief to the able-bodied in distress, but I have serious doubts as to the wisdom of such a step, as in my opinion the evil would far out-balance the good that may be accomplished.

3. Some six years ago we adopted classification at our workhouse, and there has been a marked improvement in the conduct and behaviour among the inmates, due, no doubt, to the strong desire to be thought worthy of being placed in the merit wards. In our out-relief department we have notices posted up informing all applicants for relief that they can see the Relief Committee, which, in my opinion, is right, as the onus of giving or refusing them rests with the guardians and not the relieving officers.

4. Outdoor relief without doubt should be granted to widows with a family, and to aged people who are capable of looking after themselves in a proper manner. The workhouse should only be offered to those who are unfit to rear children and to old people too infirm to help themselves.

5. The class of persons that apply for relief in our parish are too varied to specify.

6. Pauperism is largely caused by old age, intemperance, want of thrift, free trade, and ebb and flow of the labour market.

7. The class of persons seeking election as guardians leaves nothing to be desired, as proved by the gentlemen elected at our last three bye-elections.

8. We have had no difficulty whatever in dealing with all cases that have come before us.

APPENDIX No. CLV.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. SAMUEL FRANCIS MONTAGU STONE AS TO THE GENERAL CHARITIES OF THE BOROUGH OF LEICESTER AND TRINITY HOSPITAL.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. General Charities.—I am Clerk to the Trustees of the General Charities of Leicester.

2. The maximum number of trustees is nineteen and the minimum thirteen. At the present time there are seventeen trustees.

Amongst the charities are the following:—

John Poultney's.
William Ives'.
William Morton's.
Widow Ossiter's.
The Earl of Devonshire's.
The Countess of Devonshire's.
Hugh Botham's.
Bennett and Ward's.
John Stanley's.
John Norris's.

3. The income of each of the above-mentioned charities is divided amongst the trustees, who distribute it in small sums amongst the poor of the different parishes of the town of Leicester.

4. Anthony Acham's Charity.—The income of this charity is distributed by the trustees amongst the poor of the town of Leicester in the form of tickets for bread.

5. King Charles' Charity, commonly called the "Wood and Coal Money." The income of this charity is distributed amongst freemen of the borough of Leicester and freemen's widows. Advertisements are issued inviting applications to participate in the income. The number of applicants is generally between 600 and 700. The money is distributed by the trustees a few days before Christmas. Last Christmas each applicant received the sum of 1s. 6d.

6. Trinity Hospital.—I am also clerk to the master, assistants, chaplain and poor of the Hospital of the Holy Trinity.

7. This hospital was incorporated by letters patent dated March 3rd, 12 James I., and full particulars concerning the hospital are set out in the Charity Commissioners' Report dated June 30th, 1837.

8. At the present time the number of poor receiving the benefits of the hospital is 110, which is the maximum number fixed by the charter. The hospital has been recently rebuilt, and at the present time there are thirty-nine poor resident in the hospital, viz., fifteen men and twenty-four women. The remainder of the poor live in their own homes in various parts of the town.

9. The minimum age of entry is fixed by the charter at sixty, though I think that very few are appointed at that age; the age of the greater number on their appointment would be, I should say, about sixty-eight.

10. Each of the poor are paid the sum of 6s. per week; those poor who reside in the hospital receive coal, and those who reside outside the hospital receive an allowance in money for coal.

11. At the present time a scheme is under consideration for increasing the number of poor to 150, and in such scheme is contained a provision that no part of the income or endowments of the charity shall in any case be applied either directly or indirectly in aid of any rates for the relief of the poor and any of the poor of the hospital becoming chargeable to such rates, or becoming inmates of a workhouse shall cease to receive the benefits of the hospital.

12. The appointment to receive and partake of the benefits of the hospital as one of the poor therein is made by His Majesty under the hand of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

13. The mayor (who is the Master of the Hospital) and the chaplain in turn recommend to the Chancellor of the Duchy, on a vacancy occurring, some fit and proper person to fill the vacancy. This, however, is only an arrangement with the Duchy. Applications for appointment to receive and partake of the benefits of the hospital are made in writing to the mayor, and I am informed that it is his practice to keep a list of applicants and that at the termination of his period of office he hands this list to his successor. I believe there is a very considerable number of names on this list.

14. The charity is one which is much sought after, and I believe it does a great deal of good.

APPENDIX No. CLVI.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. T. C. THOMPSON, J.P., MEMBER OF THE NORTHAMPTON BOARD OF GUARDIANS AND RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL FOR SIXTEEN YEARS, AND CHAIRMAN OF THE RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL SINCE 1895-96.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. In Northampton the chief industry is boot and shoe-making carried on in factories. The recent introduction of machinery for each process, and the men working on the team system with the minimum wage as per fixed scale for each employee, compels the employers to keep young, quick, and capable men only. Consequently middle-aged men, and even of forty or forty-five years of age, are often thrown out, and find it very difficult and often impossible to get another similar situation.

2. No further special peculiarities or experiments in Poor Law administration have been tried. In 1894 and 1895 the unemployed were relieved by the board and some of the applicants remained on the relief list long afterwards, owing to illness, incapacity, or inability to make the best of their resources, or to keep either a situation or money when they had it.

3. In 1901 and 1902 the board decided to remove the children from the workhouse, and carefully considered the question of building cottage homes very near to but outside the town, but the cost of the land and the building was much too costly, and was abandoned in favour of scattered homes. The board have purchased six houses in different parts of the town, where the children are now satisfactorily placed.

4. I am strongly in favour of outdoor relief for the respectable and deserving of all ages, and of indoor for the idle, the dissolute, and the vicious who, by their lawlessness and lack of self-control, bring and breed trouble to themselves and others.

5. The classes of persons applying for relief are chiefly the aged, infirm and incapable.

6. Pauperism is largely the result of drink, causing unhappiness in the home, and then misery and poverty. Example :—

Widow, four children. Eldest boy, thirty-one, now in the union infirmary, an imbecile. Daughter, weak, bad eyes for years, and been sent to the Ophthalmic Hospital and partly recovered and now in service. Son living at home, carter, but drinks. Son, aged ten, at school. Father, dead some years, was a notorious drinker, constantly before the magistrates and fined. Was an invalid the last seven or eight years, and he, or his wife and family, on outdoor relief list for sixteen or seventeen years.

7. I estimate this one case has cost from £250 to £300, and is, in my opinion, due to the drinking habits of the father, though to any one not knowing the history it would not be so classed. I believe this is typical of many.

8. Unskilled labour coming into the town from villages and inability to find constant employment, drifts into and swells the ranks of the unemployed.

9. In the country districts nearly all are tenant farmers, who attend the meetings of the rural district council on Wednesday, and cannot and do not attend the weekly Tuesday meetings of the guardians. Too much to expect. In large towns having country parishes the two offices should be divided.

10. In the county borough, of the twenty-three members four are retired gentlemen who attend regularly to their duties; thirteen are tradesmen in business, and only five or six attend at all regularly and the remainder scarcely at all; and seven publicans, one of whom is chairman and attends well, and one who attends regularly and the remaining five more or less occasionally.

11. For the purposes of relief the union is divided into four relief districts; applications dealt with fortnightly by two committees, each taking two districts. Owing to the large number of cases and frequently small attendance of guardians, the differing views of the two committees, and often of the committees at different times, the cases are irregularly dealt with, and the recipients know it.

12. Applications refused by No. 1 committee after a short interval are again made before No. 2 committee and granted. Cases struck off by one re-instated by the other. Three years ago there were fourteen new members and this and no settled policy, except one of somewhat indiscriminate relief, led in 1904 to a large increase in amount expended, in addition to a huge loss on the labour yard in 1904-5 and 1905-6. With extended experience and increased vigilance on the part of some of the new and old members and increased vigilance and the continued closing of the labour yard, since July, 1906, the expenditure has been checked with beneficial results.

13. Details of relief expenditure :—

Year.	In-maintenance.	Expended on Out-relief.
1901	4,308	13,682
1904	4,621	16,750
1905	5,599	19,008
1906	5,915	19,253
	Labour Yard.
1904	—	97
1905	—	2,647
1906	—	3,244, now closed.

14. The following reforms in the law or practice were suggested by my experience :—

(a) Epileptics only should not be sent to lunatic asylums.

(b) Further control over the feeble-minded and incapable, women with illegitimate children, and habitual tramps.

(c) Persons bona fide in search of work should be differently dealt with on producing their credentials.

(d) Classification of inmates.

(e) The present laws and orders of the Local Government Board be reduced and simplified and made intelligible to ordinary minds.

(f) Pensions and payments to reservists be more frequently paid.

(g) More severe treatment to men in the prime of life, who so often squander their means (frequently their pensions) recklessly, and though having no one dependent upon them claim the shelter and hospitality of the workhouse, and often stay there a long time.

APPENDIX No. CLVII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. F. TILLYARD, BARRISTER, LECTURER IN COMMERCIAL LAW AT THE UNIVERSITY OF BIRMINGHAM, ORGANISING SECRETARY, CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY, ETC., BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. For many years I have been interested in social questions. Some eighteen years ago I started the work of a "Poor Man's Lawyer" at the Mansfield House University Settlement in Canning Town, East London, and am the author of the pamphlet on "Legal Difficulties of the Poor," issued by the National Union of Women Workers. I was the Organiser and first Honorary Secretary of the Neighbour Guilds Association in Sheffield—an association doing settlement work in two of the poorest districts in that city. For two years and a half I have been Organising Secretary to the Birmingham Charity Organisation Society, and during the winter of 1904-5 was one of the Secretaries of the Lord Mayor's Relief Fund here. An article by me on a comparison of that fund with two earlier Birmingham funds appeared in the Economic Journal for December, 1905.

THE SPECIAL LOCAL PROBLEM.

2. I should be glad to be allowed to preface my observations by some remarks on the special local problem. There is not in Birmingham the general spirit of independence, either in thought or action, which is so characteristic of towns in the North of England and some parts of the Midlands. For evidence of this I would point to:—

- (1) The comparative weakness of the co-operative movement.
- (2) The comparative smallness of the provident dispensaries.
- (3) The large number of children who have taken out badges for street trading.
- (4) The prevalence of the lodger in working-class homes.
- (5) The absence of the quality of "house-pride."
- (6) The small popular interest in local government.

Under some of these headings I can furnish direct evidence; others are more of the nature of impressions:—

- (1) There is only one Co-operative Distributive Society in Birmingham:—

—	Member-ship.	Share Capital.	Sale of Goods per Annum.
Birmingham -	9,000	£ s. d. 6 0 0 per member.	£ s. d. 16 0 0 per member.
Sheffield -	25,000 (in two Societies)	{ 7 0 0 9 10 0	{ 22 0 0 30 0 0
Barnsley -	-	22 0 0	40 0 0

The Birmingham Society seems to be soundly conducted.

- (2) There are three provident dispensaries in Birmingham, all under the Sands Cox Trust, but administered by separate and independent committees:—

Locality.	Fees for Adults.	Membership.
		Adults.	Children.
Balsall Heath -	5d. per month	1,300	270
Hockley -	ditto	2,000
Nechells -	4d. per month	1,100

N.B.—These figures include children.

The total for Birmingham is under 5,000. In Leicester and district there are some 20,000 members.

(3) Street trading:—

Town.	Total Licenses.	Girls.	Children under 14.
Birmingham (granted during year) -	1,271	89	1,196
Birmingham (at end of year) -	2,390	212	1,787
Liverpool (granted during year) -	354	53	290
Liverpool (at end of year) -	663	110	424

[The figures for Birmingham are now shewing considerable decreases.]

- (4) Lodgers. The custom of sharing houses (except in the case of relations) is not prevalent in Birmingham, but the letting off of a room, or the taking in of a lodger, who has the use of the kitchen, is quite common.

- (5) House pride. This is an impression which I have confirmed from the experience of others who have lived in Yorkshire.

- (6) Absence of interest in local government. I would refer to the votes at election times and the meagreness of the reports of council and guardians meetings in the Press. Fortunately Birmingham has been served for many years by a considerable number of its eminent citizens.

3. It is not easy to say how far this lack of independence is natural to the local type of character, and how far it is the result of demoralisation produced by circumstances. The practical point for the administrator of relief, either public or private, is that the less intelligent part of the population in Birmingham is particularly liable to demoralisation in this direction. I am glad to think that a considerable and very important section of the working classes in this city have lifted themselves above the need for help, and therefore out of the range of this possible harm. In my article in the Economic Journal I advanced the conclusion that the skilled artisans and respectable workmen generally are more provident, either through an extension of the mutual insurance against being out of work afforded by trade societies, or through increased private savings, than was the case twenty years ago; while on the other hand many unskilled labourers, and the less respectable workmen, whether skilled or unskilled, are less provident and less independent than they were twenty years ago.

4. There is in Birmingham one really noteworthy example of self-help on a large scale by the working classes—the convalescent homes established and maintained out of the Hospital Saturday Fund. At all the larger works in the district a deduction of 1d. per week (½d. for women) is made from wages for this fund. This realises about £16,000 net per annum, about £6,000 of which goes to support convalescent homes for men and women near Llandudno, and a convalescent home for children near Birmingham. The balance goes to the local hospitals. A certain number of consumptive and rheumatic cases are sent to other places for special treatment, and surgical instruments are also supplied at cost price, and in some cases below cost price. The deduction, though quasi compulsory, could not be made over any length of time without the favour of a large majority of the workpeople. The casual labourer, the man who does not keep his place for any length of time, and the man in small workshops, etc. are necessarily outside the scheme. This tends to emphasise the gulf between the better class and the lower class workman, to which attention has already been drawn.

CHARITIES AND VOLUNTARY EFFORT.

5. Appended to this statement is a printed list of the charities and charitable institutions and societies of Birmingham and district, compiled by me for the Charity Organisation Society in April, 1905. The most important of these are the medical charities.

6. Out-Patients.—The system of registration fees is in force at the Queen's, Children's and Women's Hospitals.

The ticket system is in force at the General, Eye, Ear and Throat, Orthopaedic and Dental Hospitals, and at the General Dispensary. The tickets most eagerly sought after are the dispensary notes, for at the dispensaries grants of milk and cod liver oil are made in suitable cases, and patients, when seriously ill, are visited in their own homes. A great many complaints are made that the people who most deserve free treatment find it hardest to get tickets. In some of the works a deduction of 2d. per week from wages is often made (1d. for Hospital Saturday Fund, and 1d. for hospitals), and the hospital contribution is distributed and the notes received in return are available for the work-people of the firm. Many Mothers' Meetings subscribe for dispensary tickets, and sell them to members at 2s. each. As a guinea subscription only confers eight tickets, 5s. out of every guinea so spent has to be provided as charity. People who cannot get tickets from the works, or a meeting, beg for them. There is a great deal of this begging.

7. In-patients.—Tickets for in-patient treatment are very hard to get. The general hospital admits many urgent cases without ticket. Complaints of the injustice of the ticket system are often met with.

8. The general effect of the medical charities is to discourage self-help as to medical provision. The provident dispensaries find it difficult to compete with this free provision of medical attendance, and some friendly societies and many sick clubs do not provide a club doctor.

9. Convalescent Homes.—Through the Hospital Saturday Fund there is a good provision of convalescent homes on sound lines. The patients have to find their own fare (10s.), and charitable convalescent work is practically limited to those for whom the Hospital Saturday Fund homes are not available, and those who need some help with the provision of the fare. There is no sanatorium for consumptives either for Birmingham or Warwickshire.

[The Birmingham Corporation has now acquired an estate which is being adapted for sanatorium purposes.]

10. Almshouses.—There are a considerable number of places for old people, mostly women, but in almost every case an income of 3s. or more has to be provided by the inmate or her friends. Admission is by selection, and not by vote.

11. Charity Schools and Orphanages.—From the age of nine years and upwards the supply of places is just about equal to the demand. It is usual for the children to go home in the holidays, the home feeling is generally maintained, and the training excellent. For the problem of the younger children see the remarks below on Poor Law methods.

12. Children's Special Charities.—There is in Birmingham a large and excellently organised Crippled Children's Union. The Children's Country Holiday Society does good work, uses discrimination, and enforces part payment from parents.

13. The Police-aided Association for Clothing Destitute Children clothes some 1,600 children each year.

14. Charity and out-relief.—There is a great difference in Birmingham in the feeding of the poor as to out-relief, and as to going into the workhouse and even into the infirmary. Nearly every one shrinks from "the House" even when a loss of self-respect does not seem to be a necessary consequence. Thus it is almost impossible to persuade a married woman, whose husband is out of work, to go into the infirmary for her confinement, for this reason—that babies born in the infirmary are under a stigma.

15. Out-relief is on a different footing. It is strictly administered in Birmingham, and is not run after, but in cases of sickness and old age it is accepted without compunction. The recipients of well-dispensed private charity are undoubtedly more grateful, are more sensitive about receiving help longer than may be really necessary, and in some cases are eager to replace the help given. But many of the recipients of private charity and out-relief are not capable of drawing distinctions so long as they get what they want.

16. The criticisms of Poor Law methods in the Birmingham Union which I should like to offer are:—

(a) The absence of classification in out-relief.

(b) The inadequacy of the scale of out-relief, especially in the case of children; and

(c) The officialism and inelasticity of the system.

(a) The amount of out-relief varies from case to case, but is apparently based on no particular principle, and depends to some extent on the mood of the Committee at each sitting. If each applicant was classified first, and then relief given according to the class in which he was placed, this objection would be obviated. In Sheffield a classification in four classes has been in force for some years.

(b) The scale for the aged and infirm varies from 2s. to 3s. 6d. for one old person, and from 3s. 6d. to 6s. 6d. for an aged couple. The usual payment for a child is 1s. and a loaf. In Sheffield the maximum in each class for old people is 5s., 4s., 3s., and 2s. 6d., and the children's allowance is 2s. The Birmingham guardians do not pretend that they are paying the whole cost of maintenance. In cases of sickness the Birmingham working rule is to consider that 10s. is a maximum for a family, as very few working people assure a sickness payment in excess of that sum. Inadequacy is not a necessary concomitant of a strict administration of out-relief. One effect in Birmingham is that widows with children who have actually been in the House are better off than those who have had out-relief without going in, though the latter are the superior cases. If the mother is in the House, the children are sent to excellent cottage homes at Marston Green. When the mother discharges herself she can leave the children there, and remove them one by one as and when she can provide for them at home. Meanwhile the guardians wholly support the children left at Marston Green. But the guardians will not as a rule take children to the homes where the mother is on out-relief, and only give the mother an allowance sufficient for their partial support. There are three alternatives—either the mother is driven into the House, or the children are insufficiently nourished at home, or private charity intervenes and sends some of the children to orphanages.

(c) The officialism and inelasticity of the present system are for the most part independent of locality. A large part of the city is in Aston Union, and a small part in King's Norton Union. The three unions are co-operating in starting an epileptic colony, at the instance, I believe, of the King's Norton Union.

17. There is no effective co-operation between the guardians and private charity, though the Charity Organisation Society sends weekly lists of cases to the boards of guardians, and these are returned with short notes as to the persons known to the relieving officers. There is an impression that persons sent to the relieving officers with notes of introduction either from the officials of societies or from individuals meet with an especially discouraging reception on the ground that such applicants are being encouraged to become paupers. I gather from a recent conversation with a chief official that this is not intentional. It should be possible for private charity to furnish visitors and even almoners for persons on permanent out-relief. In the case of widows some experiment on these lines was started in Liverpool a few years back. Anything that could be done for the family over and beyond the mere payment of the allowance would then be organised by the visitor and private charity.

18. At the present moment private charity in Birmingham has neither the resources nor the experienced workers necessary for taking over out-relief. Very few people care to think out the ultimate effect of what is done in the name of charity. Some people are actively hostile to adequate discrimination, while others accept the principle but take no effective measures to secure its adoption in practice. The pressing problem in Birmingham is to utilise existing private charities and charity with discrimination. If this were done there would be a smaller number of persons who would have to apply for out-relief. But private charity must be so organised as to absorb gradually the present cases of out-relief; it would be dangerous to thrust out-relief cases upon it en bloc.

FRIENDLY CO-OPERATIVE AND OTHER SELF-HELP SOCIETIES.

19. I regret that pressure of other work makes it impossible for me to give any but very scant particulars as to the operations of friendly, co-operative and other self-help societies.

20. Some account of the local co-operative movement, and the provident dispensaries and the Hospital Saturday Fund has already been given. The chief friendly societies working in Birmingham are mentioned in the "Look Ahead" paper prepared by me two years ago, a copy of which is enclosed. Of these the chief local society is the Birmingham Provident Institution, with a membership of about 2,800. The Union Provident Sick Society has some 1,200 members. The Cannon Street Society a few years ago had over 5,000 members, but has a heavy deficiency. There are a very large number of dividing and sharing-out societies in Birmingham, some of which are registered, and some unregistered. They are for the most part organised by publichouses, in works (on a voluntary basis), and by most of the religious bodies.

21. Friendly Societies and their Competitors.—The benefits of a friendly society are practically four in number, all of which are independent of each other: (1) sick pay; (2) funeral allowance; (3) medical attendance and (4) old age pay. Sick pay is of the very essence of its objects. The insurance companies provide funeral allowance, and the hospitals provide medical attendance, in competition with friendly societies and without serious harm to them. The provision of old age pay from some other source would not necessarily cripple them.

22. Two points want to be borne in mind: (1) that the sick pay is the real attractive force, and (2) that many working people are not members of friendly societies from sheer inability to pay the contributions. A man with a young family, who is only earning 18s. a week, has no margin for sick pay contributions. The man who can and does afford to belong to a good friendly society is in one class and in practice independent of charity, the man who cannot or will not afford to belong to a good friendly society is in another class, and is only too prone, when any misfortune occurs, to look to charity. To some extent the "quarter sick pay for rest of life" given by many societies is a pension, and it would no doubt be possible to provide pensions on a more direct basis, but I do not think their provision would be an attractive force, and the higher contributions would tend to make the friendly society man even more of a special class than he is to-day.

23. Free medical State relief, voluntary hospitals, and a State system of old age pensions only touch the "extras" of friendly society work, and, so far as they would tend to confine the operations of Friendly Societies to sick pay and funeral allowance, would lower the rate of contributions, and possibly extend their membership. Freely-given Poor Law out-relief in cases of sickness would be a serious rivalry to sick pay, and would undoubtedly do much injury to friendly societies. I do not mean to imply that because a measure might not seriously injure the friendly societies there is therefore no harm in it.

24. The ticket system enables friendly societies to get a return for their subscriptions to hospitals, but a much more effective co-operation could be carried out if the ticket system were abolished.

25. Outdoor Relief and Friendly Societies Act.—I have only come across two cases where persons were in receipt of both friendly society "quarter pay" and parish relief. In both cases (in different unions) the amount allowed was 2s. 6d. a week, which is nearer the minimum than the maximum payment. We may take it, therefore, that the guardians did not pay strict attention to the directions of the Act. If my contention as to the position of the friendly society man is correct, the effect of the Act must be necessarily very small.

26. I have no means of judging whether friendly and thrift societies are progressing now as rapidly as they did ten years ago. My impression is that poverty is decreasing in extent, but getting worse in quality.

APPENDIX No. CLVIII.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY MR. THOMAS W. TROUGHT, B.A., MEMBER OF THE BIRMINGHAM CITY COUNCIL DISTRESS COMMITTEE, AND AN HON. SECRETARY OF THE CITY OF BIRMINGHAM AID SOCIETY, HEAD MASTER CAMDEN STREET COUNCIL SCHOOL, BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. Qualifications:—

(a) Honorary Secretary, and subsequently Chairman, of the West Birmingham Relief Fund. During the time I held office I was invited to help in drafting the rules of:—

- A. The North Birmingham Relief Fund.
- B. The Edgbaston Divisional Relief Society.
- C. St. Martin's Ward Mutual Aid Society.
- D. The Smethwick Aid Society.

(b) Member of the Birmingham City Council Distress Committee (Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905), and a member of the Applications Subcommittee.

(c) An Honorary Secretary of the City of Birmingham Aid Society.

(d) Formerly Honorary Treasurer of the Children's Charities, and a member of the committees of several philanthropic societies.

(e) Author of the pamphlet "The City of Birmingham Aid Society. A Retrospect." (Proof* herewith partly corrected.)

2. I have had the privilege of seeing Sir Hallelwell Rogers' statement under the heading "Charities and Voluntary Effort," and after most earnest consideration I concur in the views he has expressed. Since then it has occurred to me that the extension of municipal hospital accommodation is advisable, particularly in the direction of improved facilities for dealing with consumption.

3. It is a general experience on the part of charitable societies that the recipients are in neither sick nor benefit societies. This seems to indicate that the people who are most in need of old-age pensions would be omitted from the benefit of such pensions if the pensions were provided through friendly societies. Those workers whose trades or callings are not organised on trades-union lines present a serious obstacle to the provision of old-age pensions through friendly societies.

4. Furthermore, there is much overlapping amongst friendly societies, e.g., you find men who are members of their trade sick and benefit society, and in addition they are members of a general society like the Hearts of Oak, etc.

5. The Right Hon. Sir Charles Booth's recent book, "The Aged Poor: A Proposal," seems to offer the most hopeful promise of solution so far as my experience and studies lead me to believe.

The Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905.

6. Mr. Crosskey, who is a colleague on the Distress Committee, and co-hon.-secretary of the City of Birmingham Aid Society, and I have jointly drawn up some notes on this question which he has forwarded to you.

7. I should like to supplement the statement as follows :

(a) The financial arrangements under this Act require revision, by removing the restrictions which prevent the contribution from the rates being used to provide work or to contribute towards the provision of work for the unemployed.

(b) The Act should be made compulsory, and all the labour bureaux linked.

(c) It is regrettable that employers make so little use of the labour bureaux for obtaining employees.

(d) It is a serious state of affairs to find that so high a percentage of the people who register under the Act belongs to the "unskilled" class.

(e) The Distress Committees have the power to appoint people to act on their behalf as agents. This is a useful provision, having regard to the desirability of co-operation with other societies, and one which might with advantage be extended to the Poor Law Administration.

(f) No single "remedy" or "palliative" for unemployment is sufficient. Most of those generally advocated are useful to meet individual phases of the question, e.g., Farm colonies may be useful educationally as an avenue back to the land in selected cases, or even as a corrective; but alone such colonies cannot do away with unemployment. It is by the cumulative effect of these remedies and palliatives that the partial removal of unemployment may be effected.

APPENDIX No. CLIX.

STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE BY DR. JOSEPH ENSOR TROUT, GUARDIAN, CHAIRMAN OF WORKHOUSE MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE, CHAIRMAN OF CENTRAL OUTDOOR RELIEF AND DISPENSARY COMMITTEE, BIRMINGHAM.

PROVINCIAL URBAN CENTRES—MIDLANDS.

1. I am a general practitioner in one of the poorest districts of the city of Birmingham, and so come in contact with people of all classes. I have been a guardian for ten years, and have held the position of chairman of the Workhouse Management Committee; chairman of the Central Out-Door Relief and Dispensary Committee, and have had to refuse the chairmanship nearly every year of my own relief committee.

2. I am not aware of any provision being made by the sanitary authority for assisting the poor with medicine. I do know they have a staff of Health Visitors, both male and female, who go round to the smaller class of house and try to educate the people in keeping their homes clean, and also to look after their children. The sanitary authority constitutes the Health Committee, and is appointed by the Town Council.

3. This committee, with the sanction, of course, of the Town Council, supply a number of fever hospitals for infectious cases.

4. Coming to the treatment of the poor under the Poor Laws, I may say that the Birmingham guardians have a very large infirmary capable of accommodating from 1,100 to 1,200 patients. They have four visiting medical officers, and four resident medical officers, and a large staff of nurses. At the workhouse, where the aged, bed-ridden, able-bodied and specific cases are located, they have a resident doctor to look after these cases.

5. Dealing with the outdoor poor the guardians have two medical men who give their whole time to the work.

Medicine is supplied direct to the poor from the parish offices, there being a properly qualified dispenser to see to this portion of the duties.

6. With reference to the hospitals there is no doubt that the out-patient departments of the same are greatly abused, and especially the Birmingham General Dispensary. A person attending a Bible Class or P.S.A., on payment of 3d. or 1d. per month can obtain a subscriber's ticket entitling him to six weeks' continuous medical advice, attendance, and medicine, and also extras in the shape of food, notwithstanding that the person may be in full work, and the recipient of a wage up to £6 per week.

7. With regard to the question of handing over to one authority the whole work and duty of medical assistance to the poor, I am afraid that such an arrangement would not work satisfactorily.

8. I am of opinion that the health of the community has not in the least suffered owing to insufficiency in the amount or quality of the medical assistance at present available.

9. Dealing with "Medical Clubs" I would like to state that it is my private opinion that the clubs are a failure, both for the patients and for the medical men. The public should be educated to join societies such as the Foresters, our great friendly societies, instead of the "slate clubs" held at public houses, which are liable to be dissolved at any moment.
